"Mr. Moody is generally fearless in the utterance of his convictions. An illustration of this may be given. In one of his Bible readings in this city his subject was 'Walking with God'. He read and explained several passages relating to this subject. Turning to 2 Cor. 6:14, he read, 'Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.' 'Now,' he said, 'some of you may be hit by what I have to say on this text. But I pray God to help me to tell you the truth.' 'Amen,' 'amen,' came from several quarters in the audience. 'Some of you that are saying 'amen' may get hit,' said Moody. Then reading the passage again, 'Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers,' his first remark was, as nearly as we can remember, 'Some of you would give up your connections with secret societies if you would obey that text. Believers and unbelievers are together in these, and Christians are thus unequally yoked.'"

IN THE HIPPODROME, NEW YORK.

Mr. Moody has made a record against the anti-Christ of the lodge of which no honest Christian man need be ashamed. In Brooklyn he bore testimony that the assumed benevolence of the lodge cannot be compared with the exercise of the genuine virtue by the church. In Philadelphia he explained the Word of God to be against the lodge alliance, and in the crowded Hippodrome in New York he repeats this exposition, and that his testimony is not heard alone before the public audience. In this good work Mr. Moody literally follows the Word, who for us "made himself of no reputation". For a popular evangelist of Mr. Moody's experience to stand for this truth before the whole Christian world, is an act of moral courage only to be looked for in one led by the Spirit. The New York Witness thus reports his remarks on Wednesday, April 5th:

"Now look at 2 Thessalonians 3:6: 'Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly and not after the tradition which ye received of us;' and 2 Corinthians 6:14: 'Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness? Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you.' Now if this is not a very clear language, that if we are going to keep company with God we have got to be separated from the world, I don't know what is. I don't know but that it would be a good thing to stop preaching the Gospel and preach separation. This idea that Christians have got to be mixed up with ungodly men, is all contrary to the Word of God. Oh! that some prophet would be raised up that would cry separation until we get the church of God separated from the world! 'Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.' Some say that it is matrimony. When I was in Philadelphia I spoke upon the text, and after the sermon a minister came down and said he agreed in almost all I said, 'but I don't think,' said he 'that it meant secret societies.' 'Do you belong to one?' I said. He said yes. You see people will not admit that a text applies to themselves. I think the thing, however, is very plain. If I am yoked up with an ungodly man how is God going to walk with me? How are we going to walk together except we be agreed? Mr. Moody then proceeded to show that in business and matrimony we should be united with Christians, and in a general way urged upon all Christians the necessity of not conforming to this world, but keep constantly looking to Jesus.

IN CHICAGO AT A CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

Is it consistent with a deep state of spirituality to unite with secret societies and take their oaths?

ANSWER BY MR. MOODY.—Of course every man must do as he pleases. I can't speak for others, but I could not belong to a secret society. Christ said, "In secret have I said nothing;" and Paul says, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." I would not like to be yoked up with unbelievers in anything. I don't see how a Christian man can yoke himself in partnership with an unconverted man. I know a Christian who is in difficulty now. He formed a partnership with two unconverted men, and they have done something which will compromise him—break him—or make him do an infamous thing. Separate yourselves from the world and things of the world. God wants his people separate. They will have ten thousand times more influence when separate from the world. It is separation, not compromise, that we want. The cry ought to be raised all over this Western country, "SEPARATION, SEPARATION!" But people will say, If you take that stand—lift yourselves so high—a great many of these men will leave the church. Never mind. If we should lose some church members we shall gain many that are better men. Hundreds will come in and take their places. There should be no compromise. Some try to control the pulpits on this subject. They say, "He don't preach according to our ideas. We don't want him." May God, in his love, deliver us from the many difficulties we have to contend against.

—Among the events of the past week was the removal of the West Side Department of the Young Men's Christian Association from its rented quarters at the southwest corner of West Madison and Paulina streets, to its own new and elegant edifice, recently bought for about $50,000, at 542 West Monroe street, near Ashland avenue. The location is retired and beautiful in its surroundings, and yet on the edge of a lively business district. Much money has been expended in fitting up the "new home" with all the conveniences and appliances of the Association, and "the boys" are consequently very well pleased to find their earnest efforts to secure suitable and permanent headquarters in the largest division of the city so amply repaid. They are certainly to be congratulated on their success.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The college girl—Cremation—Mrs. Ormiston Chant—An old-school divine—The Endowment orders—Some good advice for reformers.

This is the season when the college girl is in her glory; but I wonder, after all, if she is half as happy, even with all her paths made straight before her, and admiring friends and generous critics to applaud her as she steps forward in her dainty graduation gown to read her valedictory or her "Commencement poem," as the young woman of forty years ago who had to make her own paths and brave ridicule and misunderstanding as the price of choosing her own career on an equal plane with her brother? She had the joy of a moral conqueror; and all the laurels worn by her sister who, coming later into the field, carries all before her, are not to me equal in value to one leaf from that thorny garland worn by such brave, patient souls as Elizabeth Blackwell. Times have changed surely. Once it would have been as singular for a mother to cast the deciding vote as to what college to send her son as for a father to be willing to give his girls equal educational chances with his boys. Now the one is as common as the other. The prophecy that a college education would make women masculine, or coarse, or do anything else but develop all feminine attributes, fails to be verified by the "composite photograph." It is a sweet, thoughtful, earnest face that you see; the head has a certain steady poise of its own; the eyes, a little roguish withal, look with sweet fearlessness into the untrodden future. God bless our girl graduates, and make them worthy to wear the mantle of those who, with bleeding feet but such undaunted spirit, walked that way before them!

The son of the poet Longfellow, lately deceased, has been taken to Pennsylvania for cremation. There is a society in Massachusetts who believe in that method of disposing of the dead, and propose to erect a crematory in the vicinity of Forest Hills Cemetery; but it is safe to say that it will take centuries to make the method popular. Still cremation does not seem to me to be more opposed to the Christian ideal of sepulture than the various devices which are used to arrest decay, and keep the body from returning quickly and naturally to its native elements. There is nothing sad, nay, rather there is something joyous in the thought of the earthly particles which compose our worn-out tabernacles being transmuted into tree or flower by Nature's wondrous alchemy, and thus living over again in lower but yet beautiful forms.

To even look at a woodcut of Mrs. Ormiston Chant, who is now visiting Boston for the third time—the wonderful forehead, the dark, magnetic eyes, the general expression of refinement and purity—makes one understand the charm of those fair daughters of Old England, Rose Standish and Lady Arbella Johnson, whose memory is embalmed in our Puritan annals like some strange, rare perfume. That was such a lovely thing Cotton Mather said of the Lady Arbella that one almost forgives, in consideration of it, his quaint conceits and dark superstitions: "She took New England on her way to heaven." There were veins of poetry in those old Puritan divines which bubbled forth like springs of water from the sides of granite rocks. How often her sad eyes looked over the sea, and thought of the dear old Lincolnshire, among whose parks and woodlands she would roam nevermore.

One, now and then, chances to meet a face that might have stepped out of the frame of some old picture kept as a family heir-loom from colonial days. Rev. Edwin Dowse, of Sherburne, Mass., whose position as chaplain of the Massachusetts Legislature has caused him to be such a familiar figure at the State House, is one of whom this can be most appropriately said. He was born in the same village where he has been pastor for over fifty years. In figure, face and dress he is a divine of the old school,—of the times when a minister was nothing if not ministerial, and stood in no danger, like many of the popular ministers of to-day, of being mistaken for anything else; and well do I remember the awe with which as a little child I used to regard him on the frequent occasions when he "exchanged" with the pastor of our own village church. It is needless to say that this genuine representative of the old race of Puritan divines, now so nearly extinct, never had any fellowship with Masonry, and the writer of this tribute feels to-day, both as an inspiration and a benediction, his hearty Godspeed to her in the warfare against the secret works of darkness.

We have not yet seen the full end of the endowment orders. The promoters of these swindles have managed to put in their pockets about $4,000,000, stolen from the people of Massachusetts alone, while the State holds some $3,500,000 to be distributed among the certificate-holders. They are now going about offering to pay a small pittance in cash for such certificates, thinking to add to their ill-gotten gains the difference between what they are willing to pay their victims for the papers, and what the latter are likely to obtain in the final settlement by the receivers.

Sometimes the advice of an enemy is good to take. The Manchester Union is a paper which endorses license and Sunday opening of the World's Fair, and utters freely its gibes at the "religionists" who desire to see a radically different state of things. The Anti-saloon party, at a late meeting, excluded reporters, for which they may have had good and fitting reasons. But whether this was or was not a mistaken course, the sermon which it takes occasion to preach therefrom is one to which the secret temperance orders, as well as the A. P. A. and other patriotic organizations, may well take heed. The Union discourses as follows: "If there is any one thing which has been demonstrated in the long and intermittent struggle with the saloon element, it is that the cause of temperance can be promoted only by open and above-board methods. . . . If there is to be any attempt to stimulate the authorities to a more strict enforcement of the law, it can be done better in open meetings than in star-chamber sessions. The devil laughs when he sees the would-be reformers plotting together in dark corners. He knows that genuine reforms do not come that way."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, June 7, 1893.

President Cleveland, in announcing his intention to call an extra session of Congress to meet in September, to "deal with a financial condition which is the only menace to the country's welfare and prosperity," used some language which deserves the careful attention of every business man in the country. I quote a portion of what he said: "I think that between now and the meeting of Congress much depends upon the action of those engaged in financial operations and business enterprises. Our vast national resources and credit are abundantly sufficient to justify them in the utmost faith and confidence. If, instead of being frightened, they are conservative, and if, instead of gloomily anticipating immediate disaster, they contribute their share of hope and steadiness, they will perform a patriotic duty and at the same time protect their own interest. The things just now needed are coolness and calmness in financial circles, and study and reflection among our people."

The Briggs case continues to be much talked about, but your correspondent believes that no good will be accomplished by repeating what is said by either or both sides in such controversies. That such things are costly, in money as well as in other ways, is shown by the estimated cost of the entire Briggs' trial, which is placed at quite $50,000, an amount which Dr. Bartlett, who was chairman of the local committee of arrangements for the General Assembly, says he thinks is about correct. Dr. Bartlett thinks that Col. McCook, who was a leading member of the prosecuting committee, paid at least $20,000 of this money out of his own pocket. The case was mentioned in a number of our pulpits last Sunday, but to the credit of our ministers, the language used and the opinions expressed were in every case conservative and in keeping with the Christ-like spirit.

Rev. Dr. W. H. Boole, of New York, and his wife, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., took prominent parts in the quarterly meeting of the District W. C. T. U., held Monday and Tuesday of this week. They are both pleasing and impressive speakers and enthusiastic in the work of the white-ribboners.

Church anniversaries, especially when they reach the dignity of a centennial, are always interesting. Last Sunday the centennial anniversary of the independence of the Reformed church in the United States was fittingly celebrated at Grace Reformed church, the sermon being preached by Rev. Geo. W. Richardson, of Allentown, Pa. This church sprang from the Reformed church of Switzerland, and was started in the United States early in the last century, by refugees from France, Switzerland and Germany, and was supported by the Reformed church of Holland until 1793. It began with 22 ministers and 150 congregations and now has 900 ministers, 1,600 congregations and a membership of 200,000. Its first educational institution—Marshall College—was established in 1830; it now has under its control 18 schools and colleges, with 4 theological seminaries. It has 100 missionaries in the home field and 10 abroad.

Bound hand and foot and placed at the mercy of the liquor demon, is practically the situation in which the national capital is placed by a decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, our highest local court, and in this particular case a court from which there is no appeal. It had been held by the District Commissioners, and decided by the judge of one of the police courts, that the new liquor law which went into effect, or rather which was approved by the President, on March 3, 1893—it doesn't seem to have gone into effect to any considerable extent up to the present time—repealed the old liquor law and annulled all existing liquor licenses. According to the decision of the Court of Appeals, that was all wrong; and while the new law repealed the old law it does not affect the old licenses which were issued previous to the enactment of the new law. Now observe the effect of this decision upon the business of the saloon-keepers who hold the old licenses: all the regulations and restrictions of the old law—poor as they undoubtedly were—are repealed, and only those who hold licenses under the new law are subject to its restrictions. Therefore there is no law to deal with the holders of the old licenses; they can sell to minors, sell on Sunday; in fact, do as they please, and there is no legal remedy for an outraged community. All this is to continue until the first of next November, the beginning of the new license year. This also involves a large loss of revenue, as the old license fee was $100 and the new is $400.

REFORM NEWS.

ANOTHER SABBATH IN CHICAGO.

By arrangement with the pastor, Bro. Ferries, I preached morning and evening in the Dearborn Street Free Methodist church on Sabbath, the 4th inst., and assisted in other services. I found here an earnest and agreeable people, well occupied in Sabbath-school and mission work in a needy part of the city. The school for Bible study was large and inspiring, and will, in time, with patience and prayer, add many to the membership of the church. Bro. Ferries and his helpful wife are much esteemed by the people, and their labors are not in vain. He was himself absent in Wisconsin on business that occupied him several days.

Some features of the Scripture record of the great conflict waged by Satan to gain the worship of mankind were reviewed in the morning, introductory to the evening argument, showing that the worship at lodge altars is demon worship; and that it is by such means Satan is most effectually working his desperate will to separate man from his Maker and Redeemer. Earnest heed was given to the word spoken, and the faith of the brethren in the position of the Free Methodist church was confirmed.

My most kind entertainers were an elderly couple, Bro. Broadbent and his wife, whose hospitality and Christian intercourse were a lasting pleasure.

Care for the World's Fair exhibit, and preparation for the conference connected with the annual meeting next Tuesday, June 20, has occupied much time of late. Several meetings of ministers must be attended this week, to invite delegations, and otherwise promote an interest in our reform. Let us remember, if God be with us this conference may be a power for the truth among the churches.

Pray for the Conference.

REV. R. N. COUNTEE'S WORK IN TEXAS.

WACO, Texas, June 8, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am now on the eve of winding up my tour through Texas. I am here and stopping with a brother in whose home I find the Cynosure. He has been a subscriber for a year. His name is J. H. Cole. He is a devout Christian man. He once belonged to the Odd-fellows, and now he belongs alone to the Lord. He has suffered considerably in feeling by standing alone for God against the evils of rum, tobacco and secret societies. He keeps a barber shop, and for eight years, since he has been converted, he has never allowed his business to be opened on Sunday. When he left the lodge, they immediately set about to ruin his business by boycotting him, but he says: "God has been with me, and I have stood firm." I cannot tell you how glad he was to see me, and to have me with him, when he learned of my position on the lodge question.

Surely this is bleeding, suffering Texas. I find so few men who dare express themselves along any line of reform, and fewer still who are interested in the cause of the Master for anything more than mercenary purposes. I have spoken six times in the last ten days, in both the Methodist and Baptist churches. I have endeavored to be uncompromising in presenting the truth to the people. I have had men and women leave the congregations, and I have had to stop and wait for them to do so. It is strange to me how the truth of the Lord Jesus along the line of rum, tobacco and secret societies chafes the people. You are not aware of the fact, as presented to the people of my color all through this State, that all secret societies are founded on the Bible; thus the people are deluded and they rush into these traps unwittingly, while teachers and preachers are hampered, and they tell me they are forced into the lodge for self-protection. I made my last talk here last night, June 7, in the Baptist church, and God helped me, and I am proud to say to you that my effort was not fruitless. The pastor endorsed my work and said to the congregation: "Bro. Countee is the most earnest man I have met along this line. I have heard him both in public and in private, and I am done." Several members of the church came to me and shook hands with me, and bade me God-speed. I could not describe to you my feelings; and the dear brother with whom I am stopping was elated, as was also his wife, and this morning I heard his wife re-preaching a part of my sermon to some of the society sisters.

I shall leave here this afternoon for Fort Worth, and thence homeward, after a few days spent in the above-named place. I have been in this State since last March, and have spoken on an average of four times a week in ten different places, and I am conscious that some good has been accomplished. The meeting of last night was to me the most effectual that I have had, so far as seeing the present effects were concerned; for the pastor said, immediately after I sat down: "Now as many of you as want to express yourselves along this line, you are at liberty to do so," and they did. A collection was called for, and I received $2.10, and $2.75 for the Cynosure and periodicals. I am more than pleased to send this amount to the Cynosure. I have a few names to whom I hope you can send the Cynosure gratuitously. It will do a vast amount of good if you can send it for six months or less. Put in a little leaven, for it is needed very badly in these parts.

I shall try and write you again on my return to Memphis, which will be about the 22d of this month. Yours for the Master's use,

R. N. COUNTEE.

REV. WM. FENTON AT WORK IN MINNESOTA.

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 10, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On Monday evening last, June 5, I spoke in the Swedish Lutheran church at Willmar, in this State, and on Tuesday evening in the Norwegian Lutheran church of the same place. These lectures were well attended. The Masonic fraternity was well-represented at the lectures, but by no means used could they be induced to part with their cut-throat jewels, silence and secrecy, or make any reply. Even the Willmar Argus was silent. But the editor of the New Paynesville Press cannot forget the lecture of last winter, in that town, which exposed the spiritual scoundrelism of the lodge, and he must needs notice my transit through that village in a very uncomplimentary sort of a way. Verily, if he is a fair exponent of the sentiments of that community, its condition is, in the language of that editor's lodge, "truly deplorable;" and an Asiatic convert to Christ might be a blessing to them. The editor says that he formerly lived in Iowa and was acquainted with the work of the N. C. A. before he joined the Masons, and that it was that work which induced him to join the Masons; therefore, he must needs have given his heart to the spiritual being who runs the Masonic institution, having the natural use of his eyes unhoodwinked, but seeing not. "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE STATE SHOULD NOT LICENSE SECRET SOCIETIES.

SENECAVILLE, Ohio, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I want to express a few thoughts concerning the secret fraternities.

Referring to the attempt, a while ago, to license twenty-odd secret oath-bound societies in Illinois, I think this is asking a great deal of a free State, in the midst of a free government. If these orders could get all they are asking for, our republican government would soon come to an end; and it seems that the whole brood are seeking great privileges, especially since they are un-American and contrary to the teachings of the Scriptures.

We read in James' epistle (2: 9): "If ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors;" and we are also admonished, in God's Word, to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. It is heart-sickening to see the number of these secret organizations; and a fearful mixture are they—Catholic orders and Protestant societies and worldly fraternities, in which Protestant ministers freely mingle.

The Methodists here recently had an evangelist preacher from New York, who struck the secret orders some heavy blows. He had belonged to one, and he claimed that he had to leave the lodge or lose his religion.

As to the humble charging these evil institutions, my humble opinion is, that, instead, we should recall all that have been given and make it illegal for men to take these horrible secret obligations. I found, while canvassing with the petition to Congress to recall the charters they had given, that two-thirds of the best thinking people were willing to sign it; and if 10,000 of these petitions had been handled as they should have been, we could have sent in from two to three millions of names. I only canvassed a few townships and I collected 1,033 names. I feel that there are a great many who have not bowed the knee to Baal, and my humble prayer to God is that he will set up a standard that they may not pass over. Truly yours in this great reform,

JOHN LEEPER.

THE NEGRO IN THE SOUTH, AGAIN.

BLACK RIVER FALLS, Wis.,)
May 26, 1893. }

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am a regular subscriber and reader of your valuable paper. I read Rev. S. F. Porter's article, "The Situation in the South," and I think it is correct. We ought to have many more just such writers—writers that are not afraid to tell the truth, and the whole truth. I have also read Mrs. M. L. Carpenter's comment on the same, in which she says she was born and reared in North Carolina. That being the case, there is no wonder at her being so blind as not to see what is going on around her. I see she is ignorant of what she asserts.

In the first place, she says the Negro has the same privileges and rights that the white man has, which she knows is not true, if she knows anything at all.

In the second place, Negroes will not be allowed to work in shops on the same terms as the white people in the South. If a Negro does perchance get work in the shops, or on the railroad, he must work for half-pay or less, and have no chance for promotion. He must begin at the bottom and remain there for all time to come. If one is suspected of any misdemeanor, he is not even allowed a fair trial, but is taken out and hanged, shot, or roasted alive, without even a chance for his life or liberty, and without even judge or jury. And all of this in Christian America!

In the third place, we are free American citizens, and ought to enjoy all of the rights of the nation, without regard to race, color, or nationality, the same as do the Italians, Indians, Jews, Greasers, Poles, Bohemians, Chinamen, Irish, Germans, etc.

But what do we find in the South? We have separate schools and "Jim Crow" railway cars for black people, or those who are partly so, of African descent. These cars are partitioned off, one part for white smokers, and the other for Negroes, without regard to education, refinement, or wealth; clean or dirty, all are sent into this "Jim Crow" car together. It makes little difference whether he or she has a first-class ticket or not; one and all must travel in the "Jim Crow" car. All of this is law, in free America (white man's law).

My objection to separate schools is not because we want to send our children to the same school with the white ones, but because no State has a right to furnish money to perpetuate prejudice on one part of its people against the other. I also contend that no State has a right to pass a law that will cause animosity among its people. The white and black children attend school together in the North, and never have any trouble.

In the fourth place, the lady objects to Negroes going into Southern parlors and making love to "our daughters". There is a great deal said about "our daughters," but never a word is said about our sons, our brothers, or our fathers. If it was not for the Negroes' labor, "our daughters" and "our mothers" would not have parlors. The Negro does not want to intrude upon the white women; but when it is satisfactory to both parties, he desires to go into their parlors to make love to them.

We have in mind an instance where the Supreme Court of Appeals, in session at Wytheville, Va., handed down a decision in favor of a daughter of a white man, whereby she received $200,000—the fortune of her white father. This shows that it is not only the rough element who make love to the black woman, but also the educated and wealthy. I also venture to say that some of the octoroons and quadroons make love to the white women in secrecy.

The Negro population of the Southern States, by the last census, is 1,994,915, and of the United States, 8,000,000; about 90 per cent are mixed with the white race. At this rate, it is only a matter of a short time when there will be no black race to quarrel over.

In the fifth place, the lady says she is opposed to secret lodges. She has nothing to say about the secret love-making of "our sons," "our brothers" and "our fathers," with black daughters, black sisters and black mothers. The white servants here in the North do go to the Northern parlors and make love to the Northern daughters; go to the same schools and churches; ride in the same cars and other conveyances. White hired servants, as well as anyone else, get married to their employers' daughters. Her objections are not so much to the white servants, but to the Negro. What she wants is to get the Negro down and keep him down; and all he wants is to be let alone, and to have a chance to make a living for himself and family, and be allowed all his rights and privileges, the same as anyone else, no matter of what nationality he be. As to dividing up the Negro population, he does not desire any division; just leave him alone, and give him an equal chance with other people. And as to stirring up animosity, no right-thinking person would ever take exceptions to Rev. S. F. Porter's article.

The following clipping, from the Denver (Colo.) Exponent, shows that a distinction is even made between the Indian and the Negro:

"Three half-blood Indians were excluded from the public schools of St. Louis, Missouri, because it was thought that they had Negro blood in their veins. It was afterward ascertained that they were not of African extraction, and were admitted. Thus it is plainly demonstrated that even the Indian is preferable to the Negro."

Yours, a "saddle-colored Nigger,"

THOS. H. NICHOLS.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Cosmopolitan for June is as bright and cheery as the month, and presents several illustrated papers of great general interest. Among these may be enumerated Murat Halstead's paper on the City of Brooklyn; Margaret M. Merrill's glance at the famous Sorosis, with portraits of its prominent leaders; Mr. Gowen's Rise and Decline of the Hawaiian Monarchy; A naval officer's story of the destruction of the U. S. frigate Cumberland by the ram Merrimack; Clifton Johnson's rambles among The Deserted Homes of New England; The First Woman of Spain, by Sylvester Baxter, and Notes of the Brussels Monetary Conference. Of the lighter contents of this number are: The Chase of the Chongo, illustrated, by C. F. Lummis; continuation of Flammarion's Omega—The Last Days of the World; Muhammed Baber, by E. S. Holden; What Society Offers Mary Grew; In the Cypress View Neighborhood, by Opie Reed; a new installment of W. D. Howell's Traveler from Altruria, and poems by various writers. Published in New York City.

For June American Gardening presents a varied summer bill of fare, beginning with a sketch of our Furthest Corner, in which James K. Reeve describes Coronado Beach, of Southern California. O. C. Simmonds and James MacPherson have taken thought for the comfort of the young people who play tennis and other outdoor games by giving some clear and practical plans for the improvement of social playgrounds. E. A. Long considers the needs of small front yards and large gardens, in a paper that should be of great value to the mass of home-gardeners. New methods of Commercial Fruit Evaporation, and Short-Span-to-the-South Greenhouses are thoroughly discussed for the benefit of progressive people by pioneers in such movements. The frontispiece is a faithful portrait of Vitis vulpina, our native frost or river-bank grape, and an accompanying sketch, by the editor, sets forth its history, lineage, and uses. There are other noteworthy papers upon fruits and plants by the best horticultural writers, and attractive illustrations are scattered plentifully through the number. New York: The Rural Publishing Co.

There is much to commend in the Cottage Hearth for June, which, with a corps of capable writers and pleasing illustrations, offers to the desultory reader a good variety of summer entertainment, as follows: It is the Season (poem and frontispiece); "Them Twain;" A Desperate Device; An Uphill Wooing—but "they got there;" At Waltham Abbey, a legendary poem; The River of a Thousand Ships; Unto the Perfect Day, by Will Allen Dromgoole; A Rising Young Lawyer; The Crushers vs. The Tritons; and the eight social, literary and domestic departments, all well-filled with seasonable information and suggestions. Boston: W. A. Wilde & Co., 7 Bromfield street.

The June Century is resplendent with artistic engravings in great profusion, and equally attractive in its letter-press. As usual the "foreign element" fills a large space in its contents. In this direction are: The Juno of Argos, discovered in 1892; the Death of the Prince Imperial (son of Louis and Eugenie Bonaparte) in battle with the Zulus; Christina Rossetti, with portrait; With Tolstoy in the Russian Famine; An Hour with Robert Franz, and The Father of Modern Illustration (Vierge), with specimens of his paintings and drawings. The American features are no less striking in interest and engravings, including Caught on a Lee Shore, on the coast of Florida; In Cowboy Land, and the following stories; My White Rose of Killarney; The White Islander, a new serial, The Story of a Day; Writing to Rosina (continued); Benefits Forgot (continued); Mrs. Pettibone's Dinner-horn, and Uncle Obadiah's Uncle Billy. There is also an elaborate and timely paper, by Dr. Prudden, on the Public Health—the Duty of the Nation in Guarding it; with a number of readable poems, and the usual well-filled and entertaining departments. New York City: The Century Co.

Senator Lodge and Mrs. Burnett begin the current number of St. Nicholas with praises of the national capital, to which Mrs. Burnett gives the name, The City of Groves and Bowers. Mr. Lodge's sketch gives the important facts and legends connected with the city's past, and commends the wisdom that set apart a truly national city for the capital. In graceful and poetic style we are told why Washington should be a paradise for children. Both articles are fully illustrated. Boys will learn from Mr. Davidson's sketch of the Vesuvius just what may be expected from Uncle Sam's destructive marine warrior. How gun-cotton will act when brought into contact with an enemy's vessel we do not yet know, but one can imagine that the testimony as to its effects will be from those who are absent in body. Lieutenant Commander E. W. Sturdy, U. S. N., explains the Weather Map of the Ocean, and gives due praise to the compilers of this invaluable guide to mariners. The Beaver's Home, text and pictures by Tappan Adney, is an illustrated sketch of the haunts and habits of the fur-coated community, now almost extinct even in America. Other long articles are the story, The Apple of Arabia's Eye, and Frank Pinkham, Reporter, by John Z. Rogers, the latter showing how "there is a tide in the affairs of men," even if the man be a boy living in a lighthouse. There are short and bright pieces in generous quantity. Of verse we have Herford's Deceitful Dormice, Margaret Johnson's King's Test, and the touching little story of When Timmie Died, by Miss Fallows. The funny pictures speak for themselves, and as for the departments, each finds its constant admirers. New York: The Century Company.

PAMPHLETS.

An interesting, because timely and appropriate, pamphlet is "The Lessons of the Homestead Troubles: Address before the (Chicago) Sunset Club, Nov. 17, 1892, by Z. S. Holbrook." We have only room for his primary opinion on this subject, which is eminently sound. It is this: "The struggle at Homestead was a fight to the finish between the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers and the Carnegie Company. Only one vital principle was at stake in the contest, namely, the right of a man to work in a factory where a union had ordered a strike, or reversed, the right of an employer to hire whom he pleases to work for him. The Amalgamated Association knew very well that if it ordered its members at Homestead out on a strike their places would be quickly filled by non-union men at lower wages. In the very act of ordering a strike was involved, therefore, the necessity of preventing others from obtaining employment." Further reference to this address may be looked for in a future Cynosure.

We have received from the Indian Rights Association, 1305 Arch street, Philadelphia, the report of Mr. Herbert Welsh, corresponding secretary of the Association, relating to "Civilization Among the Sioux Indians," the result of a personal visit to some of the Sioux reservations of So. Dakota and Nebraska. We may have occasion to refer to it at greater length in an early number of this paper. It is replete with interesting facts and figures. It can be obtained from the Association at the above address.

LODGE NOTES.

(From Secret Society Papers.)

An "English Mason," in the Freemasons' Journal, says "there is too much laxity in England in admitting men to the Masonic order and visitors to lodges, and anybody with sufficient money to pay the fees can become a Mason."

The Freemasons' Chronicle says the name "Freemason" appears for the first time in Statute 25 of Edward I. of England, A. D., 1350. The term signified a "free stone mason," one who works in free stone as distinguished from the rough mason, who built walls with rough stones. It was not until the beginning of the seventeenth century that persons began to unite with the Freemasons and were distinguished from the regular working masons by the denomination "accepted." By the year 1702, the speculative lodges in England began to decay and became so degenerate as to be applied to the purpose of gain and self-interest. "Masons made here for 12s," was then a frequent announcement in the noted side street of London and Liverpool, but 1717 saw a complete change, when the so-called revival was effected.

Gen. Ludwig Kossuth is an ardent Freemason. On the occasion of his 90th birthday recently he received from many Hungarian lodges congratulatory letters.

The fees charged for the Scottish Rite in Colorado are $120, while in California they are $180—[We sell the complete Ritual for $1.—CYNOSURE.]

ODD-FELLOWS.

Brothers, don't speak of "Rebekah Degree lodges"—there are no such things any more. The Sovereign Lodge has changed it to "Rebekah lodge," plain and simple.

Grand Sire Campbell has decided that "a lady elected to membership in a Rebekah lodge, but marrying a person not an Odd-fellow before she has received the degree, is not entitled to receive it, and ceased to be eligible from the date of her marriage."

ROYAL ARCANUM.

The bill introduced in the United States Senate by Senator Chandler entitled: "An act to prohibit unlawful military organizations," is so worded that should it become a law, the existence of any of the various uniformed ranks connected with the secret organizations would be impossible. While it is extremely doubtful that its passage will ever be secured, without such objectionable clauses being eliminated, it behooves such bodies to carefully watch the progress of the bill.—Royal Arcanum.

The Supreme Council has made June 23, annually, a Royal Arcanum holiday—the birthday of the order—in Virginia.

It is a strange thing that those members who object the loudest to paying assessments and complain the bitterest of the burden entailed upon them are those who are the first to invite an associate to take a drink or join him in a cigar. Very few men can understand why it is so hard to pay two dollars a month for assessments in some benevolent order and yet so easy to spend five dollars a month for beer and tobacco.—Royal Arcanum.

CLEANINGS.

There are forty Mystic Shrine bodies in foreign lands, and about sixty in the United States.

The minutes of the Grand Lodge of England were first commenced June 24, 1723, when Bro. William Cowper became Grand Secretary.

The five lodges comprising the district of Northern China contain 192 members, being an increase of ninety-one during the past fourteen years.

Determined attempts are being made to prevent members of the Irish police force from becoming Masons.

The Grand Steward's Lodge in London, England, was founded in 1735 and is composed of Present and Past Grand Stewards. It cannot "initiate," "pass" or "raise." Its work is purely social.

IT'S ASTONISHING how Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription acts upon nervous women. It's a marvelous remedy for nervous and general debility, Chorea, or St. Vitus's Dance, Insomnia, or Inability to sleep, spasms, convulsions, or "fits," and every like disorder.

Even in cases of insanity resulting from functional derangements, the persistent use of the "Prescription" will, by restoring the natural functions, generally effect a cure.

For women suffering from any chronic "female complaint" or weakness; for women who are run-down or overworked; at the change from girlhood to womanhood; and, later, at the critical "change of life"—it is a medicine that safely and certainly builds up, strengthens, regulates, and cures.

If it doesn't, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

What more can anyone ask? Is anything that isn't sold in this way likely to be "just as good"?

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1893.

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; . . . for all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever.—1 JOHN 2: 15-17.

The Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association will occur on Tuesday, June 20, 1893, at 10:30 A. M., in Carpenter Building, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., for the election of officers and the transaction of other important business.

"THE LATENT POWER OF MASONRY."

We print herewith an article bearing this title from the American Tyler, a Masonic publication of Detroit. The claim that Masonry can do a great many things is, beyond a doubt, true. The marvel is that persons who can see the power of this secret lodge can for a moment suppose that it is not exercised. If the Freemasons of the United States were warring against grog-shops, political corruption, or any other evil thing, undoubtedly it would have a great noise against it. The fact is, however, as all intelligent students of the State know, that these men are not banded together for any such purpose. They are promoting a Christless religion. They are monopolizing the offices. They are delivered from the punishment of law, members of the fraternity who are violators thereof. Instead of its being true, as said in this article, that the mission of Freemasonry is to make the world better, the mission of Freemasonry is to secure power to be used for the advantage of its members, and to persuade men that they can live without repentance for sin, faith in Jesus Christ, or holy actions, and go to heaven, or, as they call it, the "grand lodge above," when they die.

If those persons who say that they are opposed to Freemasonry, but consider it a mere babyish compound of "fuss and feathers," and who think that we are greatly excited about a very small matter, would read such articles as this, and reflect upon them, it would certainly modify their opinions.

The tremendous latent power of Freemasonry, as a great actuating principle, by which human action may be wrought upon, is not fully comprehended by the individual. If we knew that two millions of men were sacredly banded for a war on any one object, armed with the latest and best weapons and led by wise and experienced generals, we would naturally presume that such an army would prove invincible and to it a succession of victories be a foregone conclusion. Such an army is that of Freemasonry, but enlisted in the interests of peace and universal benevolence. There is a grand sublimity in the thought that such a host of armed men are thus enlisted. Armed with the weapons of love to mankind and inspired by that reverence due the Father of us all, should not victory over wrong be presumed to perch upon the banners of the craft? We cannot, at a passing glance or thought, fully comprehend the possibilities of such a combined human force. If the old-time aphorisms be correct, that "God and one are cleft in a majority," then what must be the force when God and two millions of the choicest of his sons are united for the purpose of bringing to pass that millennial time that "Prophets and kings desired to see,

But died without the sight."

A time in earth's history, when peace, virtue and universal happiness should prevail. This is no Utopian impossibility. Man has within his grasp the making or marring of his own happiness.

To-day Freemasonry could say to the kings and rulers of earth: "Thou shalt not kill," and war would cease. Because in the ranks of this great fraternity are listed a majority of the rulers of humanity. To-day Freemasonry could say to the church of all denominations: "Ye be brethren," and theological conflict would have an end, because in its ranks are found the great religious teachers. To-day Freemasonry could say to ambitious, aspiring politicians: "Thou shalt not!" and only the good and true would seek and find the support of the various constituencies of earth, and malfeasance in office would be an unknown incident. We do not contend that human perfection would ensue from such a state of affairs, but we do believe and insist that in such a banded and bonded association of men as is represented in Freemasonry there exists a power which, if put into activity, could very largely eliminate from suffering humanity much of the occasions for unnecessary sorrow that to-day it labors under.

The mission of Freemasonry is to make the world better. It is not intended that to take the degrees and wear the jewels of the craft should suffice. These men, the world over, are obligated to do good, and if the good be not accomplished, then the force by which it could be lies dormant. Think of the latent force, brethren, by us all possessed.

THE RUSSIAN EXTRADITION TREATY.

The text of this important state paper appeared in the public press last week, and its appearance will serve to allay any fears that it was intended to secure the return of all political refugees from the Russian empire, as well as her vilest criminals, to her jurisdiction for trial and punishment.

The sentiment of the American people and the spirit of our republican institutions do not indorse any form of national persecution for the free expression of opinion in the interest of social, moral or governmental reform. In the Russian empire it is vastly different. Words that one may utter with perfect impunity on these topics, or either of them, publicly in the United States, would there consign a man to Siberia and its rigors for life. In the knowledge of this fact, and the mystery which for a long time enshrouded the provisions of this treaty, a fear existed that our government would pledge itself to the extradition of Russian refugees of all classes. Hence the great interest which has been manifested in its ratification. Happily the publication of the treaty puts all these fears to flight in the following passages:

If it be made to appear that extradition is sought with a view to try or punish the person demanded for an offense of a political character surrender shall not take place; nor shall any person surrendered be tried or punished for any political offense committed previous to his extradition, nor for any offense other than that for which the extradition was granted; nor shall the surrender of any person be demanded for an offense committed prior to the date at which this convention shall take effect.

No construction can be placed upon this which will permit the surrender of a person guilty of political crime not comprising the destruction of human life. That is provided for in that which follows, thus:

An attempt against the life of the head of either government, or against that of any member of his family, when such attempt comprises the act either of murder or assassination or of poisoning or of accessoryship thereto, shall not be considered a political offense or an act connected with such an offense.

And this should be read with the elementary provision regarding extradition:

Provided that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his or her apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had been there committed.

There is something so abhorrent in assassination, and especially in the sudden and violent killing of the head of any civilized government, that mankind have justly condemned it as a most barbarous and reprehensible crime, which deserves prompt and certain punishment. Nor is the fact that the government of Russia is little better than absolute tyranny, and the Czar, by virtue of his high office, an arch-tyrant over his subjects, an excuse for defending any one who should undertake his assassination and flee for safety to the United States.

Even in such a case the evidence of criminality on the part of the refugee must be fully established before his extradition shall be made. It seems to be, in this respect, a very satisfactory document.

STRIKERS KILLED.

On Friday last, at Lamont, Ill., in conflicts between colored workmen employed by contractors who armed and led them against the strikers on the drainage canal works, six or more of the latter were killed, and a number more wounded. The strikers, about 200 strong, it is claimed, were proceeding, quietly and unarmed, to a conference at Romeo, when they were assailed, and public opinion is strongly in their favor.

These circumstances differ materially from those which commonly attend such methods of settling labor disputes. During the previous week 2,600 quarrymen between Joliet and Lamont had quit work because on the 1st inst. their wages had been reduced, and on the next day, 1,500 more men employed on the drainage canal also went out. About 1,000 of those employed on the canal refused to quit. They were mostly Negroes.

After several small disturbances between the men, the contractors supplied those who remained with Winchester rifles, fearing an attack in force from the strikers. As the 200 of the latter approached, the armed men were ordered to advance upon them. At the first fire the strikers fled, few or none of them being hurt. Some of them, however, were arrested and placed in jail at Joliet. The second conflict occurred about an hour later, with the result above related.

From the published accounts of the affair, the assault possessed all the features of a murderous raid, for which no excuse seems plausible. How many of all concerned belonged to secret labor unions and fraternities is not known; but probably most of those engaged in the fight had lodge connections in different factions. The race question seems also to have been a disturbing element in this unfortunate massacre.

Information of the deadly assault having been forwarded to Governor Altgeld, he promptly ordered two regiments of the Illinois National Guard to the scene of conflict to preserve the peace.

A FINANCIAL FLURRY.

There was a serious excitement and an unwarranted "run" on Chicago banks last week. For a day or two great crowds of depositors, fearing the suspension of payments and consequent loss, collected in front of several city banks. Long lines, stretching from the paying tellers' desks out into the street, were formed, and for a few hours the people were importunate in their demand for their money. There was little or no disturbance, however, and the chief duty of the police officers stationed at the doors was to keep a passageway on the sidewalks clear for pedestrians. As the day wore on the excitement died out, and the people for the most part waited patiently for their turn. It was estimated that about 75 per cent of the crowds, one day, were composed of women.

The run on the Bank of Commerce ceased entirely shortly after noon, and at nearly all the other banks the lines of depositors had shortened to a great extent. The Union Trust and Dime Savings enforced the rule requiring notice of withdrawal, as was done the day before by the Prairie State Savings and Trust Company and Globe Savings bank. All the other institutions paid every demand in full. Offers of assistance continued to pour in, but in no case was it found necessary to accept them, the invariable answer being that there was plenty of cash on hand to withstand the strain for a month, or even longer.

Not one of the institutions that have closed their doors belonged to the Clearing-House association. Most of them were banks in name only, their business being mainly in the line of note and loan brokerage and real-estate deals. They had no standing of consequence in the commercial world and were not considered first-class in any respect. Their failure occasioned little surprise in financial circles and should cause the public no alarm.

STUDENTS IN REBELLION.

The request of the faculty of the Terre Haute (Ind.) Normal School that Prof. Arnold Tompkins of the chair of literature should resign his position, last week, met with general opposition from nearly all the 1,000 students in the institution, who rallied to his support. On Thursday the board of trustees summarily removed the professor from the faculty. That morning, when he appeared in the assembly room, where the students had gathered in strength for devotional exercises, he was received with cheers, and throughout the day, on several occasions, he was also applauded.

After removing him from his position, the trustees issued an address to the public, explaining their action. It relates that the professor, some time ago, created discord by making reflections on his co-educators and on President Parsons. He is undoubtedly an able teacher, and the students feel that they profit greatly under his instruction. The fact, therefore, that the board and faculty are unanimous against him does not outweigh their attachment for him.

After the board had removed him a committee of fifteen students asked to be heard. They presented a petition signed by 400 students asking the board to give its reasons for what it had done. The students were flatly informed that their right to ask for this information was denied. The students take their cue from Tompkins, who says the school is a State institution and they have the right to know why their wishes are ignored, because they come from the people who pay taxes and thus support the school. The board declared itself determined to adhere to its position if every student leaves the school.

ANNEXATION SENTIMENT IN CANADA.

During the past week, while the Congregational Union of the Canadian Provinces of Ontario and Quebec was in session at London, Ont., Rev. William McIntosh, a stalwart Scotchman from Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, was deploring the effects of the exodus to the United States from the maritime provinces. "We want a change," he said. He would welcome one, even to the extent of pulling down the grand old flag of England and raising up the stars and stripes.

At this remark a storm of hisses arose, but they were met with a volley of applause, and pandemonium reigned in the sacred edifice for a time. "I am only giving you facts," shouted the preacher above the din. "This state of affairs is acknowledged all over the country, except by partisan newspapers." The speaker proceeded to relate how whole congregations in his province had moved to the States. The uproar continued, but the preacher held his ground, and his outspoken confession made a profound impression.

This demonstration is but one of many that indicate a desire on the part of Canadians to release the Dominion from English rule and attach it to the United States.

To the Canadians such a union would be of more benefit than to the United States. Hence we hear very little advocacy of it on this side of the boundary. It is true that many Canadians prefer living among us to remaining in their own country; but England might object to a wholesale transfer of her provincial citizens, and the dominion, too. Under such circumstances, and the strong probability of a war with Great Britain, if an independent union is undertaken, we can have no use for Canada.

THE WORLD'S FAIR SABBATH.

When the Cynosure of last week went to press, the question of opening the World's Fair gates on Sabbath was in abeyance in the United States circuit court, where the issuance of an injunction to compel the Directory to close the Exposition on that day had been ably urged.

On Thursday last the three judges of the Federal court each rendered a decision, those of Judges Woods and Jenkins favoring the injunction to close on Sabbath, and that of Judge Grosscup opposing it. Each of the decisions indicated a thorough study of the case in fact and in law, and a desire to respect right. In neither decision was the divine law argued; it was upon purely secular testimony that the subject was considered.

The decision in the local court, of the week before, in the case brought by Mr. Clingman, to enjoin the Directory temporarily from closing the gates on Sabbath, expired by limitation last week, and the ruling of the Federal court suffered no hindrance from the action of the lower tribunal.

The decision not having been unanimous on the part of the Federal Court judges, the party in the minority appealed the case to Chief Justice Fuller, who suspended the temporary injunction granted by the United States Circuit Court closing the Fair on Sabbath. The Chief Justice also set Thursday, June 15, as the day when arguments would be heard and he designated Judge Romanzo Bunn, of the western district of Wisconsin, and Judge W. J. Allen, of the southern district of Illinois, as his associates to sit in the case.

The Directory, at its meeting on Saturday, took no action, but opened the gates of the Fair to the public on last Sabbath, pending the further consideration of the courts.

The third Sabbath of an open Fair, therefore, occurred on June 11.

The attendance at Jackson Park on those three Sabbaths, by paid admissions, was as follows:

First—77,212; second, 56,760; third, 71,664; total, 205,636.

Thus while the nation is disgraced by greed and dilly-dallying, the Fair management is hoarding its ill-gotten gains.

FERDINAND AND ISABELLA.

We hear much in these days, of a very complimentary character, concerning Ferdinand and Isabella, the patrons of Christopher Columbus and sovereigns of Spain, to whom, as history relates, "Columbus gave a new world".

History also gives us this insight into the kind of government that they maintained during their joint reign. We quote from "The Secret Societies of all Ages and Countries," by Charles William Heckerthorn, and published in London, in 1875, by Richard Bentley and Son ("publishers in ordinary to her majesty"), in two volumes:

"Until the joint reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, the Inquisition in Spain had been confined to the kingdom of Aragon. But about 1481 the Queen established it in Castile, and the King gradually extended its jurisdiction over all his states. Like James of Scotland, the King of Spain always wanted 'siller'; the Inquisition offered him a third of all the property it confiscated, and promised him a large share of the thousands of Jews then living in Spain; the nobles of Aragon and Castile were always conspiring against him; the Inquisition would quietly and secretly get hold of their persons, and thus rid him of these enemies; heaven was to be gained by putting down heresy; here, surely, were reasons enough for protecting the Inquisition and investing it with full powers. The Queen also—alas, that it has to be said of her!—was greatly in favor of it, and even requested the Pope to declare the sentences pronounced in Spain to be final, and without appeal to Rome. She complained, at the same time, that the people accused her of having no other view in establishing the Inquisition than that of sharing with its officers the property of those condemned by them. The Pope, Sixtus IV., granted everything, and appeased her conscientious scruples as to confiscations. A bull, dated 1483, named Father Thomas de Torquemada, an atrocious fanatic, Grand Inquisitor of Spain. For eighteen years he held the office, condemning, on the average, ten thousand victims annually to death by fire, starvation, torture." (Vol. 2, pp. 121, 122.)

Premising that these statements may be accepted as the truth of history, it is certain that the reign of these sovereigns is subject to a just and not very complimentary criticism, and that the Romish church, of which they were devoted adherents, is not, unless greatly changed, adapted to our time.

—On a recent Sabbath in San Francisco, "Chinatown" became a scene of unusual excitement. First there was a sensational and fierce Highbinder raid; then the conciliation of the presidents of the Six Companies who were at enmity, and finally the arrest of a Chinaman for deportation. It was almost equal to a "Continental Sunday" for the city of the Golden Gate.

—Among the strong radical religious papers that come regularly to our table is the Firebrand, of Shenandoah, Iowa, edited by C. S. Henley and Ira C. Grabill, and published by the Firebrand Publishing Association and Faith Work. The effort of the paper and the association is to increase the love and practice of pure Christianity, and the energies of both are exercised in that behalf. Among its recent enterprises the association has established a school of the prophets, for the advancement of its principles by special instruction, and in its issue of the 8th instant the following announcement is made: "Bro. Gladwin's two sons, Victor and Vivian, who are at Miles, Iowa, with his sister, are expecting to enter the Firebrand work for preparation for the work of the Lord, as he shall call. They are much interested in the school. Bro. Gladwin thinks if Bro. Moss is a type of the work done in Shenandoah, it is the place where he wants his boys educated." Readers of the Cynosure will recognize in Bro. Gladwin our esteemed Christian friend and co-worker, Rev. Wallace J. Gladwin, missionary to India, and editor of the India Watchman at Bombay. Bro. Gladwin and the Firebrand are thoroughly with us in the anti-secrecy work.

THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Special Work for the Season of 1893:

1. Exhibit of the history and work of the Association for twenty-five years in the main building of the World's Fair.

2. Conference of Churches connected with the Annual Meeting, June 20th, made up of delegations appointed by church assemblies.

3. Congress on the reform under the auspices of the World's Fair Congress auxiliary, to be held about October 5th, in the Art Palace on the Lake Front, Chicago.

The decision of the United States Court on the Sunday opening of the World's Fair, last Thursday, caused profound gratitude in the bosom of every true patriot. It maintained the supremacy of law, and of the right of the people to govern through their representatives in Congress. The majority of the local Directory were willing to abide the decision as they had again and again said they would. But the threats of their attorney overbore their reason, and the Fair was again nominally open last Sabbath. The attendance was not so large as during the week, though the day was fine; and so large a portion of the exhibits were covered that Dr. Peabody, chief of the Liberal Arts department, is reported as saying that it "cannot be denied that exhibitors are not anxious to display their wares on Sunday. There are few displays in the Mechanics' building which can be seen complete to-day."

On Saturday Chief Justice Fuller, being at his home here in Chicago, granted a supersedeas until an appeal can be heard on Thursday of this week. U. S. District Judges Allen and Bunn will sit with him. The case will therefore again be heard, by a court of no higher authority than the last. The issue rests not with man, however, but with God. He has wonderfully wrought for his name's sake in the past. He will not fail nor be confounded.

The N. C. A. committee in charge of the exhibit have been disappointed in getting Bro. J. P. Stoddard to attend it. The Sunday-opening agitation led him to postpone and conditionally refuse to come. For the time being Mrs. L. C. Hemenway has kindly offered her services as an attendant. We go forward, as stated a few weeks ago, under the law forbidding Sunday opening.

Some friends have called at the N. C. A. exhibit and left their names, finding no attendant. It was impracticable for the committee to attend in person, and it was only after protracted inquiry that we found Mrs. Hemenway.

Bro. J. P. Stoddard will not be at the annual meeting and church conference. We regret to announce it. He is a trustee of Berea College. The annual meeting occurs on the 21st of June, and Bro. S. finds the call for his presence there more imperative than ours, for several reasons.

The delegates to the conference selected by the Illinois conference of the Evangelical Association are Pastors Kiest, Husser, and another whose name escapes us,—all pastors in this city. The Norwegian and Danish M. E. conference, in a district meeting at Muskegon, Mich., appointed Revs. Carlson and Nilson of Chicago to represent them.

Dr. J. E. Roy, of the Chicago Congregational Ministers' Union, not being able to attend the conference, Dr. J. M. Williams was appointed delegate in his place by the Union last night.

The Baptists' Ministers meeting Monday morning selected Brethren Colver and Norton to represent them in the conference. Dr. Gifford presides over the Baptist body, and helped to secure a favorable response to the invitation of the N. C. A.

THE HOME.

A CHICAGO GIRL'S VIEWS OF SUNDAY CLOSING.

BY JULIA E. COOK.

It was nearly two thousand years ago,—
Human nature is always the same, you know—
That once, in the home of Martha and Mary,
Christ Jesus was resting him, worn and weary;
And Mary brought out and broke for him there
A box of sweet perfume, hoth costly and rare.
Then up spake Judas, Simon's son,
Angrily: "What has the woman done?
Alas for the poor! It should have been sold—
It would have brought much excellent gold;"
But 'twas not for the poor that he thus had care,
But he was a thief and the bag he bare.

And not long ago, nor far from here,
The same thing is happening, as I fear;
For I hear in the air a mighty hum
As each Sunday newspaper beats its drum;
And the gentlemen all who own stock in the Fair
Cry in anguish aloud as they tear at their hair:
"Oh, list to the wail of the laboring man!
Ah! hark to his plaint and resist, if you can;
He longeth to see this great World's Fair too;
He yearneth the education of earth to view.
Ah me! let him cull education too
And open on Sunday. Pray now do!
Don't shut him quite out from a nice Sunday sight,
When he works all day-time, and sleeps all the night.
Don't ye think it unjust, oh, ye working-men true?"
And a faint answer reaches us: "Yes, sir, we do."
And the newspaper sounds its great call thro' the land:
"All ye wise who agree with me—hold up your hand.
Ah! so there is no one, as plainly you see,
But a few old fanatics, who differ from me.
Come forth an ye dare, ye most mongrel of men,
And answer these questions in order: Now then,
What will become of the poor man, pray,
If he can't see the Fair on his one only day?
His employers can't give him a half-day to go—
They all need so much to make money, you know;
For you know in this town most employers are poor,
And have to work hard both in office and store."

A faint "Amen (?) " comes from the stockholders' corner;
"Oh no, they're not guying you, little Jack Horner;
We know you stock-owning employers are poor,
And our sympathy grows for you more and yet more.

"Well, now," says our newspaper magnate ablaze,
"And here is another importunate phase:—
Oh, Chicago, thou hostess of all the wide globe,
Placed in state on thy throne in thy bright starry robe,
Pray consider awhile what thy duty may be
To the foreign-born guests who are visiting thee.
Do you think it quite kind to these callers galore,
When they come to the Fair that thou closest the door?
See how gamblers and footpads their welcome prepare,
And wilt thou, dear Chicago, be left behind there?"
"No!" cry the stockholders' thunderous voices,
(And they think by the sound that the whole world rejoices),
"And if you don't let them go into the Fair"—
And the newspaper finds its "I-told-you-so" air;—
"They'll be bad all day Sunday, as bad as you be;
Now won't you, dear foreigners?" Yes, they'll agree.
And the stockholders shake their sad heads in a row,
And prepare them to join in the "I told you so!"
Now the newspaper says, and its wrath rises higher Than the temperature was at the time of the fire;
With the rod of a man who observes and who knows:—
"The Congress is good as far as it goes.
But Congress is wrong if she thinks she can run
This Fair to her tune, as she's lately begun;
She gave us some gold if we'd shut it, and then,
By-and-by took one-fifth of it right back again;
So we don't have to mind her unless we should wish;
So is wrong if she takes us for fresh-water fish.
A four-fifths to one-fifth is one promise to none,
Take four-fifths and no promise—the problem is done.
So rejoice, all ye lovers of true liberty,
And ply the poor in our land of the free;
Be good and be kind, and you happy will be."
And wonder and ponder it early and late,
Do they think the Almighty's great thoughts "out of date"?
Do they think them but like to the judgments of men?
Which with time must be changed and made over again?
Or, perchance, they all think that this Fair is so great,
The occasion so grand, or we're living so late,
That he doesn't intend his law to apply
Only when it's convenient, some-time by and bye.
Yet, in spite of this argumentative talk,
If on Sunday beside the World's Fair gates you walk,
Let us hope they'll be shut, and that one day of rest
Be assured that the Fair employes may be blest.
And if ye believe, as they'd have us suppose,
That all evil ensues as result of its close,
Step into the churches a moment and view
How they're filled from the front to the very back pew.
Let them tell how saloon-keepers gain by it; but
Do you think the saloon-keepers want the Fair shut?
Thinking over the thoughts of the Sunday newspaper,
And the stockholder bravely upholding his taper,

We wonder,—and let them not deem it unkind,
But a natural thought which occurs to the mind—
Is it really the poor that call forth all this care,
Or do they love gold and the bag that they bear?

A ZULU WEDDING.

I am not sure that you have not had a description of a Zulu wedding before this. We saw one for the first time not long ago and were much interested. It was the wedding of the oldest son of Chief Faku, the young man who was for a time one of my most interesting scholars here.

The residence of Faku is about seven or eight miles from us. Perhaps I should say one of his residences, for he has no less than four kraals in different parts of the country, with several huts in each kraal. He has many wives. We asked his son who was with us to give us the number of his son's wives. He at first evaded the question, and said, "They are many." But when pressed to give us the exact number, he, after some counting, gave us the number eighteen.

Under a scorching summer sun, and over an exceedingly hilly and rocky path, with our one horse, the journey was not the most desirable. But our curiosity to see a native wedding, and our special interest in the bridegroom on account of his former relations to our work, overcame all obstacles. About noon we reached the chief's kraal, and took refuge from the sun under a large tree near enough to see what was going on without ourselves attracting attention.

But we were not so secluded as we at first supposed; for soon the native women began to gather under the same tree. They kept coming until we were entirely surrounded and it was too late to retreat. And what was it drew the crowd to that spot? Had they come to greet the missionaries and to listen to their words? Alas! No! We noticed that three or four of them carried upon their heads large vessels made from gourds; and it needed no one to inform us of the contents of those vessels. We knew only too well that they contained beer.

Seated on the ground, with much loud talking, laughing, etc., the beer was passed from one to another, and each took a deep draught. When the pots were emptied the crowd again dispersed to make ready for the coming events of the day. They were hospitable enough to offer us some of their beer, and it took much explanation to make them understand that we never drink beer, and consider it very wrong to do so.

People could now be seen coming from all directions, and such a crowd as was soon assembled! I have little idea of the real number present, but think there must have been many more than a thousand. It is entirely beyond my power to describe the scene that followed. The dancing began early in the afternoon and was still in progress when the sinking sun reminded us that we must be going.

The dancers were arranged in companies according to their age or condition in life. In one place were the old men, in another the young men; in one place the married women, and in another the young women. A few boys and girls took part. All were nearly entirely destitute of clothing. Even some, who on other occasions, when in our presence, wore clothing, had on this occasion abandoned everything superfluous(?), as it hinders the freedom of their motions in dancing. Those of one rank came forward, all keeping time to the music(?) they were singing. When these had finished their part of the drama they fell behind to allow the next rank to come to the front.

The bride took a very active part in this performance, and appeared among the married women, who are easily distinguished from the young women by their peculiar manner of dressing their hair and by their short skirts made of skins. The young women wear none. The bride was still further distinguished from others of her rank by the many strands of beads which were around her neck and which completely covered her head and shoulders; and by the very large knife which she brandished in her hand continually, going through the motion of cutting some imaginary object just in front of her.

The bridegroom took no part in all this performance, but stayed in our company most of the time. He seemed troubled rather than rejoiced upon his wedding day. He himself desires to leave all such heathenish customs and to become a Christian. He told us that his wife is not a Christian and does not care for clothes; and that the whole matter was the arrangement of his father and not of himself.

The wedding ceremony was somewhat as follows: An opening was made in the crowd sufficiently large to admit the bride and groom, the "induna" who married them, and several head of cattle and goats. The cattle were the price given by the father of the groom to the father of the bride in exchange for his daughter. How the goats were disposed of will be explained further on.

The "induna" proceeded to question them as follows: To the groom, "Were you forced to marry this girl?" And to the bride, "Were you forced to marry this man?"

Question number two. To the groom, "Do you love this girl?" Answer, "Yes, 'kakula'," very much. And to the bride, "Do you love this man?" Answer the same as that of groom.

Question number three. "Won't you trouble each other?" Groom, "If she don't listen to what I say there will be trouble." "Induna" to the bride, "What do you say to that?" Answer the same as that of groom, "If he don't listen to what I say there will be trouble." "Induna" to both, "You ought to listen to each other. What one says the other must 'vuma', consent to."

Then they shook hands in mutual agreement, and the ceremony was ended. Immediately following this was the giving of presents somewhat as follows: Six goats to Chief Faku, father of the groom, from the bride. One goat for Faku's brother, the "induna" who married them. One goat for the oldest sister of the groom, and one for the person who went to the girl's father to ask his consent.

Besides these were other presents of clothing, etc., given by the bride as follows: To the chief, an overcoat and a stool; to the groom's mother, a blanket and a large red handkerchief. Each of the other wives were given a blanket. The two oldest brothers of the groom were each given a suit of clothes; and the two oldest sisters each a blanket. One or two suits of clothes were also given to the groom.

On the day of the wedding, little or no food was taken by those who participated. Beer, of which they drank very freely, took the place of food. We were told that seven large barrels of beer had been prepared for this occasion, and that they were finished on the second day. The second day was the day for feasting. Two cattle and six goats furnished the wedding feast.

The groom was obliged to give to the father of the bride £5 before he would "open his mouth," that is in consent. This is a custom among the people. Sometimes £10, and even £15, are demanded by the girl's father before he will consider the claims of a suitor; but when once he demands money, the case is virtually won, as by this act he really consents. Such is a wedding among the Zulus.—Emma Hillmon Haviland, in the Free Methodist.

THE STORY OF A SONG.

We all want to do big things; we long for great talents; and instead of using what we have, we stand idly wishing we could preach like Mr. Moody and sing like Sankey, and souls are slipping by us down to hell—

Lost for want of a word,
A word that we might have spoken.

I heard Mr. Sankey say that when Mr. Moody and he were holding meetings in a certain place the church was filled, and a great multitude gathered outside. In order that all might hear the singing, the organ was placed on the steps of the church, and Mr. Sankey sung the famous "Ninety and Nine".

On a distant hillside a man was sitting on a veranda, out of sorts with his wife and daughter, because they had gone to the meeting.

He had no interest in such things.

As he sat there one verse of the song, carried by the breeze, reached his ears:

None of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed,
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through,
Ere he found his sheep that was lost.

It was an arrow that pierced his soul and led to his conversion. What a grand thing to sing the Gospel and win souls in that way! But we need not be able to sing like Mr. Sankey to win souls, as the following story will show:

One of the workers at the Rescue Mission sat in the window sewing. She is not a grand singer—in fact, scarcely ever sings in the meetings, but alone by herself sings the Gospel songs. She was singing—

Oh, to have no Christ, no Savior,
How dark this world must be!

When she had finished she heard some one calling, and saw two girls looking over a neighboring fence.

One said: "Won't you please sing that again?"

I am afraid some of us would have begun to make excuses and say we were not singers, etc.; but this good soul sung it over again, praying God to bless the song, and then went to talk with them. She recognized them as inmates of a place of wickedness, and asked permission to call on them. They would not grant this, but the next day one came to the mission and threw herself into the arms of the singer.

"I have been so unhappy," she said, "since I heard you sing. You remind me of my mother, and the days when I was innocent and good. I had a good home, but quarreled with my mother, ran away, and got into a life of sin. I am tired of it. Won't you pray for me?"

They had prayer, and the poor, wandering one was led to the Savior. She said:

"I'll never go back to that place again. I'm going to the poormaster and ask him to send me home."

The worker furnished the money to pay her fare to her home in a neighboring city, and she went away rejoicing. This was some time ago. Last week the girl, accompanied by her father, paid a visit to the mission. She was happy in Christ, and had led eleven souls to him, her father and mother being among the number. Her father was full of praise and thanksgiving to God for what he had done for his erring child and the rest of his family, and tears ran down his cheeks as he thanked the singer for the song and for the help she had been to his daughter.

Her desire is to work among the fallen, from whom she had been rescued. What encouragement for weak workers!

Let us sing a song to some poor soul, speak a word, give a tract, or visit some sick and dying one, lead some one to Christ.

God says in 1 Cor. 1:17, 18, that there are five things he will use, namely, "Foolish things, weak things, base things, despised and things that are not to bring to naught things that are." God will take "a worm to thresh a mountain."

The trouble with us is, we want to be some "lord of the forest," and are not willing to be the worm. Put yourself in God's hands to be used, and he will use you.

If we use what talents we have he will give us more. "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." We either use or lose.—H. B. Gibbard, in Christian Herald.

A CHAT WITH A PRINCE.

The Prince of Wales once heard an unexpected sermon from a little girl; and it came about in this way: A nobleman, a widower, had a little daughter under ten years of age. He was very fond of his daughter, though his engagements prevented him from seeing much of her. The child was therefore chiefly in the society of her governess or in the nursery. Now, her nurse was an earnest Christian woman. She felt for her motherless little charge, and early stored the child's mind with Scriptural truths. The father used sometimes to amuse his little daughter by asking riddles; and one night, when she came in after dinner for dessert, she said to her father, who was not a Christian:

"Father, do you know what is whiter than snow?"

"No," said he, somewhat puzzled, "I do not."

"Well," replied the child, "a soul washed in the blood of Jesus is whiter than snow."

The nobleman was surprised, and asked:

"Who told you that?"

"Nurse," was the reply.

The nobleman did not discuss this point, and conversation changed to other topics; but afterwards he privately requested the nurse, whose opinions he respected, not to mention these matters to his daughter, as, at her tender age, he feared she might take too "gloomy" a view of life. The incident was accordingly forgotten; but not long after the Prince of Wales was visiting the house, and the little girl was allowed to be present. The Prince, with his usual affability, noticed the child; and, thus encouraged, she said:

"Sir, do you know what is whiter than snow?"

The Prince, not seeing the drift of her question, smiled as he answered:

"No."

"Well," she said, "a soul washed in the blood of Jesus is whiter than snow."

The remark was overheard by the father; his little girl's words were used to carry conviction to his heart; he became an earnest and devoted Christian, and thousands will hereafter rise up and call him blessed. Now, perhaps you may be tempted to think that little girl was forward or precocious; but she was not. She had learned a truth which is better than rank, or wealth, or titles, or estates; and, childlike, the truth slipped out in her conversation. The truth she had learned was this: The soul needs cleansing, and the blood of Christ can effectually cleanse from every stain.

WHITTIER'S LAST LINES.

I would not if I could repeat
A life which still is good and sweet:
I keep in age as in my prime,
A not uncheerful step with time,
And grateful for all blessings sent,
I go the common way content
To make no new experiment.
On easy terms with law and fate,
For what must be I calmly wait,
And trust the path I cannot see,—
That God is good sufficeth me.
And when at last upon life's play
The curtain falls, I only pray
That hope may lose itself in truth,
And age in heaven's immortal youth,
And all our loves and longings prove
The foretaste of diviner love!

—St. Nicholas.

TEMPERANCE.

DR. RAINSFORD'S PLAN.

Most men who drink at all drink more than is good for them. Not one in a hundred really needs the stimulant or would not be better off without it, both in purse and health. It is an extravagance and a dangerous habit, and all men know it to be so. But Dr. Rainsford would make the gratification of the appetite a proceeding justified by the church, and he would give it a sort of religious character. He would advertise that so far as the example and admonition of the church go, no one need be a total abstainer.

The consequences of his plan, of course, would be a great increase in the amount of drinking. Young men whose parents warned them against the danger of drink would reply that as the church furnished the liquor its consumption must be harmless. He would encourage men to bring their wives to his drinking places, and thus overcome any scruples the good women may have about using alcoholic beverages.

Such a plan for the extension of the practice of drinking by giving it conspicuous religious sanction will not appeal favorably to reasonable men, whether they are drinkers or not. Even the drunkards see its viciousness. They know that the habit of drinking does not need any encouragement.—N. Y. Sun.

POINTS FOR YOUNG MEN.

Where did you spend the greater part of your time last month?

How many times have you seen the inside of a church during the last thirty days?

Are you going to wait until next January before you turn over a new leaf?

Is a man strictly honest when he expects to get more than he is willing to give?

Every man is a capitalist. Brain and brawn as well as chattels and real estate are capital. How are you investing yours?

Are you congealing and deadening the activity of your brain by drink? And you say you can stop it if you wish? Then why not stop now?

Are you one of those young men who are drowning, as you say, your disappointments in the wine cup? Will you confess that you have not the courage to brace up and be a man, no matter what comes?

Do you know, dear fellow, that when you are so weak that you can no longer resist temptation in your own strength that there is One who is willing and able to help you, and who has never been known to fail? Can you not trust him?

Do you get the blues? Why? Whose fault is it if you have not made a success of life? Think carefully, and if it is your own, brace up and work a radical reform. "Quit yourself like a man; be strong."—Young Men.

THE "MODERATE DRINKER."

A gentleman called at the Home office one day last week, and in conversation made the following frank statement:

"I am a Prohibitionist and vote that ticket, but I take a drink when I want it. I was never intoxicated in my life, and take a glass only now and then. You've got a big job on hand to stop the drink traffic, while men like myself continue to drink moderately."

He was asked what his reasons were for voting with the Prohibition party while he continued to drink. He replied:

"Well, I have six boys, and I want them to be Prohibitionists and not drink. My boys might go along as I have and not fall into the power of drink, but I am afraid they won't."

This little incident is calculated to arrest attention. It shows at once the hope and the hindrance of the reform against the saloon.

The hope is that fathers who have been taking this course are beginning to see the pitfalls they may be digging for their own boys.

The hindrance is that there are so many thousands of fathers who do not yet see it in that light, either for their own or others' boys.

The moderate drinker is the back-bone of the liquor evil. He is the man who is spreading the rum disease. It is not the drunkard who leads young men on, step by step, until they become slaves to appetite, that is, until their physical powers are undermined to the degree that they cannot resist the power of alcohol. No, it is the father, the brother, the employer, the companion, who says he "can drink or let it alone".—Iowa Voter.

NOT FIT TO BE A PA.

Josephine K. Henry, in the Southern Journal of Louisville, Ky., says:

A little seven-year-old girl seeing a dirty, bleary-eyed drunken man reel past her on the street, looked up with an inquiring look to her mother and asked: "Mamma, is that man a pa?" "Yes," replied the mother sadly, "he is the pa of the little frozen children who pick up coal from the gutter." "Mamma," said the child, "that man is not fit to be a pa." The words of this child are of more import to civilization than all the questions that are now before our legislative bodies.

If the United States Congress would take this little child's idea and debate on it for the next five years, they would take the tap-root of human woe and suffering; and if they would legislate in defense of helpless women and children to improve the race, as they do now for the development and improvement of horses and cattle, we would enter upon a mental, moral and physical millennium. The development of the horse, it is claimed in Kentucky, has well nigh reached perfection. Compare the children of drunkards, with sodden looks, scrofulous blood, sluggish minds, and often deformed bodies, the pleading expression of the eyes that bespeaks hunger of stomach and soul, with the intelligent animals, sleek, perfectly formed, well fed, and well groomed, and the fact presents itself that the equine family has distanced the human family in the race of evolution.

The horse is already ahead in physical perfection, that is to say, the most perfect Kentucky horse in physical points is superior to the most highly developed human being.

It is a crime for any woman to live with a drunken man and become the mother of children. She is an abject slave, soul and body, and degraded below the brutes of the field.

What are women in this day in comparison with whisky? The latter's power is absolute, as it makes and unmakes rulers and laws, while woman is not even a factor in the conduct of human affairs. Her lot is to submit to the indignity and abuse visited upon her by the victims of strong drink, to bear and rear children to break her heart, children who fear and hate their fathers and are enemies to society.

Every woman whose husband is a drunkard, for the honor of her womanhood, for her own happiness and the good of the world, should refuse to live with him or be the mother of his children. The saying of the little girl, "That man is not fit to be a pa," contains food for thought for law-makers and sociologists.—Christian Life.

LESSON I.—The Afflictions of Job.—Job 2: 1-10. Golden Text: The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.—Job 1: 21. Analysis: A great enemy, vs. 1-3. A sore affliction, vs. 4-10. A triumphant faith, v. 10. Central Truth: "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" We ought, with Job, to believe that whatever the Lord does is right, and accept it without a murmur.

LESSON II.—Afflictions Sanctified.—Job 5: 17-27. Golden Text: Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.—Hebrews 12: 6. Proof that they are a blessing, vs. 27; from history, from experience, from revelation. Central Truth: God tries his children, to make them better and to prove to men the reality of virtue and religion.

LESSON VII.—Fruits of Wisdom.—Prov. 12: 1-15. Golden Text: The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and he that winneth souls is wise.—Prov. 11: 30. No analysis can be framed for this lesson, which consists of detached proverbs, each one complete in itself and having no connection with the others; but this thought runs through all the verses: Each presents a contrast between the man who accepts wisdom as his teacher, and the one who accepts folly; showing the difference between the wise man and the fool. Central Truth: Two voices invite us—one to the palace of wisdom, the other to the pavilion of folly.

LESSON VIII.—Against Intemperance.—Prov. 23: 29-35. Golden Text: Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.—Prov. 20: 1. Analysis: There were drunkards in Solomon's day, but intemperance is a greater curse now than then. This lesson has been called "The Drunkard's Looking-glass," held up before moderate drinkers, that they may see what they will become if they keep on. The woes of intemperance, vs. 29, 30. The sure protection, vs. 31-35. Central Truth: The evils of intemperance are warnings against the use of strong drink.

In Malachi—Through the way, the truth and the life. Central Truth: Man finds his highest good in life in the love of God and man.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—At the session of the American Baptist Publication Society, the report of the special committee on Sunday-school lessons, doing away with the International system, was adopted after a warm discussion.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Dr. E. P. Goodwin, of Chicago, reviewing his twenty-five years' ministry, states that the population within that time has gone up from 300,000 to 1,400,000, and the Congregational churches from 8 to 56. The membership has increased from 1,114 to 10,452, and the Sunday-school scholars from 1,321 to 21,920.

—Rev. Henry C. Hitchcock, late pastor of the Day Street Congregational church in West Somerville, Mass., died of a broken heart, caused by the enforced resignation of his pastorate.

—Dr. T. L. Cuyler of Brooklyn, N. Y., preached at the First church Sabbath morning, a very large audience being present to hear him. In the evening there were evangelistic services by Mr. Moody's corps of workers, Mr. Moody being present, but Rev. Mr. Montgomery from England preaching. This church will be the West Side center for Mr. Moody's work this summer, and meetings will be held every evening in the week except Monday and Saturday.

FREE METHODIST.

—For sufficient reasons the time of the Illinois Conference camp-meeting has been changed from June 27 to July 5. It is to be held at Joliet. Those ordering tents should write to Rev. W. M. Kelsey, 109 Humboldt St., Chicago.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—A writer, who has given much attention to the subject, declares that there are from three to six times as many churches for a given population in the country as in the city, and that in all our great cities there are large populations almost destitute. In six assembly districts in New York City, with 360,000 people, there are 31 Protestant churches, and 3,018 saloons. In the first assembly district, in the same city, with 44,000 people, there are seven Protestant churches, and 1,073 saloons. In the center of Chicago there is a district containing 60,000 people without a church of any kind. A similar state of things is to be found elsewhere.

—General Booth has left for Copenhagen, and on his return will visit the Black country. The General is just past 64 years old.

—The New York Independent thinks that "special interest attaches to the work of the French Evangelization Society in Canada." "The priests and bishops," it says, "are making strenuous efforts to control the movement which is spreading. The general effect of the work has been increased by the changing attitude on the part of the Roman Catholic people toward the highest authorities in their own church."

—The Orange lodges, the Freemason lodges, the Know-Nothing organizations, are far more numerous, more active and more influential in this country than is generally supposed. They do more harm to religion and especially to Catholics than people are willing to believe.—Catholic Review.

—The revision wave has reached Russia, and the Russian Bible is to be revised.

—The Moravian church, after ten years' provisional administration, has finally assumed permanent control of the Protestant Leper's Asylum at Jerusalem.

—A Primitive Methodist candidate for the ministry at Liverpool was rejected on the ground that he was "addicted to smoking." On promising to give it up he was admitted.

MOODY'S INSTITUTE.

—Daily lectures are given at the Bible institute, Chicago, by some of the most eminent Bible teachers of America and Great Britain. Among those who are lecturing, or will lecture during the summer, are Rev. Hubert Brooke of England, Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston, Prof. W. G. Moorehead and Prof. J. M. Stifler, Dr. Theodore Monod of Paris, and Rev. John McNeill, Rev. John Riddell, and Rev. John Robertson, of Scotland. These lectures are open to every one. They are held at nine and eleven o'clock every morning except Sunday and Monday.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—A few months ago it was stated that Mgr. Satolli had forgiven Dr. McGlynn for leaving the Roman Catholic church, and that Dr. McGlynn was going to Rome. "It has lately been ascertained," says a secular paper, "that he is in retreat in the Trappist monastery near Lexington, Kentucky, doing penance" for his injury to the church in seceding therefrom.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian church, in session at Macon, Ga., decided that members may be excommunicated for engaging in lascivious dances.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The General Assembly recently met at Monmouth, Ill. The United Presbyterian says: "Eleven years ago—1882—the General Assembly met in Monmouth. We cannot fail to recall that meeting—one of the most notable in the history of the church. There is a marked contrast between it and the one just closed. The ministry has increased from 719 to 809, and the congregations from 829 to 935. In that year 4,239 members were reported as received on profession of faith; this year 7,174 are so reported. The total membership has increased from 84,573 to 111,119—21,546, or almost 25 per cent. The Sabbath-schools have increased from 809 to 1,116, with an increase of 23,352 in the number of scholars, enrolling now 96,908. The contributions were then reported at a total of $930,125; they now reach the magnificent sum of $1,400,090; an increase from $11.40 to $14.07 per member. The salary of pastors has advanced from $868 to $1,033. If we look at the details of the contributions, we find that the churches now give for the boards or the work in their several departments, $290,826, as against $140,716."

—The Board of Missions to the Freedmen has expended nearly $200,000.

—The Board of Church Erection has granted 239 applications for aid, aggregating $105,391 in donations, and $61,192 in loans.

—The receipts of all the boards during the year amounted to $2,799,562; an increase over the past year of $178,765.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

Judge Pliny Merrick (a seceded Mason): "If ever a Chapter or a lodge shall establish laws in conflict with those of the state the Masonic requisition is obedience to the lodge and conflict with the state; and if a member hesitates at this humiliating obedience, his heart must be 'torn from his bosom,' his 'vitals plucked from his body,' and Masonic vengeance, not satisfied with this bloody immolation, denies a resting place to the motionless remains, but they are to be 'burnt to ashes and scattered to the winds.'"

Samuel C. Pomeroy, in an address, 1883:—"There may be a broad distinction between the good and the bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have oath bound obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I have no means of judging the good from the bad. So I turn away from them all to the great Teacher who said, 'In secret have I said nothing.'"

Judge Daniel H. Whitney, (renouncing Mason): "While professed ministers of the Gospel and members of churches are permitted to associate themselves with these organizations, the task to apply a remedy will be a hopeless one; and just so long will the declaration made to me not long since by a high Mason and a worthy man prove true, that 'a Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers—deacons and whoremasters—church members and gamblers—decent men and loafers—drunkards and rowdies, that the All Seeing-Eye ever looked down upon.'"

Hon. Samuel Dexter, in an even letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont:—"One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?"

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Make into a loaf like bread, place in a buttered pan, bake two hours, basting frequently with hot butter water. To be eaten cold.

TABLE SERVICE.

The dish of fruit is to stand in the center of the table. Place a salt cup, with its spoon, and a pepper box for the use of every two people. Put for each person a fruit plate, on which is a fruit doily, and a finger bowl one-third full of water. On the plate at the right of the bowl lay a silver fruit-knife, on the left of the plate a fruit spoon. At the right of each plate place a tumbler for water and another for milk. At the left put a little plate for bread, butter and hot muffins. On the table at the right of the plates, lay a breakfast knife, with the sharp edge of the blade turned toward the plate, a silver knife for butter, and a dessert spoon, with bowl turned up. At the left lay a breakfast fork, with the tines turned up, and a napkin.

If the polished table, without a cloth, is preferred for breakfast, it will be necessary to take thought about hot dishes, none of which must come in direct contact with the table. Either they must be served from a side table, or the polished table must be in some way protected. Table mats have been discarded by many ladies because they are so often merely useful without being ornamental.

Among the handsomest things with which to replace table mats are hand-painted trays, set in rims of split bamboo. The rim protects the table, and prevents the platter from sliding. These should be handled with great care, on account of their value. With one of these trays at the foot of the table, the fruit in the center and the coffee service at the head, all has a finished appearance when breakfast is served.

With the placing of the coffee service at the head of the table, the difficulty of heat again presents itself, and this time cannot be obviated by the side table. The hot water kettle is taken care of by its own lamp stand; but the coffee-pot and hot milk jug still remain. These must be provided for according to their character. If of silver, they should rest on silver stands; if of china, then on china stands; the purpose being to make the stand appear like a part of that which rests upon it, and so be as unnoticeable as possible.—Good Housekeeping.

FARM NOTES.

PROFIT IN ASHES.

Ashes used as a fertilizer are generally very profitable. They supply potash to stimulate the nerves of the growing plants and are thus a true manure. In contact with the clay soil they liberate the phosphate of lime; with manure they hasten decomposition. It does not pay a farmer to produce less on his land than it is capable of producing. A large crop exhausts its fertility more than a small one, but the cost of harvesting the large one is very little more than it costs to harvest a small crop. Part of the profits from the larger crop can be used in restoring the fertility of the land. It is only when there is a profit from crops to restore fertility that failure in farming can be averted. To get immediate returns, potash is necessary in some form, and if properly used, it will enable the farmer to have a succession of large crops, thereby leaving him profitable returns, a part of which can be used in restoring the soil. With small crops and no returns, the end is failure, and ashes help to supply a strong and quick growth.—N. E. Homestead.

A bulletin issued by the Agricultural College of Michigan treats the subject of fertilizers for orchards as follows: "As a fertilizer we have made use of unleached wood ashes. On most soils no other fertilizer need be used for a number of years, but on light or exhausted soils the application of perhaps twenty loads of decomposed stable manure, or if this cannot be obtained, fifty pounds of nitrate of soda and two hundred pounds of fine ground bone per acre which, with one hundred bushels of ashes, will make a complete fertilizer. In case the fresh ashes cannot be obtained, two or three times the quantity mentioned of leached ashes would have a marked effect. Wood ashes have a tendency to solidify and compact the soil, hence they are excellent on light land, but care should be taken not to use them to excess on heavy soil."

It is the practice of good farmers to feed either ashes or wood coal to fattening hogs, especially those fattened with corn. Such hogs often suffer with indigestion, and the alkali corrects the sourness of stomach which is always prevalent when digestion is interfered with. It is possible that coal or ashes may in time injure digestion, just as soda or saleratus in food injures the digestion of people. But for a hog to be killed in a few weeks, permanent lessening of digestive power does not much matter.—Exchange.

Ashes, salt, and lime are recommended as being very beneficial to trees, and sure cure for the aphids.—Ibid.

HARROWING OLD MEADOWS.

Old meadows often get turf-bound, or, what is worse, grow mossy, from inactive circulation of air. A good thorough harrowing may destroy some roots, but it will make what is left grow better, so that the grass will be thicker than on meadows not so treated. The quality of the grass will also be improved.

SAVING BRUSH FOR KINDLING.

Tree prunings, especially from the apple tree, make, even when small, a hot fire in the stove. These used often to be piled up in spring and burned, to get them out of the way. There is less of this waste than used to be common. Cut into short lengths, and tied in bundles, these prunings have a market value in any city or village, and can readily be sold for kindling fires, and for making a summer fire for cooking in hot weather. This saving is worth thinking of by all orchardists.

ADJUSTING THE PLOW.

W. C. Cantor, Broome Co., N. Y.: Much of the ease in holding the plow depends upon its proper adjustment. Many farmers do not appear to realize this fact, and will, and do, plow sod and stubble without making any change whatever in the adjustments. A plow to work properly should, in soil quite free from stone, turn the furrow, with the plowman scarcely touching the handles. Should it be inclined to run to the right or left, in cutting a furrow of the desired

Ayer's Sarsaparilla, better than any other Spring Medicine, fully prepares the system to resist the ailments and epidemics peculiar to March, April, May. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, quickens the appetite and imparts real and lasting benefit to every tissue and organ of the body. Positive proof of this statement may be had from anyone who has faithfully taken this wonderful medicine.

Read the statement of NATHAN S. CLEAVE- LAND, whose father was for 60 years Professor in Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me.: "I believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has no equal as a blood-purifier and Spring medicine. For Loss of Energy, That Tired Feeling, for Debility, Dizziness, Indigestion, or Dyspepsia, or for Loss of Appetite, this remedy has to me always been an unfailing specific. It gives tone to the stomach, aids digestion, overcomes restlessness, irritability, and nervousness, and exerts a beneficial and healthy action as a brain and nerve restorative. My father believed in the great medicinal value of this remedy, and never failed to recommend it, whenever opportunity offered. Some years ago, he urged my youngest sister to take it for debility, and a low state of the blood, and the result of her following his advice was very gratifying. She improved in health and strength from the first and was soon as well as ever. Whenever any one asks me, 'What do you consider the best blood-purifier?' my answer is, 'Ayer's Sarsaparilla.'—NATHAN S. CLEAVE- LAND, 376 Centre St., Jamaica Plain, Mass.

width the line of draft should be changed. If inclined to come to the surface the clevis at the end of the beam should be raised or a new point attached. Do not place the clevis so high that great pressure comes upon the wheel. Modern plows allow the raising and lowering of the end of the handles, and they should be high enough so that when standing in an upright position they may be grasped without stooping. A good point and landside have much to do with the easy running of a plow.

Make It Warm.

Bobbing up and down over them is pretty hot work. That rub, rub, rub on them is the best thing in the world to warm you up, and tire you out, and wear holes in light and delicate summer garments. Why don't you use Pearline, and take it easy? You can keep cool—and yet have the work better done.

Pearline takes away the rubbing, and the washboard, and the warm work. It gives you more time to yourself—and saves your money.

This number goes to press early on Tuesday forenoon. On that day occurs the Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association and the conference of churches on the anti-secrecy work. Reports of both gatherings may be looked for in our next issue.

Farnham Post of the G. A. R., which was deprived of its charter because it insisted on having government pensions paid only to deserving veterans, unless it can regain its charter without a sacrifice of its principles, will continue as an independent secret organization—an off-shoot of the parent society, and it may be the nucleus of a new order in opposition to the G. A. R.

A writer in one of our Lutheran exchanges defends the "dark-lantern" American Protective Association, with its lodge oaths and mysterious signs, on the ground that the papacy, which the A. P. A. so bitterly opposes, is a political as well as a religious institution. The argument will not hold. The A. P. A. is a political society, and has no religion except fidelity to the lodge.

Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle recently made a statement, in an interview, showing that under the existing Sherman silver law the public debt of the United States has increased, during the past eleven months, nearly $50,000,000. A continuation of this financial policy would eventually plunge the country into bankruptcy. When will the people learn wisdom and suppress all the evils that beset us as a nation?

Among the curious complications growing out of that piece of legal absurdity known as the Geary Chinese Exclusion law, is the case of Jue Hawk, a native of China, who delivered one of the most inspiring missionary addresses at last year's international Christian Endeavor convention at New York, and who is now conducting a mission among his own people in Portland, Oregon. Under the restrictions of the Exclusion law, he is prevented from taking part in the approaching Christian Endeavor mass convention in Montreal, because, if he visits Canada as a tabooed alien, he cannot return.

People may laugh at the idea so often and so strongly advocated in these columns, that the secret lodge influence is deleterious to the best interests of the church as well as the home and the state; but the weight of the testimony in this direction is on our side every time. "I don't think Satan could have done better," writes a Mason's wife to us, "than to start secret societies. They are keeping both our old and young men out of the church... I think the Cynosure the best Christian paper that I take; and as long as it keeps its present Christian character, I feel I am a life-subscriber." Now here is a woman who knows what effect the lodge has upon her home and her church, and is not willing to hide her light under a bushel. There are many such. Let them have the prayers of our people.

It used to be said of the Bourbons that they never learned or forgot anything. This used to be true of the Democrats. It would seem, now at least, to be true of the Ohio Republicans. After the great land-slide of last fall, which, if it meant anything, meant a national condemnation of the McKinley Protective Tariff, one would have supposed that Ohio Republicans would have modified the issue—especially as in the last election there was a falling off in Ohio of more than 18,000 from the Harrison vote of 1888. It is too early to predict results. Gov. McKinley is personally popular and may pull through; but, as indicating the general trend of the Republican party, it looks like a preparation for another campaign of disaster and defeat.

Evidently with an understanding that the World's Fair would be closed on Sunday, one of the large manufacturing companies of Chicago, on Friday last, purchased 500 tickets to the World's Fair and distributed them among their employees, so that on Saturday they, with their families, could view the countless treasures of the Exposition, with the eminent satisfaction of enjoying a holiday without loss of wages. This generous action is an example that may be followed with advantage by other large employers of workingmen. Even if the gates are to remain open on Sundays, many of these will be compelled to stay away, some because of conscientious scruples and some because they need all the rest they can get on that day. If these people are to see the Fair at all it must be through the generosity of their employers; and it will be no mighty loss if they have a day of rest as well as one of recreation.

Harry H. Hinde, editor of the Junior American Mechanic, at Kansas City, Mo., writes respecting political affairs as follows: "No time has ever existed which has produced such a radical change in the feelings of a country's people; nor has there ever grown with so much rapidity a party as the one bearing the name 'American Protective Association,' usually called the 'A. P. A.' From the best authority attainable, the estimate of its strength is placed at 1,000,000, with an increase of 10,000 per week. This order does not stand alone, but is supported by many other 'patriotic' orders. It is hoped, and not without reason, that a majority of the elections in the West can be controlled soon, so that those who desire to overthrow the public schools and gain control of the government, may be defeated." The entire movement of the A. P. A. and the other "patriotic" orders is a political scheme against the aggressions of the Romish church. See the obligation of the A. P. A., printed on page 3 of the Cynosure for April 27, and the comment on page 8 of the issue of May 11, 1893.

The "World's Congress of Religions," appointed to meet in Chicago before the Columbian Exposition closes, is not favorably viewed by many Christians; Rev. Dr. Pitzer, of Washington, D. C., upon receiving notice of his election as a member of the advisory council of this heterogeneous gathering, sent in his declination, with this explanation: "To invite the advocates and propagandists of all false and corrupt religions to meet the advocates of the Christian religion on terms of religious equality; to furnish the hall and congregations, and all the appurtenances of worship, seems to me to subject our Divine Lord to unspeakable humiliation at our hands. I cannot be a party to this crucifixion in the house of his friends." "What concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" (2 Cor. 6:15).

The danger and folly of relying upon circumstantial evidence alone in important criminal and other law cases has just received a new exemplification as remarkable as any that have ever preceded it. The circumstances are thus related in a telegram from Galveston, Tex.: "On December 12, 1892, Peter Meggs was convicted at Anderson, Grimes county, of the murder of Mike Ferry, on purely circumstantial evidence, and sentenced to a life term in the State penitentiary, being sent to Huntsville. Two or three months after his arrival there Mike Ferry, the man he was supposed to have murdered, bobbed up in western Texas, where he was arrested for committing a felony, tried and convicted and sentenced to a short term in the same prison where his supposed murderer was incarcerated. The men recognized each other immediately, but Ferry, being legally dead, cannot testify in behalf of Meggs, and the latter, being a convict, cannot testify in his own behalf." Under these circumstances, one would readily suppose that the prison doors would at once fly open to permit Peter Meggs to walk forth a free man; but not so. The case had to be referred to the governor by the lawyers, and the governor solicited to pardon the prisoner for a crime that he never committed! Such is law in a country where Negroes are burned at the stake for penitentiary crimes.

ORGANIZED SECRETISM.

ITS RELATION TO THE CHURCH, THE STATE AND THE HOME.

[Oration prepared for the public session of the Theophanian Literary Society (College Ministerial Society) of the Nebraska Wesleyan University, and delivered during the recent Commencement week, by Rev. Wm. Herbert Stanley, University Place, Neb., a member of the Nebraska Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.]

There is a hydra-headed monster in our midst, in whose contour and on whose visage the careful and intelligent observer perceives unmistakable lines, that prove its parentage to be none other than that of the great red dragon that Michael and his angels cast out of the celestial city.

It is not a new creation, nor has it suddenly and unexpectedly alighted upon the stage of the "theatre of life" during the enactment of the "drama of Nineteenth Centuryism," as if coming from some unknown realm. On the contrary, we have known it and felt its chilling presence and its blighting breath ever since its birth in the earliest days of the history of man. At that time it was as small and weak as any creature when it first opens its eyes to the light of day. And although the heel of the seed of woman has off-times bruised its venomous head, man has never aroused from his lethargy and exterminated it.

Now it has waxed strong and grown to well-nigh incalculable dimensions; and not only laughs at the power of freedom and justice, but even looks defiantly into the eyes of the Creator himself. Like a mighty octopus, it has thrown its multitudinous arms around our sacred, civic and social institutions—the church, the state and the home—crushing them and slowly sapping their life-blood. And now we begin to feel the force of the evangelist's words: "When the Son of man cometh, will he find faith on the earth?"—to realize that our boasted freedom and liberty is turned into slavery and servitude; and to see with horror its slimy coils dragging our loved ones from our fireside circles!

This beast we have designated by the term "secretism," a word not found in Webster, but brought into being and use by the opponents of secret orders to express what we believe to be a perverted secrecy. Secretism, organized or unorganized, is always wrong; secrecy is not always so.

This beast of which I have spoken is the most subtle antagonist of the Lamb and his church. It rejects the Christ from all its principles, plans and actions, and deliberately and openly erects rival altars. At these shrines it bids its subjects worship and covenant, with vows so blasphemous, by chants so vile, and in postures and costumes so debasing, that they would put to shame an honest heathen. Secretism sets up a false religion and establishes its devotees in the town of loose morality, where they may rest securely, enjoy fraternal relations each with the other, finally receive the "Well-done" of their Right Worthy Grand Sovereign, and dwell in bliss forevermore; provided they have lavishly poured into its yearning coffers of their hard-earned gold, for which they receive and expect no adequate return. Appealing to the baser passions of human nature, by the pomp and glitter of its titles and regalia, and the fascination of its secrecy, it attracts into its traps the best of men, and ensnares even the elect, blinding their eyes, benumbing their consciences, and killing their yearning after the holiness of God. It draws within its coils the noblest minds, enslaves the energies, and steals the wealth of the grandest soldiers of King Immanuel; cripples the action of the church militant, retards its progress, and holds it in derision.

Secretism is the avowed and deadly enemy of civil liberty and good government. It tramples upon the social, religious and political rights of citizenship, defeats the administration of justice, and hurls defiance at every civil power which it cannot control. It drives its fangs deep into the body of every political institution under heaven, and sends its venom coursing through every vein and artery. Not a caucus nor a polling-place where some part of its hideous form is not seen; and by the spell of its fascinating glance it moves our municipal, state and national elections almost at its caprice. Under the bonds of its disloyal secret oaths, it spreads anarchy and treason, and countenances every form of vice and crime. No deed is without its compass, or below its stoop, if it will lead to the desired end. The low call or muffled whistle, its passwords and its grips, are the signs for concealing any act or covering any crime. The glitter of its eyes flashes between the attorney and the judge, from the bench to the jurors' box, and every phase of legal proceedings is within its power; the red-handed villain goes free, while to the innocent and the guiltless are meted out the exactions of a so-called, but perverted, justice. Thus our courts are corrupted, and the ends of the law defeated, by agents and means marshalled under the scepter of organized secretism.

It establishes itself within our legislative halls; enjoys the freedom of the House; dominates in the lobby; secures admittance to every committee room; and is an eager spectator in the gallery. By its subtlety and the celerity of its invisible movements it makes itself felt in nearly every act of legislation and administration; stays the onward march of freedom; and locks the wheels of justice.

It is not only a false religion and a fraud, but a virtual conspiracy against both church and state.

To have secured such ascendancy and domination over the individuals that compose the church and state, it has struck deep and telling blows at the security and happiness of the home. The sacred domicile has been broken into, and its love and devotion disturbed, and the husband and father is dragged from its portals. Once well within the power of the beast, the companionship of loved ones loses its charms, and is superseded by the fascinations of the lodge-room, the convivial banquet and the club, with all their attendant vices, lewdness and obscenity. Finally, the sweet and restful influences of the home are considered effeminate, and all holy aspirations are killed. The wife and mother perceives the heart of her protector to be slowly stolen from her, and night after night sits in sadness alone until the small hours of the following day. Her children's anxious inquiries as to papa's continual absence bring forth only the sad reply: "Papa's at lodge, dear." To calm her troubled spirit, and soothe her aching breast, the wily demon comes and whispers in her ear, "Never mind; it is all for the best; when he goes the way of all the earth, I'll see that the funeral is looked after, and write you a cheque for a thousand or two besides; and his absence now will prepare you for your loneliness after his death." To which the queenly heart, if it were not too unselfish to voice its feelings in words, would reply: "Away with your cunning devices and your poor consolation! Give me back my own, with his early love and devotion, and his earnings through life, and keep your paltry dollars after his death." In this way the home is torn apart and spoiled of its charms.

Not content with this measure of success, the dragon determines to have both within its grasp; so it provides an associate lodge for the gentler sex, appeals to the already lonely heart with an anticipation of companionship and pleasure, fires the feminine curiosity, and entices it also away! Soon maternal duties are forgotten in the whirl of fraternal excitement, and home ceases to be. Thus organized secretism is the arch-enemy of the glorious trinity of Christian achievement—the church, the state and the home. Shall we permit this monster to triumph and reign, and even to set himself up within our own hearts? Allow it to grasp the reins of philanthropy and rob the Christ of his glory? Suffer it to allure men from all that is good, and right, and noble, and holy, and seal them for eternity? Shall we not rather cry out against it and crush it, emulating the example of Him who said, "In secret I have said nothing?" until all that will be saved shall be gathered into the brotherhood of the church of God, and bound with the tie that has been proven to be the bond of perfectness.

OBERLIN AND THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The June number of the North American Review has the reply of Dr. Rainsford to his critics and his continued advocacy of the Christian saloon as the remedy for the evils of intemperance. Some are disposed to smile at the erratic D. D., and even to suggest that a mad-house is more suitable for him than a pulpit.

But let them withhold their criticism, or at least take the beam out of their own eye before they seek for the mote in their brothers' eye.

If we are to assume that the business of war is to take rank with other departments of human activity; if the profession of arms is to be considered just as legitimate as that of the law, of medicine, or of the ministry; if we are to regard it as our duty to respond to every call of our country when engaged in war, whether right or wrong; and if, moreover, a Christian ought to swear unconditional obedience to the commands of another, even when such commands may involve the shedding of the blood of the innocent, then, indeed, we may rightfully teach our boys the arts of war, and to delight in its pantomimic performances. If, on the other hand, we, as disciples of the Prince of peace, are to "follow peace with all men"; if we believe with Justinian, "inter arma, silent leges" (among arms, law is silent), or, as some great military captains have said, "war implies the suspension of every principle of morality," then surely it is not the business of Christians, and all things that tend to give it public favor are to be deplored.

I was led to these reflections by hearing it announced from the pulpit of the First church, that the Oberlin Boys' Brigade would be addressed in the Second church that afternoon by Rev. H. Russell, and the character of the movement explained.

Accordingly, at about two o'clock I walked down town by the side of a fine young man, the son of one of the deacons, and who (the deacon) is a most worthy citizen. The young man was, like the rest, dressed in full regimentals, and had his musket and fixed bayonet. Had he been walking down street that Sunday afternoon in his working clothes, with an axe or a hoe on his shoulder, his father would have been greatly scandalized. So would many others; but since it was to play war, and to learn the art of killing people, it made a difference.

The brigade, which numbers about thirty-two, met for drill at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., and then adjourned to the church. Mr. Russell said he had long anticipated and desired such a movement as the Boys' Brigade; that in order to fit himself for it he had enlisted in the Missouri militia. He had told his Sunday-school boys that he thought they "did not have fun enough of the right kind," and that if each would bring an additional boy they would be organized into a military company. He dwelt at length on the benefits of the plan, and said that some had supposed that this movement tended to promote the spirit and practice of war. "So far," said he, "from producing such an effect, it results in just the opposite. The boys who fight on the streets, after they join the brigade come to respect each other." He said that it was not true of actual war that it made men disposed to conflicts; "for the old soldiers," he said, "all loved each other more than ordinary citizens."

Well, I thought of Dr. Rainsford and of the many others who have held that the free use of wine and beer was the best remedy for intemperance, and of others still, who have held that licensed houses of prostitution (under careful inspection) are the best remedy for the social evil; and I could but mourn that the good people of Oberlin could see the inconsistency of only some and not of all of these sophistries.

Oberlin, O.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

I was very much pleased to see a very short article on secret societies, by Bro. Munger, in the Crisis some time ago. This is a question that none but God's true children are going to "meddle" with, because they will be sure to suffer for it; and mere professors are not going to endure much for Christ's sake—except bad weather. They tell us that America is a free country, but secret societies are not "up" for free discussion, and whoever joins them is no longer free, but oath-bound. He must obey the will of, perhaps, an inferior "superior". They are the offspring of darkness. They cannot, will not, dare not endure criticism. What good cause, in a free country, needs to lurk behind screens? What is their object that they must work under cover, like conspirators?

Some of the more popular secret societies claim to be charitable institutions. We may well doubt their assertions when we see their charity extends no farther than to relatives of deceased members. I do not see any charity in helping support the families of deceased members, when, in order to join the society, you had to swear to do it. I do not call that charity that returns to a member in distress a small portion of what he has already paid into the lodge. I do not see any charity in paying in a certain sum to relieve the distressed, when you do it in order that your own family may receive the same benefit, should they ever need it.

Charity? Pooh! Why, a band of outlaws would look after the widows and orphans of deceased comrades if they had sworn among themselves to do it. "There is honor among thieves." If you do good to them that do good to you, what is that more than others do?

What are some of the characteristics of charity? Let Paul answer: "Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up," etc. What does he mean by "vaunteth not itself"? Webster defines vaunt:—to boast; to make vain display of one's own worth, attainments or decorations; to talk with vain ostentation; to brag. Is not bragging one of the prominent characteristics of these self-styled charitable organizations? How they boast of the charitable things they do! How often they parade the streets of our cities and towns with no other object in view than to "show off" and make a "great display of their decorations"!

All their attempts at charity are made to be seen of men, and like the Pharisees who loved to pray on the street corners, they have their reward.

Their "charity" is not charity, because "charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up". Compare, for a moment, lodge charity with Christian charity. In most of the lodges it costs from $10 to $25 to get in. Christ invites all, without money and without price. From the United States statistics of 1883 this was taken: A fraternity of 550,000 members received $5,000,000. Of this $2,000,000 were given to the poor, the sick and the afflicted, and it took over $3,000,000 to cover the regular expenses. So it cost that fraternity $3 to give away $2, while it cost the church only about ten cents to give away $2, according to the United States statistics.

The lodge never aids anyone outside the relatives of deceased members, while the church makes no distinction among the needy. Lodges spend much money that might be used to alleviate suffering in preparing for their grand parades. They can get out and march up and down the streets in their low-pinned bibs, numerous trinkets and an astonishing amount of pomposity. They can block the streets, and business must go around blocks when they are on the path; but let the Salvation Army, whose only aim is to save men, get out in their uniforms and march through the streets to their music, and they will be arrested for making a nuisance of themselves. Let a preacher gather a crowd around him for a short time in some of our cities, and woe to him. Woe to the man who denies himself and tries to raise fallen humanity by lifting up the standard of the cross. The world has no use for him. They cannot put up with any of his noise, but the lodge is all right. It does not try to elevate humanity; it does not bother people about their sins; it does not ask anyone to come to Christ; it only wants to show itself in all its gaudy decorations, that outsiders may admire it and see the advantage to be gained by joining. Like the whitewashed sepulchers of olden time, they present a fair exterior, but the interior will not bear examination, because it is full of corruption. Christ says, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them; for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Lodgemen sometimes say that the church ordinances are childish. One thing is certain—there is nothing about them that needs to be hid. Another thing is certain; while the lodge has claimed that all other men noted in history were prominent among them, they have never claimed Christ. Where Christ could not and would not go, we had better not venture, "but rather reprove them". There is where the hard place is. The 7,000 that had not bowed the knee to Baal were not worth as much to God's cause as the one man who dared reprove sin.—A. M. Streeter, in Messiah's Herald, Santa Clara, Cal.

Secret societies would soon lose their "grip" upon the people were it not for the moral support that they receive from ministers and church members. How an intelligent person can entertain the Christian's hope while the conscience is enslaved by the selfish despotism of certain secret institutions of the "baser sort," it is difficult to understand.

Freemasonry, the mother of the whole brood of secret societies, with her extrajudicial and profane oaths, is a foe to good government and free institutions, and does not hesitate to promote its infernal work by assassination and murder. We have reason to believe that its altars, temples, priests, Christless prayers, blasphemous titles, and its half-heathen funerals constitute it a false religion and a dangerous foe to the kingdom of Christ.

The people should be thoroughly enlightened and faithfully warned. Every Christian should sound the alarm. That minister who willfully remains ignorant of the true character of oath-bound secrecy, and will not warn the people against this enemy of Christ and his church, should be regarded as a blind guide, unworthy of confidence and support.—Rev. B. R. Jones, in the Free Methodist.

WASHINGTON ON PRIVATE INQUISITORIAL SOCIETIES.

In 1786, when politics were by no means so corrupt as at present, George Washington was appealed to by his nephew to ascertain his sentiments concerning a private association called the "Patriotic Society," the alleged purpose of which was "to inquire into the state of public affairs; to consider in what the true happiness of the people consists, and what are the evils which have pursued and still continue to molest us—the means of attaining the former and escaping the latter; to inquire into the conduct of those who represent us, and to give them our sentiments upon those laws which ought to be or are already made."

To this appeal Washington, with keen, clear insight, answered: "Generally speaking, I have seen as much evil as good result from such societies as you describe the constitution of yours to be. They are a kind of imperium in imperio, and as often clog as facilitate public measures. I am no friend to institutions, except in local matters, which are wholly, or in a great measure, confined to the county of the delegates. . . . May not a few members of this society, more sagacious and designing than the rest, direct the measures of it to private views of their own?"

Could Washington now return to the flesh and see how the people of our times are afflicted with a host of blackmailing associations, setting law at defiance, bulldozing our courts, exercising the mischievous powers of secret inquisitions, persecuting the innocent, and stopping at no means, however foul, to secure the conviction of their victims, while collecting money from the credulous and gullible under pretence of carrying out good moral purposes, he would express his views with greater force of denunciatory vigor than he employed in his answer to his nephew.—Ed. W. Chamberlain.

A MINISTER'S STRUGGLE.

[It is not enough for a Christian, convicted of the evils of secret oath-bound societies, to stay away from the lodge and keep silence concerning its iniquities. He must openly renounce it, and forever oppose it. So Pastor Wheeler of the M. E. church found it, and his experience was published in the Wesleyan Methodist. First, he related his struggle in giving up the tobacco habit; then he said:]

Some months before this, I had opened my heart on the subject of Masonry to Bro. O. P. Pitcher, a member of our conference, and found him to be a decided Anti-mason. And now, about four weeks after giving up the use of tobacco, we met again, and I told him of my tobacco experience, when he suggested to me that it might be my duty to openly renounce Masonry also. To this I replied: "I do not know; I felt condemned for using tobacco and have left it off, and I am walking in the light as far as I know. I do not go near the lodge, but have never felt any conviction that it was my duty to openly renounce Masonry; and, if it is my duty, I should think I would be convicted of it." He answered: "Bro. Wheeler, I have noticed that men's convictions often go in the direction of their wishes. I should not wonder if you find that you have something more to do than simply stay away from the lodge."

These words were as an arrow, and they went home; and though I made no reply, yet I thought, and this question came to me: "What if I should be convicted that it is my duty to openly renounce Masonry? Would I do it? I guess not. I am afraid that I would not dare do it."

From that time the question of open renunciation of Masonry did not leave me, though it was not until months after that the question came to me in a very serious way, and very clearly.

I was taken sick, and my physician told me that my case was somewhat critical, and might result in death. I had at that time a little means, and I made my will. The doctor attending me wrote it, and when it was completed and put away, I was left alone. To make one's will is a solemn thing, and while thinking of it and death, and the beyond, the question of Masonry came suddenly to my mind, and it seemed to me that it had all the force and very much the form that it would have if spoken in audible words. I turned my face to the wall of my bedroom, and this question came to me: "Are you going to die and leave the impression on the world that you are in sympathy with a thing that you feel to be such an abomination as Masonry?" I have not forgotten it, and I think I give just about the words that came to me then.

This question stirred me so deeply that I ought to give my testimony against Masonry I could not doubt, but to do so seemed a greater cross than I could bear. Then there came to me this thought: "Can I not write out a statement of my feelings as to Masonry, and seal it up, to be read, like my will, after I am dead?" But the answer that came to me was: "That would be cowardly. If Masonry is wrong, you ought to say so while living, and meet the consequences. That is the way the early Christians did, though it cost many of them their lives."

During these thoughts my wife came into my room, and I told her my feelings. She thought me over-scrupulous and foolish, and reminded me that in case I should die, it might be a benefit to her if I remained true to the order. Of course, as to this latter thought, I knew that it might be true, though I now know that it was by no means certain.

I made no attempt to reason with her upon the subject, but did say, "Well, I want you to understand that should I die, I do not want the Masons to bury me. I want none of that ceremony around my grave."

I recovered and resumed my work in the ministry, not coming out at once as I ought to have done, but feeling sure that I must openly renounce Masonry. Whether I should have done so if left to choose my own time and way, I cannot say, but I was not left without a still greater force being brought to bear upon me.

I was taken sick again, and my sickness was pronounced heart disease. I lost my voice, and thought that my life-work was surely done. Conference time came, and I learned that there was given to me the superannuated relation, and, after a few weeks, self and family moved to South Edwards, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. At Edwards village, five miles from here, my lodge held its meetings, and not long after moving to South Edwards I was placed in a position to choose openly between the lodge and Christ.

At this crisis, grace prevailed and Pastor Wheeler publicly renounced the lodge.

REV. R. N. COUNTEE'S WORK IN TEXAS.

In last week's Cynosure appeared a letter from Rev. R. N. Countee (colored missionary), recounting his recent experiences in the war upon secret societies.

A letter from a minister of the Gospel in Galveston, Rev. A. Barbour, printed in the Memphis (Tenn.) Christian Herald for June 8, brings the following additional intelligence from Mr. Countee and his work:

"Rev. R. N. Countee, of Memphis, Tenn., came to Galveston during the session of our Baptist Foreign Mission Convention, of Texas. He has been with us about two weeks, with his native from Africa, Prince Sabi, a remarkable young man, who has a bright intellect, and who has attained a very fair and forcible use of our language. There is no question about his being a success as a lecturer upon the customs and habits of Africa.

"I must say, without fear of successful contradiction, having had eight or ten years' experience in the Christian work of the Baptist denomination, and having also had the pleasure of listening to some of the ablest divines of this and other connections, that Rev. Mr. Countee is one among the ablest preachers I ever listened to. His arguments are philosophical and convincing, driving right down into the heart and intellect. His gestures alone preach and hold his audience spell-bound.

"As for his acquaintance with the doctrines of the Baptist church, this able preacher is almost a walking encyclopædia. His knowledge of the polity of the Baptist church is something that every young preacher, like myself, should seek to possess. And for preaching practical religion, he has no superior.

"The sermons he has delivered from the different pulpits in Galveston (this Sodom) will be like the bread cast upon the water—it shall be seen not many days hence.

"The worldly Christians of this city have always contended that they can mix with the world, and yet be Christians, showing forth that light which our blessed Lord told them to show, that the world may see their good works and glorify our Father in heaven; while the brother, with his eloquence and earnestness, full of the Holy Ghost, thunders God's Word to them, telling them that they are Pharisees, Scribes and hypocrites, and that God requires them to come out from among the world, to be separate and to be God's men. He exhorts them to stop bowing to 'Grand Masters' of worldly institutions, and neglecting their obligation that they owe the church and God.

"While these able words were being delivered with power, some of the society people, from the looks on their faces, trembled. From all appearances, they were exclaiming in their hearts, 'I perceive that much learning doth make thee beside thyself! Stop at this moment; we will hear thee at a more convenient season.'

"The sermons of this able preacher are having the desired effect; they will ring in the ears of generations to come. When he shall have gone to join the angelic host in singing praises around the dazzling throne of God, these sermons will be here in Galveston, shaping the destiny of the young generation for God, and for our Christ, who died to redeem the world."

Mr. Moody is no stranger to Cynosure readers, and his testimony against the lodges is not new; but this seems to be a favorable time for reprinting it, for the benefit of those patrons who have never read it. It is as follows:

IN FARWELL HALL, CHICAGO.

In his Bible reading in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Dec. 14th, 1876, Mr. Moody took for his theme, "Walking with God!" As one of the conditions of this state he mentioned separation from the ungodly, quoting Paul, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." These words, he said, must mean something, and he made three distinct applications of them: as forbidding business partnerships with unbelievers, entering the marriage relation with an unbeliever, and joining secret lodges. On the last topic he said: "I expect I will be treading on some one's toes, perhaps some one in the audience, and perhaps some of these ministers; but out with it. I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then repressing their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked with unbelievers. 'But,' says some one, 'what do you say about these secret temperance orders?' I say the same thing. Do no evil that good may come. You never can reform anything by unequally yoking yourself with ungodly men. True reformers separate themselves from the world. 'But,' you say, 'you had one of them in your church.' So I did, but when I found out what it was I cleaned it out like a cage of unclean birds. They drew in a lot of young men of the church in the name of temperance, and then they got up a dance and kept them out till after twelve at night. I was a partaker of their sin, because I let them get into the church; but they were cleaned out, and they never came back. This idea of promoting temperance by yoking oneself up in that way with ungodly men is abominable. The most abominable meeting I ever attended was a temperance meeting in England. It was full of secret societies and there was no Christianity about it. I felt as though I had got into Sodom, and got out as soon as I could. A man rescued from intemperance by a society not working on Gospel principles, gets filled with pride and boasts about reforming himself. Such a man is harder to save than a drunkard. 'But, Mr. Moody,' some say, 'if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches.' But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

MR. MOODY IN BOSTON, MARCH 31, 1877.

In a glowing discourse on the subject "Walking with God," he is reported by the Boston Globe as saying: "What right has a praying man to marry a frivolous, scoffing young lady that hates Jesus Christ, the Bridegroom of the church of God? 'Be ye not unequally yoked together.' It means more than that. What right has a Christian man to be in some of those lodges where there are infidels and skeptics that care not and scoff at the Word of God? The Word of God pumps right through such a profession of faith. People want me to JOIN CLUBS, REFORM CLUBS, LODGES, ETC.

Not I. I will not yoke myself up with anything of the sort. Separation is what we want if we would have power. Let us not vacillate here and there and be catering to public opinion. I had rather be rejoicing in Christ, with God leading me, alone, than have all Boston applauding, walking without God."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Modern Progress—The C. C. C.—Legislative matters done and undone.—What some W. C. T. U. women did.—Congregational ministers and the surplice.—Keeping Saturday night.—Romanism and crime.

"In our modern world everything resembles an encampment, and institutions are like tents beneath which men's ideas bivouac for a night to commence marching anew with the dawn. For a century past what moral harvest has had time for ripening? What day has had its morrow?" So writes Emilie Souvestres, the Attic philosopher. Although the quotation is French, the application is peculiarly appropriate to America. Our forefathers thought they were on the very apex of political progress when they formulated the "No taxation without representation" theory; and now, a hundred years later, some of us think that in extending this axiom to women we have got about as far in the march of human progress as we can go, when in fact the road winds on and on indefinitely. We have abolished slavery, but up springs other forms of it, the convict system at the South, the cheap labor of needlewomen and cash girls at the North. The golden morrow has not dawned yet. Still humanity presses forward, like a child after the rainbow, and believes as devoutly in the good time coming as ever our fathers did who yet died without the sight.

Why can there not be moral trusts and combines? The C. C. C., or Co-operative Council of Clubs, is an instance of what might be done if the leading members of all our reform and benevolent organizations would form themselves into such a trust. The C. C. C. is composed of a few representative women from such societies as the Industrial Union, W. C. T. U., New England Woman's Press Association, Moral Reform Society, etc. These women are doctors, lawyers, authors, and active workers along the various lines of social philanthropy, and already they have made their influence felt in such practical movements as half-holidays for clerks, better protection for working girls, greater cleanliness on the street-cars, and other matters connected with the public morals and health which takes a woman who has touched life at so many points that she has grown wise and tender and strong, to notice and see just what to do with the rough edges and the seamy places in our social existence.

The Great and General Court of Massachusetts might well adopt the Episcopalian form of confession, for they have certainly done things they ought not, and left undone the things they ought to have done. They have failed to amend the liquor-laws in any important particular; they killed the bill for municipal suffrage for women; they rejected the bill to prohibit the sale of cigarettes, while on the labor question they can show but one measure alone, passed in the interest of street railway employes, diminishing their hours of work from twelve to ten hours per day, against the numbers which failed to pass;—the bills to regulate stock-watering, the consolidation of railroads, the exercise of undue political influence by office-holders, and others which were of much more interest to the people than the six hundred Acts and Resolves which have received the Governor's approval and are now duly recorded in the legislative Blue Book. But they did wind up the endowment orders, which may be considered as some slight offset to their many sins of omission.

The Rhode Island Legislature stands prorogued till next January according to the text of Gov. Brown's proclamation, which Speaker Owen, contrary to all precedent, ordered the clerk to throw into the waste basket. The Supreme Court will have to answer the question whether that is a legal adjournment in which House and Senate fail to concur. These legislative muddles are growing quite too common.

In Maine, on the Kennebec river, there is a little village called Pinshon's Ferry. It is a beautiful bit of rural peace, where one might live in Rip Van Winkle fashion for half a century in happy content and let the world wag on as it will. But it has a loyal W. C. T. U. band, who, after the fashion of women when they get launched in reform work, never know when to stop. There was no church in the place, and no building where they could hold their meetings. So these women resolved that a hall should be built, to be called Temperance Hall, where religious services should be held, and which they could have under their control. With them to plan was to do. They went directly to work to raise the money, not by fairs nor raffles, nor any other cunningly devised scheme for getting money out of the world's people, but each made herself a committee of one, and, armed with a subscription paper, waylaid everybody, from the summer boarder to the vendor of milk and eggs. Many little makes a mickle, and in process of time they found themselves able to lay the foundations and put up a neat, roomy building, well-adapted to the purposes which they had in mind. But the story does not end here. These women, like Jael of old, put their hand to the nail and their right hand to the workman's hammer. They nailed on the clapboards, they painted and papered, and made up by their own individual labor any shortage in funds, till now it stands in that quiet little eastern village an embodiment of faith and works, a monument to woman's pluck and perseverance, which can hardly be surpassed even if paralleled in any other part of our common country.

Congregational ministers, so says the Congregationalist, are more and more favoring the use of the black gown or surplice. Isn't this another step Romeward? A distinctive dress in the pulpit emphasizes the priestly idea, and builds a barrier between minister and people. The Presbyterians are right in refusing to allow their clergy to wear anything which savors of "vestments."

Seventy-five or a hundred years ago, people in New England kept Saturday night as a part of Sunday, and those were the days when Sabbath-keeping was the rule and not the exception. The present increasing fashion of holding entertainments on Saturday evenings is one among the many influences which have worked to the undermining of our New England Sabbath. The old-fashioned way of preparing for Sunday, by doing all necessary work the day before, was one of the strongest barriers to hedge in its sacred hours from the inroads of business and pleasure. Four or five hundred trains per Sunday, unlawfully run, was reported at the recent meeting of the Massachusetts General Association. If all Christian people would take a right stand in this direction, how much might be done to help reduce this tide of Sabbath desecration, and give the overworked railroad employes an opportunity to become acquainted with their children.

Fall River shows an extraordinary criminal record, especially as regards homicides, which far surpasses even Boston with all its slum element. That it is a manufacturing place and filled with foreigners does not entirely explain the fact, for there are other manufacturing centers in New England which do not begin to show so high a percentage. But there are few of her towns and cities more completely under Roman Catholic domination and control. The pig-headed stupidity of her public officials has been wonderfully illustrated in the Borden case. Justice with her eyes bandaged, a helpless captive in the hands of the Irish Romanists, who constitute the authorities of Fall River, would make quite a telling cartoon.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, June 14, 1893.

Surely no more striking illustration of the uncertainty of human life was ever given than the catastrophe in the old building in which President Lincoln was assassinated, a catastrophe which caused the immediate death of a score of men without a moment's warning and injured, some of them very seriously, nearly four times as many. It was as if the voice of God had said to us all "Prepare, prepare, while yet ye have the opportunity, to meet your God." In nearly every pulpit in Washington, last Sunday, the accident was referred to, and in several the entire sermon was devoted to bringing the sad lesson home to the people. It has been, and is still being discussed in every household in the city, the evidence now being taken by the coroner's jury and the military court of inquiry, which are trying to ascertain if any person was responsible for the awful accident, through having neglected seeing that proper precautions were taken in the making of an excavation under the building, serving to keep the matter prominently before the public.

It would seem to be difficult to select an occupation the followers of which would be in less danger from accidental death than that of a government clerk, and yet, in one awful minute the falling floors of this old building carried twenty of them into the presence of God, wounded a large number and gave the remainder of the nearly 500 men employed in the building an experience that can never be forgotten by them. The people of Washington, who whatever their other faults are always generous to those in need or distress, are nobly responding to a call for contributions to aid the families of those who were killed, and already the total amount contributed exceeds $25,000 and is still growing rapidly. A number of them left large families entirely unprovided for.

Two of the texts from which sermons were preached on the disaster were so appropriate that I quote them. That of Rev. Dr. E. S. Todd, of Hamline church, was,—"Or those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them; think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you nay: but except ye repent ye shall likewise perish." And that of Rev. I. W. Canter, of Mount Vernon Place church, was—"Therefore be ye always ready, for ye know not the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh." The last-named began his sermon by impressively saying: "It was the voice of God speaking to us in admonitory accents."

In consequence of this accident, and of the belief that one man is largely if not entirely responsible for the loss of the lives, the meetings of the coroner's jury have been attended by great excitement, and at one time there was actually danger that the national capital would be disgraced by an attempt on the part of frenzied citizens to take the law into their own hands by making an attack upon that man, but fortunately wiser counsels of cooler heads prevailed. Owing to the large number of witnesses to be heard, it may be a week before the inquest is closed and a verdict rendered.

There is at least one liquor-seller in Washington who believes now, if he never did before, that the sins of fathers are visited upon their children. While this man was violating the laws of both God and man, by selling liquor on the Sabbath day, his eighteen-year old son, while drunk, engaged in a brawl which resulted in his death. This father's feelings may be imagined when he was informed, while in the dock of the police court the next morning, that his son was dead, murdered as a direct result of drinking the cursed stuff with which his father was constantly poisoning the sons of other men. If that father has a heart that is not entirely deadened to every ennobling emotion, he must, in that first moment of his fatherly grief, have for once realized the dreadful evil of the traffic in which he is engaged. Would to God that such a realization of the evil they do could be, without the murder of a son, brought home to the conscience of every liquor-seller in the world!

It seems to me every year "Children's Day" in the churches is made more interesting. The day was observed in nearly all of the Methodist churches last Sunday.

At a meeting of the Sunday-school Union of the District, held Monday evening, delegates were elected from the following denominations to the World's Sunday-school Convention and the seventh International Sunday-school Convention, which are to be held at St. Louis from Aug. 31 to Sept. 6, next: English Lutheran, Baptist, Protestant Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal and Christian. *

REFORM NEWS.

ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 12, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We have opened the war on organized sin in real earnest here on the Pacific coast.

On Saturday night, June 3, we lectured at Eureka, Clark county, Washington, to a crowded house. Although quite a number of lodge men were present and manifested considerable irritation, yet their deportment was good. All the vast audience eagerly took tracts, and seemed anxious to obtain more light on the subject.

At Fourth Plain U. B. church (Radical), Sunday morning, we had a fair audience, who were very attentive. After the discourse we again distributed our literature, which was freely received. At Harmony school-house, in the evening, we had a crowded house, anxious to hear the truth. At each of these points we elected delegates to attend our convention at Canby, Ore., on the 15th of August.

On Thursday evening, the 8th, we spoke at Kalama, the county seat of Cowlitz county, Washington, to a fair audience; and on Saturday night and Sunday morning and evening, the 10th and 11th, three times at the Wesleyan Methodist church, East Portland. These were quite interesting services.

Rev. T. H. Organ and wife, the excellent pastors of this church, were elected delegates to the convention, with Mr. and Mrs. Barton as alternates.

At each of the points where we have spoken thus far we have been kindly invited to return.

This work is of God, and we ask the prayers of all for his blessing on us in our work. We wish each community in Oregon and Washington to elect two delegates to the convention. We cannot come to each place before that time; so please do not wait, but act at once. A general attendance is desired. More anon.

P. B. WILLIAMS.

MT. TABOR, Ore., June 14, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Elder P. B. Williams, one of the leading ministers in the church of the United Brethren in Christ (radical), delivered three sermons in the Union Chapel in Center addition to Portland, Ore., on Saturday evening and Sunday, June 10 and 11. His subject on Saturday evening was the accursed liquor traffic, and was handled without gloves; Sunday morning the cold, dead, formal condition of the church of to-day, the unholy methods of raising money for the support of the ministry, her worldly conformity, and therefore powerless condition to accomplish the work for which she was ordained; Sunday evening, Masonry and kindred secret societies were dealt with in a very plain, pointed and yet loving way, uncovering the "horns and hoofs" of the institution in such a manner that it was easy to see that it is a child of darkness and therefore not of God, for "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." 1 John 1: 5.

We have an anti-secret society here which is auxiliary to the N. C. A. of Chicago, Ill. We now number something over five hundred. Bro. Williams is secretary. We hold our second annual meeting at Canby, Oregon, August 15 and 16. Bro. Williams leaves the regular pastorate this year and steps out as an evangelist, under God, in the interest of the society. Will all the readers of this paper pray that the real power of God may rest upon Bro. Williams and the organization on this coast, as it did on Gideon and the three hundred; for we, like they, intend to "stand in our places around the camp" until the enemy is conquered, for "in God we trust."

T. H. ORGAN,

Pastor Wesleyan Methodist Church.

FROM REV. WM. FENTON.

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 16, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The United Norwegian Church of America adjourned its annual convention yesterday. It had been in session in the Swedish Mission Tabernacle of Minneapolis for one week. This was a large and important gathering, representing one thousand churches. The absorbing topic before them was their school question, which occupied so much of their time that they could not even consider the resolutions on secret societies prepared by their committee on that subject, and they are laid over for next year's meeting. They, however, most cordially set apart the vestibule of the Tabernacle for the exposition of secret societies; and tracts, Cynosures and other publications of the National Christian Association were profusely dispensed during four and a half days. Their pastors and intelligent laymen appear to be wide awake on the works of the devil as displayed in lodgery; and we may trust that it means something more than the salvation of the churches from the clutches of the lodge; even the defence of truth, the honor of God, and the preservation of the Bible from the vandalism of devil worshippers.

Yours truly, W. FENTON.

Do you take the Cynosure? Why not? Do you pay for it? Why don't you?

CORRESPONDENCE.

MEDICINE AND DRUNKENNESS.

CHICAGO, June 19, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—There is plenty of solid food for thought in the facts and figures embodied in Dr. Chapman's paper on this subject, read before the Chicago Pathological Society, of which he is a member, and since published in a medical magazine. While in some respects he approves of the modern cures in scientific and careful hands, he makes public the statement that "the drugs combined in the injected dose, besides the bichloride of gold, are strychnine, belladonna, cocaine, quinine, aloin, hydrastin, muriate of ammonia, permanganate of potassium and glycerin—a terrific broadside, indeed!"

In the Medical News for May 6, Dr. Evans collected reports of 291 cases treated, among which were 158 relapses, and 88 cases of insanity after treatment, leaving 45 "cures." Does it not look as if the medical treatment of "alcoholism" is about as precarious as that of other diseases?

Really, Mr. Editor, it seems to me as if moral treatment and Christianity can show a better record than that. But who believes that Christ, the Great Physician, can make a more effectual cure by his sovereign grace? I FOR ONE.

A LEAF FROM THE PAST.

312 K ST. N. E., WASHINGTON, D. C.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Some unknown friend sends a copy of your paper to my wife; and in the issue of April 27 I noticed a highly commendatory paragraph relating to the New York Observer.

Some forty years ago, when the writer was a boy, that paper was coming regularly to his home, and it continued to do so for many years (his father being a constant subscriber); and it was regarded by the family as one of the most reliable and best of newspapers. And to-day I could bring out of my literary treasures and curiosities copies of that paper which were published before the war of the Rebellion. Its attitude politically was pre-eminently conservative, and in the popular, corrupt sense, democratic. It was the constant defender and supporter of slavery. That fact now scarcely needs any comment. It, of itself, speaks loudly to the people of our time, and is a forcible illustration, showing how the apparently soundest of Christian scholars, and the most orthodox of leaders and teachers, may be misled and misleading. Permit me to quote from Dr. Nelson, the author of "Nelson on Infidelity," who, previous to the war, lived more than forty years in North Carolina: "Of all Northern periodicals, the New York Observer must have the preference as an efficient support of slavery. I am not sure but it does more than all things combined to keep slavery alive; it is just the succor demanded by the South. Its abuse of Abolitionists is music in Southern ears, which operates as a charm; but nothing is equal to its harping upon the religious privileges and instruction of the slaves of the South, and nothing could be so false and injurious (to the cause of freedom and religion) as the impression it gives on that subject. I say what I know when I speak in relation to this matter."

There are highly important lessons to be gathered from an investigation into the attitude which not alone the editors of that paper, but Christians generally, and ministers, religious newspapers and publication societies, and the denominations, then assumed toward the question of slavery. Information on this subject is very helpful toward forming a just estimate of the confidence we may safely repose in public opinion or in a guide. It shows how one may have the support of many, or even the majority of Christians, and occupy a position of standing and of great influence in the churches, and the people be encouraged to accept and follow his teachings, and yet his heart be untouched by the Gospel, ignorant of the golden rule, and as callous to feelings of humanity as the Chaldeans were when the Lord caused this charge to be written against them: "I was wroth with my people. I profaned my inheritance, and gave them over into thine hand: thou didst show them no mercy: upon the aged hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke." Isaiah 47:6, revised version.

Information on the subject shows with what readiness men will hold to the Bible with one hand and betray its most sacred principles with the other. It shows how many, and who, have been recreant to a good and righteous cause when it had little or no following. It shows to what a small minority the King may entrust his most important business; and how successful the very few may be in the holy war when they rely on spiritual weapons; of how the leavening influence they exert may so affect the whole mass as to prepare it for a great political upheaval and social revolution. It helps us to see how imperative may be the need of every one going directly to the Word of God for instruction in righteousness; and of doing that with a heart ready to accept and to recognize the commanding influence of the great doctrines of the Gospel. And I think one will hardly arise from the investigation that I speak of, without asking himself this question: May it not be that in relation to other subjects than that of slavery, the Christian public and very many of our religious teachers are now as far removed from the truth, and from taking a bold and self-sacrificing stand for some righteous cause as they were before the war? Yours truly,

ISAAC KEELER.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

STERLING, Kan., June 5, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The beast of the sea, Rev. 13, represents the Roman empire after it was divided into ten distinct kingdoms. The ten kingdoms are represented by ten horns upon the one beast. This beast also has seven heads. The head of the human body is the highest part—the seat of intellect, etc. The head of a stream, or river, is its source. Both meanings may be attached to the heads of this beast. The heads were Babylon, Media, Persia, Greece, Macedonia, Ancient Rome, and Rome after it was divided into ten kingdoms. Upon each of these heads were "names of blasphemy". Each of these had their secret orders, with their mysterious rites, ceremonies, blasphemous oaths, etc., sanctioned, if not instituted, and upheld by the civil power.

The beast of the earth, in the same chapter, is the papacy. These two beasts are very closely connected together. The second "exerciseth all the power of the first in his sight. And he causeth the earth" (the civil organization) "and them that dwell therein" (the members of it, or those identified with it) "to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed." He also gave orders to the members of the civil organization (ver. 14), "that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live". Good and sufficient reasons have been given for understanding this "image of the beast" to be a symbolical representation of the "secret empire"—Jesuitism, Freemasonry, etc.

In chapter 17 of Revelation these same beasts, or beastly powers, are represented in the latter stage of their existence—when they were "about to go into perdition," still more closely connected.

The papacy is here represented as a "woman" sitting upon the beast of the sea, the beast sustaining and carrying her, and she guiding and controlling the beast. This beast is here described as "a scarlet colored beast," indicating his ferocious and bloody disposition, and "full of names of blasphemy". In the first stage of his existence, as represented in chapter 13, he had these "names of blasphemy" on his heads; now they have spread until they have covered the whole system. The whole beast, inside and outside, is "full of names of blasphemy". Is not this a true picture of all the anti-Christian governments of the world to-day? The "woman"—the papacy—is equally guilty in this matter. Her name is "Mystery, Babylon the great".

How appropriate the name, when we consider that she inherited, and still retains, and has added very much to, the ancient Babylonian Mysteries. She is also the "Mother of the harlots, and of the abominations of the earth"; and she holds in her hand "a cup, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication," whereby "she has deceived and enticed all the nations and kings of the earth to commit spiritual fornication;" that is, to enter into ungodly alliance with her.

Let us rejoice that "He who is Prince of the kings of the earth" has given us the assurance in his Word that all these monstrous combinations of wickedness are soon to be "consumed with the spirit of his mouth, and destroyed with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. 2: 8.

Yours truly, W. J. CONNERY.

WRONG IDEAS OF "EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS."

MONDOVI, Wis., June 12, 1893.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill.,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—The enclosed paragraph, which I clipped from the Ripon College Days, will make good reading matter for the Christian Cynosure.

Owing to Ripon's wealth and educational interests, she supports among her societies and clubs the G. A. R., I. O. G. T., I. O. O. F., K. of H., Masonic Lodge, National Union, S. of H., K. of P., B. M. A., a Cycling, Banjo and Guitar, Gun, Lawn Tennis and Whist club, each and all in a flourishing condition, placing her socially on a footing with cities of a larger growth.—The College Days.

What is our country coming to when the standard of "wealth and educational interest" in a college town is measured by the number of its secret societies?

The two or three secret literary societies in the college are not mentioned in this list. They are the true "secret" of this standard of measurement.

I am in hearty sympathy with the anti-secret society principles advocated by yourself, Wheaton College, and the Christian Cynosure. I believe they are all subtle foes against the kingdom of Christ.

Wishing you the highest success in this thankless work, I am very sincerely, (Rev.) F. EMORY LYON.

LITERATURE.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT: Twelve Dozen Skeptical Arguments Refuted. A Reply to a Work Entitled "144 Self-Contradictions of the Bible." By Elizabeth A. Reed, member of the Philosophical Society of Great Britain, author of "Earnest Words for Honest Skeptics," and other Christian books. 160 pages; paper, price 25 cents. Boston: Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill.

As long as the Bible is read, some wrong-headed or evil-hearted skeptic will set himself the task of refuting its apparent contradictions, and of making himself ridiculous by his want of knowledge or his arrogance of superior wisdom. The time has come when neither ignorance, skepticism, higher criticism, or arrogance can any longer "upset Moses" or disturb the calm placidity of the vital truths which the Scriptures teach. If the wonderful increase of knowledge of this age has turned the heads of many—"much learning hath made thee mad!"—it has also brought earnest and studious research into every department of Bible truth, and in a thousand ways confirmed it.

A personal acquaintance for some years with the author of this book leads us to believe that no one could more competently have written this defense of the Bible. A thorough student of the Scriptures, finely educated, and blessed with a large fund of practical good sense, combined with a strong confidence in the literal meaning of the text of the Bible, she is eminently fitted for the task which she has so admirably performed.

We know of no other book of so small a size that should be kept near at hand for reference by every reader of the Scriptures. It will clear away many a textual difficulty and dispel many a doubt.

THE HASTINGS BIRTHDAY BOOK: Selections from the Writings of H. L. Hastings, Editor of the Christian. Compiled by J. H. T. One vol., pp. 398. Boston: Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill. Cloth, price $1.00.

This little volume is divided into twelve parts, each representing one of the twelve months, with a thoughtful passage attached to each day on the even pages, while the odd-numbered pages contain blank tablets for notes, comments or family history, in connection with the day and sentiment named. In this arrangement it has been the desire of the compiler that on whatever page the reader may look, or in whatever space he may write, he may not fail to find some word of wisdom, encouragement, or hope, which may prove to be an inspiration to stronger faith and nobler deeds. Birthdays of famous men and women, and of some less noted but perhaps equally worthy of note, are placed under their proper dates.

For a gift-book; for a closet companion; for a traveler's wayside counselor; for a household monitor, it presents a variety suited to the capacity and needs of all.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The June issue of Our Day closes the eleventh semi-annual volume of this excellent monthly. It opens with a full-page portrait of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, the efficient temperance advocate, and contains the following papers: President Cleveland's Address at the Opening of the World's Fair; Joseph Cook on the Duty of Church Members in the Temperance Reform; Trusts and Monopolies as Modern Highwaymen, by W. O. McDowell; Newspaper Apologies for Pugilism, by Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D.D.; W. A. Croffut's Poem, The Prophecy of Columbus, read at the opening of the World's Fair; Joseph Cook's second lecture in the eighteenth year (1893) of his Boston Monday series, "Is the Fourth Commandment Binding upon Christians?"—a paper that should forever settle the sanctity of the Lord's holy day; and the usual departments of Book Notices, Vital Points of Expert Opinion, Questions to Specialists, and Editorial Notes (which form a very important part of this periodical), are replete with variety and scope. Yearly subscription, $2.50. Published in Boston and Chicago.

The Social Economist for June is opened with Application of the Silver Solution, a forcible article showing the practical working of the theory for the solution of the silver question presented in the previous issue. The History of the Ten-Hour Movement in America for ten decades is given by Judge Charles Cowley. The Natural Right of Suffrage is denied, and the beneficial influences of a judicious restriction of the right shown, by E. P. Powell. Frederic M. Bird considers the question, Is Human Life Overvalued? and presents the answers which the doings of different ages have given. Other papers are: Some Recent Social Movements, by Wilton Tournier; The Coming Social Condition, by Frederick H. Cooke, and Labor's Claims on Organized Christianity, by Kemper Bockock. Striking contemporary thought is gathered in Among the Magazines, and the Editorial Crucible is as ever luminous and sententious.

In the Review of Reviews for June Mr. Ernest Knauff, a well-known art teacher of New York, has prepared an extended and discriminating article telling in a straightforward way what are the merits and striking features of each portion of the art exhibit at the World's Fair, and his article is illustrated with outline pen sketches intended as memoranda of the principal pictures. Another important feature is a well-written forecast of all the principal conventions and gatherings to be held through the summer and autumn of 1893, particular attention being given to the forthcoming World's Congresses and other gatherings which will be affiliated with such congresses at Chicago. The character sketch of this number is of Sir Frederick Leighton, the president of the Royal Academy and the official head of English art.

LODGE NOTES.

(From Secret Society Papers.)

A noble Frenchman, E. V. DeBoissere, gave to the Odd-fellow Grand Lodge of Kansas a farm of 3,106 acres, improved as a "silk farm;" a large stone mansion of 60 rooms; 200 acres of mulberry trees; 1,000 acres of growing crops, with horses, mules, farm implements, etc., etc., valued at $150,000! This man was not a member of the order he so bountifully endowed, but a bachelor, a stranger in a strange land, the owner of a valuable estate in France, to which he has returned. Twenty years ago he came to America and purchased the farm, and improved it for raising silk worms.

A short time ago, while Niobe Lodge, No. 370, K. of P., of Waverly, Ohio, was in session, a stranger appeared at their outer door whom they refused to admit. A drove of cattle were being driven through the town when one of them, being frightened, dashed through the crowds on the street and rushed into the entrance to the stairway leading up to the K. of P. hall and climbed three flights of stairs to the outer door of the castle hall. The lodge was in session at the time and the outer guard opened the wicket and, peering into the face of the stranger, nearly fell dead from fright. As the new candidate for Pythian honors had not passed through the scrutiny of an investigating committee, and a clear ballot, he was refused admission and soon thereafter returned to the street. It is said that a "bull in a china store" could not have astonished any one more than were the Knights of Waverly castle.

A recent number of the Siftings contains a fine three-column cut of the Odd-fellows' Home of Pennsylvania. It looks like a fine commodious building, yet we are told it has no place for the wives of its old and infirm inmates. Think of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows compelling an aged brother to desert his old and feeble wife, who has been the companion of his years, that he may find shelter in a Home! Heaven deliver us all from such a Home!—Northwestern Odd-fellow.

It is reported that about 30,000 Odd-fellows were suspended during the year 1891, nearly all of them for non-payment of dues. Each of these were indebted, to be very moderate, say $5, which equals $150,000. It required to make them members of the order at least one hour for each degree, which would aggregate 120,000 hours, which, at 15 cents an hour of each of ten persons engaged in conferring them, would amount to $18,000. Count the postage and stationery expended to notify each at, say, 10 cents and there is $3,000 more. Thus we may sum up the loss to the order in one year in dollars and cents at about $171,000, or one-third of a million dollars!

The following extract from the report of the last quarterly communication of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, shows that even in the old land the idea of dissolving the holding of Masonic meetings in hotels or taverns is progressing: "A report was submitted from Bro. Dr. Middleton, Prov. Grand Master of Roxburg and Selkirkshires, in which he stated that of the ten lodges under that jurisdiction, four hold as lodge property the halls in which their Masonic work is transacted, while three others rent halls entirely unconnected with licensed premises. There was, he added, manifestly a growing desire among all the lodges to dissociate Freemasonry from hotels and taverns, and in preference to secure suitable premises of their own."

"Daughters of Naomi" is the name of a ladies' organization in the East. Another society is called "Social Ladies Club." Still another—"Odd Ladies."

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1893.

DR. BRIGGS AND HIS SUSPENSION.

The suspension of Dr. Briggs from the ministry of the Presbyterian church was probably in logical consistency with the doctrines and usages of that body. When he became a member, a minister and a theological professor in that denomination, it was with the understanding that he would teach the doctrines of Christianity as they are usually held and understood by them; and if, after a more perfect knowledge, he felt that he could not do so, there was a legitimate way out of the dilemma. He could withdraw and be free to teach what he chose. The moral sense of mankind will always condemn the man who repudiates his part of a covenant and yet holds it binding on the other party. Surely the obligations of fellowship ceased when the conditions on which that fellowship was bestowed were broken. No great amount of sympathy need be expended on him or his followers. They may, or may not, be just as good Christians as those from whom they are separated. They lose no spiritual blessing in going out. The General Assembly has no power over "the keys of the kingdom," to bind or loose on earth what shall be bound or loosed in heaven.

It is remarkable, however, how a question of personal opinion should create so intense an excitement—should occupy so much time, and cause so large an expenditure of money, while some questions of morals are denied any consideration. Had Mr. Briggs been a Freemason (which we hope he is not), the fact would never have come to the surface. Were it proposed to inquire into the nature of Freemasonry, and of the propriety of ministers and members belonging to that order, the whole matter would be treated as they treated the slavery question fifty years ago. In recent General Assemblies, the temperance question has met with a good degree of attention; but the fact that probably a large majority of the members still adhere to the license system has awakened no solicitude. Indeed, the Presbyterians, like all the other large denominations, have been far more concerned with theoretical than with applied Christianity, and it is only when their ministers become guilty of grossly unpopular sins that discipline is ever enforced. There needs to be a reformation on this line. We would not have Christians less regardful of doctrinal truth, but we would have them far more concerned with practical life.

THE WORLD'S FAIR SABBATH OPENING.

The United States Court of Appeals, presided over by Justice Fuller of the United States Supreme Court, and United States Judges Bunn and Allen, last week heard arguments, pro and con, from authorized counsel, touching the previous decision that the World's Fair must be closed on the Sabbath. On Saturday morning last, the Court of Appeals handed down its decision, reversing that of the lower court, and remanding it for revision.

It matters little what specious arguments in favor of the management of the World's Fair led to this latest decision. The sanctity of the Christian Sabbath has cut no figure in either of these Federal courts. It has been the rights of government and of the Fair management that received attention, and their pleas for Sabbath opening have been printed time and again, ad nauseum. We need not recapitulate them. We can only regret that the will of the millions of Sabbath observers in the United States has not been duly respected, and that greed and violation of divine law have triumphed over morality and Christianity.

As for the consequences of this decision, they are ably delineated in the Chicago News of last Saturday evening, as follows:

It is apparent that the conflict of view and decision by the two Federal courts presents to the directors a most critical situation and one which may easily involve the financial success or failure of the Fair. This is not the time to discuss the ethics of the Sunday question, but it is the time for the directors to calmly and dispassionately face the business crisis which today's decision precipitates. It must by this time be apparent to the Directory that the sentiment throughout the country against an open Sunday Fair is so extensive and so intense that it will certainly keep hundreds of thousands of people from coming to Chicago whose support the Fair can ill do without and whose contribution to the general business prosperity of the city will many times outweigh the slight patronage of Sunday excursionists from the neighboring cities and towns of the northwest. This is a cold business fact that appeals to the financial interest of every stockholder in the Fair and to every Chicago business man. If the Fair shall be kept open on the ground that the conditional $1,900,000 coin appropriation is to be repaid by the Exposition, then every stockholder will recognize that Sunday opening means an actual money loss to the Fair. This fact is undisputed. President Higginbotham has officially declared as much. If, on the other hand, the Fair shall be opened on Sundays with the secret purpose to later "plead the baby act" and ask Congress to permit the Exposition to retain the $1,900,000 donated on the express condition of Sunday-closing, then "Sunday-opening" at once becomes the synonym of the basest commercial dishonor and bad faith. In a word, from no point of view can the Directory afford—as a mere business proposition—to open the World's Fair on Sundays. The stockholders and the business men of Chicago generally expect the directors to meet and determine this most critical situation with the wisdom born of a full realization of their personal responsibility to all the parties in actual interest.

In consequence of this later decision the gates of the Columbian Exposition were thrown open to visitors on last Sabbath, and 57,676 paid admissions were recorded. The total number of persons admitted to the grounds was 74,512.

It was a very quiet day around the State buildings, the greater number of which were closed. The State buildings of all the Eastern States, with the exception of Maryland, were closed. The Mount Vernon building was open, and attracted quite a number of visitors. Of the Western States Illinois, Michigan, California, Wisconsin, Iowa, Washington, Nebraska, Minnesota, Kansas, and Montana State buildings were open, although the attendance was small. Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, South Dakota, North Dakota, Kentucky, West Virginia, Idaho, Utah, New Mexico, and Louisiana were closed.

It is stated that ex-Postmaster General John Wanamaker will re-open the litigation by having the Fair Directory enjoined from again opening its gates on the Sabbath. But it seems impossible, by local or national law, to save the Sabbath from disgraceful desecration.

FAILURE OF THE WHISKY TRUST.

It is matter for profound congratulation that the famous whisky trust in the United States has suffered a serious collapse. As a corporation embracing eighty-three distilleries, with a capital stock of $35,000,000, it became a powerful factor in one of the most detestable forms of traffic conceivable, controlling the price and distribution of intoxicating beverages, ruining men and women, souls and bodies, and carrying an influence for evil into every political contest. Ninety-five per cent of the liquor sold in the country was within its control. The embarrassment which has overtaken it is attributed by the Union Signal to various causes, one of which was an immense over-production in anticipation of a material increase in the internal revenue tax at an early day. Had this increase been effected, the trust would have profited by it in maintaining advanced prices for the stock in hand. But the increase was not authorized by Congress, and the popular opposition to trusts was so widely spread that none dared to promote the desired change, although it is alleged that the trust spared neither money nor enterprise to complete its purpose. These circumstances tended to produce depression and distrust; heavy lawsuits succeeded; and as no bonds of the trust were marketable until a legal decision could be obtained, business was crippled. At this juncture five of the heaviest concerns withdrew from the combine, ostensibly because of the non-payment of rents by the trust. This was the culminating blow, and the collapse immediately followed. The country may rejoice at its downfall.

THE LODGE POWER IN VERMONT.

A venerable correspondent, Mr. R. G. Wood, writes to us from Brattleboro, Vt., that Anti-masonic work is very much needed in that State, to enlighten the young men and keep them out of the lodges. Though in his eighty-seventh year, he is trying to hold up the anti-secrecy banner, by circulating tracts and papers, and thinks that he has yet much to do in this cause. We are sure every Cynosure reader will bid him God-speed.

Reviewing the situation in his State, he says: "After the murder of Morgan by the Masons, Vermont became politically Anti-masonry. We chose Anti-masons to fill almost every office in the State. Our governors and leading statesmen were Anti-masons; but now all is changed, and Masonry has become dominant, dignifying itself in church and state. Our governor is a skull-degree Mason, Odd-fellow and Red Man, besides being a prominent and efficient member of a close-communion Baptist church; so I think that Vermont has a man who is eminently qualified for the governor of a Republican State. Many of our churches are more or less under lodge influence, and the evil effects of it are plainly visible. The press and pulpit are afraid to engage this monster evil. It seems to me that they manifest a great deal of cowardice, and that not at all to their credit."

Vermont is not the only state in which the lodge power predominates, but will exemplify the condition of many others. The fields are white for the harvest everywhere.

"Oh, where are the reapers? Who will come
And share in the glory of the harvest home?"

THAT PAPAL ENCYCLICAL.

In the Cynosure for April 6, 1893, it was editorially stated that the alleged bull of Pope Leo XIII., said to have been issued December 26, 1891, absolving all citizens of the United States from their oaths of allegiance to our government, and commanding that on or about September 5, 1893, there shall commence, at Chicago, a general massacre of Protestants, ought not to have deceived anyone. Yet in numerous religious journals it has, both before and since, had a wide circulation among credulous people, and has created among them not a slight degree of trepidation. So much has been said of it in the press, and talked about it in Protestant circles, that Rev. S. K. J. Chesbro, publishing agent of the Free Methodist church, addressed a letter to Rev. James O'Connor (a converted Romish priest, editor of the Converted Catholic, and proprietor of Christ's Mission at 142 West Twenty-first street, New York City), requesting his opinion of that terrifying document. This is his reply, printed in the Free Methodist of June 14:

"NEW YORK, June 5, 1893.
DEAR BROTHER CHESBRO:—Thanks for your letter. Regarding the 'Encyclical' which you enclosed, and which I return, I am glad you did not publish it, because it is bogus. I have no doubt the Pope and his followers would like to be supreme masters in this country, but they are not going to trumpet to the world their designs in a form of that 'Encyclical'. It is a satire that has done harm by alarming Protestants needlessly as to dates, etc. Such a foolish forgery makes honest work against Rome much more difficult and really helps Rome among all thinking persons.

"May God bless you all for the constant kindness to me and my work. Yours truly, JAMES A. O'CONNOR.

Correspondents who have written to us about this encyclical may accept the foregoing letter as conclusive evidence of its character.

NEW FEATURES IN THE TEMPERANCE REFORM.

Increase of research and practical thought on the subject of temperance are bringing out in force new arguments in favor of total abstinence and prohibition.

The following have recently been brought to the front by able writers and speakers:

1. The insurance argument; that is, the fact that insurance companies, as a business matter, have proved that alcoholic beverages injure health and shorten life.

2. The railroad argument; that is, the increasing custom of railroads to require total abstinence of employes, showing the dangerous character of drink.

3. The real estate argument; that is, the fact that even local option puts up the values of houses so that even liquor-dealers fight saloons away from their residences.

4. The church argument; that is, the fact that all churches, including the Catholic, condemn liquor selling as a disreputable way of making a living.

5. The moderation argument; that is, the testimony of Dr. Richardson of London, that a man who has never been intoxicated may be rotted all through with the effects of tippling and bequeath disease and mental unsoundness to his children.

6. The druggist argument; that is, that science has a harmless substitute for every use of alcohol in medicine and the arts, so making it possible to abolish the liquor-selling druggists who always attack prohibition so disastrously in the rear.

The latter is advanced by Dr. Higginbotham in the National Temperance Advocate for March last. It is by no means the least important of the six; but it is too soon to bring it into discussion in legislatures; it should, however, be made a subject of agitation and research in every hamlet, village, town and city of the Union. Those who desire to have a better understanding of it should send ten cents to the publishers of the National Temperance Advocate, 58 Reade street, New York City, for copies of the March (1893) number. It will be a wholesome investment.

A WELCOME ADJOURNMENT.

The Illinois State Legislature closed its thirty-eighth biennial session on Friday last, after five months' great activity. As in the case of many human lives, "its last days were its best days," but as a whole it was not a legislative success.

Among the more important measures passed at its latest sittings were the following: Providing that no employe shall be discharged because he belongs to a labor organization. Employers will therefore find it to their interest to hire none but non-union workmen and discharge them at will when they prove incompetent.

The bill providing for the establishment of a home for juvenile female offenders and making an appropriation of $75,000 for the purchase of land and construction of the necessary buildings.

The bill providing that associations or societies organized for the purpose of furnishing life indemnity or pecuniary benefits may transact any business outside the State that they can or may do in the State and legalizing all business heretofore done outside the State which would have been legal in the State.

The bill for the establishment of a naval militia. The organization shall conform generally to the laws of the United States. The government of the militia shall be controlled by the provisions of the military code as now applied to the State militia.

The Senate joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to consist of two Senators to be appointed by the president of the Senate, and three representatives, to be appointed by the speaker of the House, to revise the laws of the State, making them as uniform as possible and submit their report to the next general assembly.

The school law was left so that all children must be educated at and from a certain age, by compelling them to attend some school, public or private, at the discretion of the parents.

We shall have occasion to refer to the remarkable body and its real work in another issue.

CERNEAU MASONRY DEFEATED.

The long-existing war in Iowa Masonic lodges between current Freemasonry and the Cerneau or French rite, was revived in the Iowa Grand Lodge of Masons at Davenport, recently, when Mr. Temple, a member from Osceola, introduced a resolution calling for the repeal of chapter 27 of the code. This chapter declares the Cerneau bodies to be illegal and demands that all good and true Masons stay out of them. Mr. Temple's resolution was referred to the committee on jurisprudence. Thursday morning this committee reported in favor of the retention of the offending chapter and adversely to the resolution. The matter was debated for an hour, Mr. Temple opening and Judge A. R. Dewey, of Washington, Iowa, and Judge A. T. Granger, of Waukon, Iowa, replying. The arguments and pleas were warmly pressed. At the conclusion the motion to adopt the report was taken up and carried—yeas, 786; nays 429.

By this action the Iowa Grand Lodge maintains the stand it has always taken on the French rite bodies that have been forced into its jurisdiction. The adherents of those bodies came to this communication determined to make a desperate fight to overturn the attitude of the Grand Lodge in that matter, but the latter won by a majority so large that the Cerneau men are greatly disheartened. Their only course will be to submit or strengthen their ranks sufficiently to win whenever they again make a fight.

The history of Cerneau Masonry has been frequently printed, but it will bear repeating again. The following is the version given in Mackey's "Encyclopædia of Freemasonry," p. 154: "Joseph Cerneau was a French jeweler, born in 1763, who removed to New York in the beginning of the present century. There, in 1812, he established a spurious body under the title of 'Sovereign Grand Consistory of the United States of America, its Territories and Dependencies'. This Masonic charlatan, who claimed the right to organize bodies of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, was expelled and his pretensions denounced, in 1813, by the legal Supreme Council, sitting in Charleston, S. C. Cerneau and his adherents gave much trouble in the Scottish Rite for many years, and the bodies which he had formed were not entirely dissolved until long after the establishment of a legal Supreme Council for the Northern Jurisdiction."

The attempt, in Iowa, to revive Cerneauism is a failure, so far as Masonic recognition is concerned.

A COVENANTER ENDORSEMENT.

The Reformed Presbyterian (Covenanter) church is counted among the warmest friends of our anti-secrecy work, and has not been slow, on numerous occasions, to heartily endorse it. At the recent session of the Synod (O. S.) in New Castle, Pa., as usual, strong declarations were made in opposition to prevailing evils in which the progress of religion and the church is hindered. In reference to secret societies the Synod expressed itself thus decidedly:

The Synod urges upon all its members the maintenance of an uncompromising testimony against all secret orders on account of their secrecy, as well as on account of other evil features, whether these be more or less aggravated.

That we testify not only against secret societies themselves, but also against the civil authorities which give to them a corporate being, and against the churches which permit their members to be connected with them.

That we commend the National Christian Association, its agents and its excellent organ, the Christian Cynosure, to the hearty co-operation and support of our ministers and people.

Resolved, That Synod appoint four delegates, with power to add to their number, to represent the Covenanter church at the approaching annual meeting conference on June 20 in Chicago, with the understanding that they shall in no way indorse any resolution favoring the World's Fair.

Such testimony is always acceptable.

MR. GLADSTONE AND HOME RULE.

There is a feeling dominant in portions of Ireland that Home Rule is not the remedy for the ills with which that unhappy country has been so long afflicted, and that the better its provisions, advocated by Mr. Gladstone, are understood, the "irreparable mischief" which it must inevitably inflict upon the kingdom is more fully appreciated. While the enemies of the bill admit that "Mr. Gladstone is a statesman of very great experience, of pre-eminent intelligence, and of avowedly Christian principle," they are constrained to wonder "how any intelligent, right-principled man could advocate such a measure." "Two very prominent facts," they allege, are brought into consideration and increase the marvel of the situation—"the character of those in whose interest Home Rule is specially being promoted; and, next, the character of the opponents of that measure."

In considering the first of these two propositions, Mr. Gladstone is accused of designating the party of which he is now the head, in 1881, as "steeped to the lips in treason," and that they are "marching through plunder and rapine to the dismemberment of the Empire." One distinguished factor of that party, at present a member of the House of Commons, it is alleged, "was tried, in 1867, for high treason, and sentenced to be hanged, drawn and quartered, but his sentence was commuted to penal servitude for life; yet he was subsequently released under an amnesty," and is now a strong supporter of Home Rule. These men are also denounced as notable for their "incapacity even for self-government. So far as they are concerned, 'the sixth and eighth commandments might as well never have been written. No consideration, whether of religion or humanity, has been allowed to have any weight with these so-called Nationalists, to whom it is now proposed to entrust the destinies of the country.'"

Again, in referring to the party in opposition to Home Rule, it "must strike any casual observer that it embraces all the opium in the country that is characterized by intelligence, sobriety, respect for law, diligent and successful attention to business, not to mention the fact that all the men of position or wealth—that is, those who have the greatest stake in the country, and are therefore most interested in her prosperity—are unanimous in their condemnation of Mr. Gladstone's latest scheme!"

This review of the conflicting elements in the Home Rule struggle is gathered principally from the Derry (Ireland) Cathedral Magazine for April last, which editorially adds that "the present conflict of opinion on this subject in Ireland is not the old feud between Protestants and Roman Catholics showing itself under another form. Such an idea has been effectually disposed of by the remarkable and timely Roman Catholic anti-Home Rule Petition, promoted by Lord Fingall and others; a petition which perhaps more than any other single influence is opening the eyes of Englishmen to the true aspect of the question, as they find that these Roman Catholic signatories have no complaint to make of 'ascendancy,' or of the hardship of living under Protestant laws, but, on the contrary, assert that they have perfect freedom in the exercise of their religion, and view with horror and alarm the proposal to hand over the interests to a government controlled by the present leaders of the Nationalist party."

Well, under any circumstances the situation is a grave one; and if the history of the past is any criterion, there will never be harmony.

—Total paid admissions to the World's Fair, up to last Sabbath evening, since the grounds were formally opened, number 2 461 357. Those for the four Sundays during which the Fair has been opened were as follows: First, 77,212; second, 56,760; third, 71,213; fourth, 57,676.

—The criminal record of the week is no improvement on former ones, yet there is a glimmer from the sword of justice in the fact that the coroner's jury, which investigated the lynching of the Negro Bush at Decatur, Ill., recommended that Charles Britton, William Vest and Thomas Atterberry be held for trial. But even this hopeful incident is overshadowed by another disgraceful lynching. William Shorter, a Negro, charged with assault upon a white woman, was taken from a train at Kearns town, W. Va., and hanged to a tree.

—Rev. William Dillon, of Dayton, Ohio, for eight years editor of the Christian Conservator, having been elected bishop of the Conservative United Brethren in Christ for the Pacific Coast, has severed his connection with that paper and is succeeded by Rev. C. H. Kiracofe, a former coadjutor in his work. The resignation of Mr. Dillon would be more severely felt were it not that his successor is amply competent and equally devoted to the interests of the church. Each in his new sphere of labor will find abundant opportunities for serving the best interests of our Lord and his kingdom.

—Among other prominent personages who have been received with appropriate ceremony in Chicago during the past fortnight, was one of the royal family of Spain—the Infanta Eulalia, accompanied by her husband, a Spanish nobleman—Prince Antoine. Both appear to be persons of ordinary sense, notwithstanding their exalted position in life; but while here they were feted and fawned upon to a disgusting degree. The lady, however, before leaving, managed to severely rebuke the toadyism which beset her on every occasion from our "polite society." Previous to her departure, last week, she and her husband formally opened the Spanish building and the pavilions in the various departments of the Exposition, and gave a farewell dinner to a few favored guests.

—The Farm, Field and Fireside, edited by Gen. C. H. Howard, referring to our recent notice of Wheaton College and its approaching Commencement, takes the opportunity for saying: "As in some other departments of life and business, we are opposed to the big fish eating up the little ones—the large universities crowding out or overshadowing the smaller colleges. There is much to be said in favor of the latter. Not the least is that the individual student comes more in contact with the individual professor or instructor. At Wheaton men and women are educated together and its graduates number many noble members of society scattered over our country and the world." And he might have added with equal force and truth that the country and the world are to-day very much better for having Wheaton College, under its past and present management.

THE HOME.

INDWELLING.

O Spirit, whose name is the Saviour,
Come, enter this spirit of mine,
And make it forever thy dwelling,
A home wherein all things are thine!

O Son of the Father eternal,
Once with us, a friend and a guest,
Abide in thine own human mansion,
Its joy and its hope and its rest!

Leave in me no darkness unlighted,
Unwarmed by thy truth's holy fire;
No thought which thou canst not inhabit,
No purpose thou dost not inspire!

Shut unto silence, my midnight
Is dawn if thy presence I see;
When I open my doors to thy coming,
Lo! all things are radiant with thee.

Oh, what is so sweet as to love thee,
And live with thee always in sight?
Lord, enter this house of my being,
And fill every room with thy light!

STRANGE BUT TRUE: A PARABLE.

A wealthy farmer who cultivated some thousands of acres, had by his benevolence endeared himself greatly to his large staff of laborers. He had occasion to leave the country in which his property was situated, for some years; but before doing so he gave his people clearly to understand that he wished the whole of the cultivated land to be kept in hand, and all the unreclaimed moor and marsh lands to be enclosed and drained and brought into cultivation; that even the hills were to be terraced, and the poor mountain pastures manured, so that no single corner of the estate should remain neglected and barren. Ample resources were left for the execution of these works, and there were sufficient hands to have accomplished the whole within the first few years of the proprietor's absence.

He was detained in the country to which he had been called very many years. Those whom he left children were men and women when he came back, and so the number of his tenantry and laborers was vastly multiplied. Was the task, he had given them to do, accomplished? Alas! no. Bog and moor and mountain waste were only wilder and more desolate than ever. Fine, rich virgin soil by thousands of acres was bearing only briars and thistles. Meadow after meadow was utterly barren for the want of culture. Nay, by far the larger part of the farm seemed never to have been visited by his servants.

Had they been idle? Some had. But large numbers had been industrious enough. They had expended a vast amount of labor, and skilled labor too, but they had bestowed it all upon the park immediately around the house. This had been cultivated to such a pitch of perfection that the workmen had scores of times quarreled with each other because the operations of one interfered with those of his neighbor.

And a vast amount of labor had been lost in sowing the same patch, for instance, with corn fifty times over in one season, so that the seed never had time to germinate and grow and bear fruit; in caring for the forest trees as if they had been tender saplings; in manuring soils already too fat, and watering pastures already too wet.

The farmer was positively astonished at the misplaced ingenuity with which labor and seed and manure, skill and time and strength, had been wasted, for no result. The very same amount of toil and capital, expended according to his directions, would have brought the whole demesne into culture and yielded a noble revenue. But season after season had rolled away in sad succession, leaving those unbounded acres of various, but all reclaimable, soils barren and useless; and as to the park, it would have been far more productive and perfect had it been relieved of the extraordinary and unaccountable amount of energy expended on it.

Why did these laborers act so absurdly? Did they wish to labor in vain? On the contrary, they were forever craving for fruit, coveting good crops, longing for great results.

Did they not wish to carry out the farmer's views about his property? Well, they seemed to have that desire, for they were always reading the directions he wrote, and said continually to each other: "You know we have to bring the whole property into order." But they did not do it.

Some few tried, and plowed up a little here and there, and sowed corn and other crops. Perhaps these failed, and so the rest got discouraged? Oh, no; they saw that the yield was magnificent, far richer in proportion than they got themselves. They clearly perceived that, but yet they failed to follow a good example. Nay, when the labors of a few, in some distant valley, had resulted in a crop they were all unable to gather in by themselves, the others would not even go and help them to bring home the sheaves. They preferred watching for weeds among the roses of the overcrowded garden, and counting the blades of grass in the park and the leaves on the trees.

Then they were fools, surely, not wise men; traitors, not true servants to their Lord?

Ah, I can't tell. You must ask him that. I only know their Master said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," and that eighteen hundred years afterwards they had not even mentioned to one-half the world that there was a Gospel!—Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness.

THE STRANGER FRIEND.

"There's a stranger at the door:
Let him in."

The words floated through the open window one sunny May morning as Agnes Walden stood by the ironing-board. Only half the clothes in the large basket were ironed, and Agnes' face had a very tired look, yet very brave, for with a great effort she kept back all complaining thoughts. To pleasure-seekers it was a very delightful day, but the same soft breeze which kissed the "spring beauties" and violets made Agnes' head ache, and a feeling of languor came over her.

Mrs. Walden had been called suddenly to the sick bed of her sister, and leaving Agnes to take care of the house and younger children, she had hastened away. The first few days passed pleasantly enough. Roy and Alice were anxious to help sister, and did so in many ways, but this morning was one of special trial.

As brother Paul came to the house for a new paper of seed, he sang these words:

"There's a stranger at the door:
Let him in."

The voice sounded so cheerful and bright that Agnes took up the strain, but stopped at the third word. She straightened to her full height; her tired eyes looked beyond the fields and woods into the depths of blue; the face grew bright as her thoughts followed her eyes.

"A stranger? Ah, no! Isn't he a loving friend to me? Doesn't he know and care that I am tired? My life is full of blessing, and I am so happy in spite of the ache. My mother is well, and will come back, while Aunt Lou is suffering so much. Papa is home, and the children are so good, and I am so glad we have them. I wonder why they call Jesus a stranger. I wonder if the Bible calls him a stranger. 'Behold a stranger at the door; he gently knocks—' Oh, that isn't in the Bible. Well, let me see; 'Behold I stand at the door and knock'—that doesn't call him a stranger. 'If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him.' I wonder where it calls him a stranger."

She fell to thinking so earnestly that all pain and weariness were forgotten for the present, and the pile of folded clothes lowered rapidly; but she found no satisfactory answer to her query, so she decided to ask her father.

A half-hour later Mr. Walden came into the kitchen to melt the glue in order to mend a book which had been loaned and came home somewhat dilapidated.

"Are you tired, Agnes?" he asked sympathetically.

"Oh, no, not much; hardly at all," said Agnes so brightly that her father felt cheered and thankful for his young housekeeper.

Several days passed before Agnes found a convenient time to ask her father about the new question. It was one evening when the children were in bed, and Paul had not yet returned from the "rehearsal," that she sat on the opposite side of the table from her father, reading "Tales of a Traveller." When Mr. Walden folded and sealed the third letter, shut up the inkstand, and was putting away his pen, Agnes dropped the book into her lap, knowing that she was now at liberty to talk, and broke right into the midst of her subject by saying:

"Papa, why do they call Jesus a 'stranger' in songs?"

"Why—I don't know—what do you mean?" he answered, shortly recalling his thoughts from their flight to absent friends.

"You know that song, 'There's a stranger at the door,' and 'Behold a stranger at the door.' Does the Bible anywhere call him a stranger?"

"Isn't he a stranger to my little girl?" asked Mr. Walden, tenderly.

"No, papa, how could he be, when you and mamma have always taught me that he is a friend?"

"Notwithstanding our teaching, could he not be a stranger to your real self?"

Agnes thought a moment, and answered slowly, "Yes, sir."

"Are there not many, who have heard of Jesus all their lives, to whom he is unknown as a friend?"

"Yes, sir. Then the songs are written for those who will not know him?"

"Certainly."

"But, papa, why don't they know him? How can they help believing?" Agnes had become so earnest that for a moment she forgot that it was the lifework of her father to teach men to see and know these things.

"Is Jesus a real personal friend to you, Agnes, and in what way?"

"Sometimes I get tired and cross, and don't want to do things, and then it seems as if Jesus were here and knew all about it. I know, papa, that it does not look much as if I tried to be good sometimes, but I do try."

Paul came in at that moment, and the conversation quickly turned to the concert in which he was to sing the next evening.

In the week which followed Agnes had need of help, for the mother was detained longer than was anticipated. The days were warm and full of work for the unaccustomed hands. Many failures were made and quick words spoken to the eager, restless Roy and Alice. But when, at last, Mrs. Walden did return she could see that her daughter, by the help of this Stranger friend, had grown to be a stronger, more cheerful Christian.—Mid-Continent.

A VALUABLE BANK NOTE.

Philippians 4: 19.

The structure of this verse seems to me to be the same as an ordinary bank-note, and the idea embodied in it is much the same. Indeed, it is one of God's bank-notes. Look at it thus:

"My God"—This gives us the Banker's name; and could there be a sweeter name? Observe, it is not only "God," but "my God," the God whom the apostle knew so intimately, and the one whom he had so often proved.

"Shall supply"—This corresponds to "I promise to pay," which we find printed on bank-notes. It is an absolute promise.

"All your need"—The amount is immeasurably more than £1,000. Even if the need were only temporal the amount would be large, but it also includes something far vaster, viz., our spiritual need.

"According to his riches"—Here we have the capital of the bank, inexhaustible, incorruptible.

"In glory"—The address of the bank, where no thief appropriates, no moth corrupts.

"By Christ Jesus"—Here is the Cashier's name signed at the foot, without which no bank-note could go into circulation.

Verse 6 of same chapter is the check-book.

Perhaps the words which struck me most were "your need" in contrast to "His riches in glory."

"The need will soon be past and gone,
Exceeding great, but quickly o'er;
The wealth unknown, is all His own,
And lasts forever more."

It seemed as if my tiny bucket had been let down into an ocean. "My God shall supply all your need." How? As I know it? That would be but a meagre supply; for my own knowledge of my need is so inadequate. Then how is he going to supply it? According to his knowledge of my need? Well, that would be blessed, and perhaps all one could ask. But no; he shall supply all my need according—according to what? According to his riches in glory!

I may be a pauper, and my notion of my need is that, just now, I want five shillings. I lay my need before a wealthy friend. He does not simply give me five shillings. He is a princely giver, and he sends me away, maybe, with two sovereigns. Yet, probably, this would not be at all according to the measure of his wealth. "His riches in glory." If this is to be the marvellous measure of our momentary supplies, on God's part, nothing is needed on ours but the emptiness to contain the fullness, and the hand of faith to claim it. "Believe that ye receive, and ye shall have."

Beloved friends, if we would pray less, and claim more, should we not have more unceasing themes for praise? We praise so little, because we have so little to praise for, having claimed so little. Oh, that this may be a year of wonderful claiming of rich, inexhaustible supplies from our covenant-keeping God!—Our Own Gazette.

MY PLEAS.

Who am I, that I should be Fretting this way all the time
Over things I cannot see?
But I'll tell it in my rhyme.

I was first a maiden young,
Full of life and spirits free,
When I met the man I loved;
Tall and brave and manly he.

I, his bride, was happy then
In the love returned for mine,
Happy yet to a degree
When his smiles return to shine.

But the element that makes Sunshine dim and life a burden,
Is an element of sin,
Making the affections harden.

Why should such an element
Find a place in homes like ours?
Why? The coils of secret fiends
Wound themselves o'er Eden bowers;

Caught my husband by the heart,
Stole affections that were mine,
Made him most unsociable,
And to unbelief incline;

Made him then deny his wife
Her right place within his heart,
Till she did th' injustice feel
And beneath its strokes to smart;

Made her feel that she was losing
All in life worth living for,
When he took the binding oath,
Setting right and wrong at war;

Wrong to win, and right to sever,
From the hearts long used to it;
Dragged the husband further from her
To the bottom of the pit.

Can there be a God of justice,
And allow the wife to suffer
From the lack of confidence
She should place in husband, brother?

Ay! the God of heaven reigns;
He'll give justice to the woman;
In his own good time he'll give it,
Though she be but poor and human.

Onward, Christian workers, forward!
Give to Satan what is due;
For be sure if you don't conquer,
He will surely conquer you.

Don't be conquered by the devil—
Put the secret fiends to flight;
Level all the walls of Ai
By your faith in God and right.

God will help you—never falter;
Tho' the way seem dark at first,
All the evils that surround us,
Like a bubble, yet shall burst.

TEMPERANCE.

ALCOHOLIC DELUSIONS.

BY DR. N. S. DAVIS, CHICAGO.

I was taught, like all others, to use alcohol as a tonic when patients were sick, to hasten their recovery and promote their strength; yet it did not take me very long to find out here and there one already a teetotaler, who would not take wine long, nor any kind of alcoholic drink unless prescribed, just as castor oil—dose by dose—and who, when he got beyond the necessity of having it as a medicine, took no more. What was the comparison? My patients who refused or did not take alcohol got strong quicker and had less tendency to relapse than those who continued its use. Here was the first step; consequently I came soon to cease the recommending it merely to hasten the recovery of strength.

NOT STRENGTHENING.

As a tonic I found it of no value. While the patients took it, for the first few days or nights (generally not more than a week) the anæsthetic effect diminished their feeling of weakness; but there lies the great delusion. One of the curiosities in alcohol is the delusion it has upon the world. The good old book did not say in vain that wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise! When a little alcohol is given, just such as would be considered a tonic, what does it do? Just like ether or chloroform, or any other anæsthetic, it dulls the cerebral hemispheres, and so removes for the time being the consciousness of aches and pains and weariness, and leaves the individual at ease. A little further and it diminishes these sensations still more, and the body begins to feel light, and hardly conscious of its own weight. In this stage there frequently comes the disposition to dance and sing and the tongue gets loose. (The world calls that excitement evidence of stimulus, but, instead of accepting that verdict, analyze it, and it is exactly parallel with every other anæsthetic. The patient goes through exactly the same stages with chloroform. But where is the surgeon who supposes that stimulates or invigorates his patient?) It is only the transition from the first beginning of diminished consciousness; next he begins to lose his sense of propriety, and talk as he would not talk were he free from that influence.

NOT PROTECTION FROM COLD.

The same influence causes him to say that it protects him from cold. How long the belief has prevailed that if you are going out into the cold you cannot stand it without having something to warm you! And people would testify before a court of justice that it did warm them! How many thousands of our profession have been giving it, are giving it to-day, when the feet are cold, to help to warm the patient; and yet the clinical thermometer tells you accurately, step by step that from thirty minutes after it is taken, on to the end of its influence, the temperature is diminished—the body is getting cold. The patient would testify the contrary. Why? Simply for the reason that the anæsthetic effect diminishes his consciousness of whether it is cold or not; but he finds out the fact the next morning. Had his sensibility remained he would have known when he was getting cold, and would have adopted the proper precautions.

NO PROTECTION FROM HEAT.

Look again when July comes, and the sun is pouring down, and the laborer, stripped almost to the skin, is delving or working, and dripping with perspiration. Watch him as he goes in front of that saloon; you will see him go in and take exactly the same beverage that he took last January to keep off the cold. You meet him at the door and ask him why he spends his money for such a purpose. From his very aspect you judge that his family are poor, and are, perhaps, needing the necessities of life. He will reply: "Oh! I cannot stand this heat without something to protect me from it"—exactly reversing the case. It warmed him in January, and now it keeps him cool—the same delusion! "It protects him from the heat." The sun's rays permeate him as freely with the alcohol in his blood as it would without it, but he does not realize it; and hence hundreds and hundreds, year after year, persist in this practice till perhaps sunstroke arrests them and sudden death follows. Leave their brain clear and free from the anæsthetic effect of alcohol, and they well know when to get on the shady side.

INJURING NURSING MOTHERS.

Just the same with our good ladies—for there are various veins in this delusion—in nursing; they suppose that nursing pulls upon their strength, and thins their blood, and that they must drink wine or beer every day, and two or three times a day, to keep up their strength. Now I have watched that as carefully, to use an expression, as a cat watches a mouse, and what is the result? The good mother takes her beer or her little wine every morning and each meal-time to keep up her strength while she is nursing, and sometimes they add, to make milk for the baby; but my experience and close observation for years is that mother suffers exactly the same delusion as the laboring man to whom I have referred. True, she feels weak, she gets tired easily, and with the little anæsthetic effect of alcohol, she does not realize the sense of weariness in her muscles, and she says, "It is the only thing that keeps me up, and enables me to get about;" but every one of them, within four to six weeks of its use, when they stop and compare their condition with what it was when they began, they know that their last state is worse than the first. The alcohol has been a positive injury to them. Its presence in the blood diminishes the absorption of oxygen in the air-cells of the lungs, as was long since proved. It lessens the exhalation of the waste carbonic acid, which is itself a further anæsthetic, and in the course of a few weeks the beer comes to supplant the appetite for food, and you find them trying to live upon it instead of upon digestible food material, of which they could make blood and flesh, and affected a hundred times more injuriously than if they had not taken a drop. I mention these points simply as illustrations. Step by step the progress of science has nullified every theory on which the physician administers alcohol.

NUGGETS.

There are in the United States 36,000 more saloons than public schools.

There were in 1892 nearly 7,000 murders in the United States, a large proportion of them caused, directly or indirectly, by strong drink.

The town of Gojūmra, Japan, is a total abstinence place; and over each house, it is stated, a motto is placed, reading, "Frugal in all things; liquor prohibited."

The New Brunswick legislature has unanimously passed a resolution requesting the dominion parliament to enact a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors.

It is greatly to the credit of Admiral Gherardi, of the United States Navy, that at his express request no liquors were to be served at a collation proposed by the chamber of commerce for the men marching in the procession of the naval parade in New York City.

A little girl in Manchester, England, attended a Band of Hope meeting, and when the speaker said that the drink stripped home of furniture, and women and children of clothes, she exclaimed: "That's what it does at my home." The next time she was sent to the public house for drink she asked for three pennyworth of "stripped homes".

The president of the University of Bethlehem, Pa., prohibited the students bringing beer on the campus to be used at their merrymakings. The girls of the town have established a boycott on the young men engaged in the practice, and many families have notified them to discontinue their visits, as they do not wish to have any intercourse with beer-drinking students.

The intemperate man bequeaths a terrible legacy to his posterity. A distinguished German authority thus describes the effect of the drink habit on succeeding generations: The characteristics of the first generation are depravity and alcoholic excess; those of the second, the drink mania, attacks of insanity and general paralysis; in the third, science expects hypochondria, melancholy, and tendencies to murder; while the characteristics of the fourth are imbecility, idiocy and extinction of family.—United Presbyterian.

Alcoholism is yearly becoming more prevalent and more severe in France. French savants have most accurately described it in all its effects—but what has been done to remedy it? During the last year the result of the discussion has been that the tax on spirits must be considerably raised, and that wine, beer and cider must be entirely free from taxation. And before anyone can do anything further it will be deemed needful to await the result of such a measure as this. Opium intoxication has been superadded to that from alcohol; especially in Paris.—International Magazine.

BIBLE LESSON.

LESSONS FROM THE LIFE OF PAUL.

LESSON I.—Third Quarter, 1893.—July 2.

SUBJECT.—Paul Called to Europe.—Acts 16: 6-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 28: 19.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. An unlooked-for obstacle.—vs. 6-8. "And were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia." That is, a small Roman province called by that name. This is the first time that we read of the Holy Spirit directly guiding the missionary enterprises of the early church. It is quite as important to be obedient to the negative as the positive leadings of this divine Agent. If an opportunity to work for God seems to open before us, and he shuts the door, it is only that he may open to us another and a wider door. Europe was now ripe for missionary labor, which had not been the case at any previous period. Everywhere the old idolatry was crumbling, and the people were being prepared in various ways to receive the truth.

2. Paul's vision.—vs. 9, 10. It may well be imagined that the apostles, in their perplexity, knowing not which way to turn, prayed for help and guidance, and were answered by this night vision to Paul. "A man of Macedonia." This kingdom, founded by Philip of Macedon, had exerted a mighty influence on the world. By the fusing into one of the scattered states of Greece, though the union was but temporary, the Greek language, and with it the Greek refinement and culture, had been spread through the civilized world. Even Rome herself was forced to bow to the spell and acknowledge a power higher than her own. Her poets and philosophers sat at the feet of the Greek Academicians, and her youth were instructed in the Greek language as a constituent part of polite learning. Paul could reason in their own tongue with the most acute and sophisticated of this acute and versatile race, and thus he was the one fitted to be sent on such an errand. The Holy Spirit does not make mistakes. He does not send his messengers without regard to their qualifications, and the circumstances which environ them, and there is reason to doubt whether we hear aright a call of God which seems to be plainly opposed to all providential indications of his will. Among other suggestions we note: (1) The Macedonian cry has been sounding in the ears of the church for nineteen centuries, and it is sounding now louder than ever before. (2) Macedonia, though the popular view limits it to the foreign missionary field, may mean the heathen in our city slums, or our back-country districts, where may be found cases of the most appalling degradation and crime. (3) The apostles were obedient to the heavenly vision. They spent no time in discussing the difficulties in the way, but set sail immediately. Every employer considers promptness a prime virtue in the man he employs, for it is generally found combined with other desirable qualities. A servant who is always prompt to obey every command is almost sure to be faithful, honest and energetic. Let us remember that God places a high value on promptness in his service.

3. The first female prayer meeting.—vs. 11-15. Their first objective point was Philippi, where there were Jews and proselytes, not numerous, nor, for the most part, wealthy, as they were not able to have a regular synagogue; but in preaching to them the apostles found an entering wedge for work among the Gentiles. They did not despise small beginnings, but pressed in wherever they found an open door. From a human point of view the situation looked discouraging—only a handful of women to preach to out of the population of a great city; but, in fact, this very circumstance was one of the proofs that they were in the way of God's ordering. With him the greatest movements have always the smallest beginnings. Reformers should feel encouraged rather than the opposite when they find only a small company waiting to hear the truth, or when few or none of the rich or so-called great are moved to give it their countenance. Another encouraging feature about this first meeting on European soil was that it was held in "a place where prayer was wont to be made". The atmosphere was filled with sacred associations, as with fragrant incense. The battle against evil can only be waged successfully through prayer. Reform workers may here find several important suggestions. (1) That they hold their meetings in places whose walls habitually echo to the voice of prayer, rather than in public halls used for all manner of secular purposes. (2) The apostles began their first attack on this strongly entrenched system of heathenism, on the Sabbath. There is no day better fitted to begin an onslaught against evil, and especially that modern system of heathenism—the secret lodge. (3) The wonderful results which flowed from Paul's preaching to these few women show what a high place God has assigned to woman in the evangelizing of the world, and how important it is in every good work to first enlist her sympathy and aid.

4. The Christian business woman.—vs. 14, 15. There are many who argue that it is impossible to be successful and conduct a large business in its minutest detail in the fear of God. But Lydia's example proves the contrary. God opened her heart, and then she opened her house. The open heart must come before the open house or the open purse-strings. "If ye have judged me to be faithful." God's greatest reward for faithful service is to honor us with more work to do, and to open before us wider avenues of usefulness.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society is printing for use by the Baptist missions on the Congo a special edition of the New Testament in which the Congo term for immerse is used, with the Greek term for baptize placed immediately after in brackets.

—William H. Leslie, M.D., formerly a student of the Chicago Bible Institute, and a graduate of Rush Medical College, class of 1893, sails for Africa in July. He goes as a missionary of the Baptist Board and will be located at Banza Manteke, Congo Free State.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

—An English Endeavorer says that one aim of the society is to do away with religious cripples.

—When Christians unite they will not unite in the Y. P. S. C. E., but in the church of Christ. Those who stop in the Y. P. S. C. E. will have one more step to take—The Christian, St. John, N. B.

—One of the most interesting Christian Endeavor societies visited by President Clark in China was a junior society at Shanghai, none of the members of which came from a Christian home. The place of meeting was a building formerly used as a Buddhist temple.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—All of the Chicago churches observed Children's Day with a children's service, with flowers, music, recitations, the giving of Bibles, baptism of infants, etc. Many of the pastors preached sermons to the children. The day was beautiful, and throngs attended the services.

—The annual meeting of the Illinois Home Missionary Society recently held, was large and interesting. The usual reports were presented and carefully considered. Contributions to home missions from the State amounted to $46,944; amount appropriated within the State, $25,522; applied to National work, $16,719. The plan of National Home Missionary work, including the changes suggested and adopted by the convention in New York, was heartily approved. The officers enter upon the work of the new year hopefully, encouraged by the fact that the receipts for the past year were in excess of those of any previous year.

—Wheaton College had a hearing in the Hinsdale church, May 29, and in the Atkinson church, June 4. In both places substantial additions were made to the subscriptions.

—Among the eighteen members received at the Ft. Berthold Mission, N. Dakota, 17 were Indians. The collection was $21. A council of the missionaries has just been held, twelve being present. The schools are fuller than ever, and the church membership is increasing. The work was never more prosperous, while the financial outlook was never darker.

—The 40,000 Congregationalists of Illinois contributed to church work last year $1,000,000, $280,000 of which was for missions.

—A Congregational church in Honolulu raises $35,000 a year for religious purposes, an average of $70 a member.

—The alcove of the Congregational exhibit at the Fair has been placed between that of the Presbyterians on the one side and of the Unitarians on the other.

—The late J. Henry Stickney of Baltimore made several notable bequests. Among them were $150,000 to the American Home Missionary Society the first Congregational Society of Baltimore, $15,000 to the American Missionary Society, $12,000 to the Congregational Sunday-school Society.

FREE METHODIST.

—The Chicago district will hold their annual camp-meeting, Aug. 16-22, in William Marshall's grove, three miles west of St. Charles. This is a beautiful grove on the Chicago & Great Western railroad. Persons coming over the C. & N. W. R. R. to St. Charles will be met with teams and carried to the grounds.

LUTHERAN.

—Fifteen thousand Swedish Lutherans gathered at Rock Island, Ill., June 9, the occasion being the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of their church, and the principal orator of the day, Bishop Knut Hennings von Scheele, the envoy of King Oscar.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—At the international convention of Epworth Leagues, to be held at Cleveland June 29 to July 2, the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes of London is expected to speak on city evangelization, and Bishop Thoburn, Chaplain McCabe and others on missions.

—Bishop Fowler recently laid the corner stones of two fine Methodist churches on the same day, which had been built by the same board of trustees and were controlled by the same congregation. One was Christ church, Pittsburgh, the other Calvary church, Allegheny City, Pa.

—The missionary debt of the Methodist Episcopal church was $120,000, when a few months ago pledges were made covering the entire amount. Of this sum $70,000 has been paid into the treasury.

—It is suspected that the Methodist church at Quitman, Mo., recently destroyed, was set on fire in revenge for the activity of its members during the no-license campaign against saloons.

MOHAMMEDAN.

—Dr. G. C. Majunibar, of Calcutta, India, who has been in attendance at the World's Medical Congresses, in an interview at Washington, among other interesting statements said that ex-Consul Webb's scheme to establish a Mohammedan colony in the United States would prove a failure because the natives would not leave their homes in any number, and that on account of his own visit to America he will be barred from social life among members of his own caste in India.

MORAVIANS.

—The Moravians contribute for missions an average of $1.10 per member. Bishop Levering accounts for this as follows: "When converts join the church we try to get them to realize that they are joining a great missionary society."

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Last year the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, by a vote of 105 to 90, made a declaration in favor of the eligibility of women to the office of ruling elder. The General Assembly this year, by a vote of 175 to 5, has decided to submit the question to the Presbyterians.

QUAKERS.

—The Quakers have one mission in China, one in Japan, four in India, one in Syria and one in Madagascar. There may be 15,000 Quakers now in Great Britain and Ireland, which is somewhere about one-fourth of what there are in the United States and Canada. Elsewhere we have a few members who are doing all they can for Christianity.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Board of Home Missions has organized 132 new churches, and undertaken new work to the amount of $31,444. The total receipts were $964,454.

—This year closes half a century of our foreign missionary work. On July 14, 1843, Rev. Joseph Banks was sent to labor among the Coolies and Negroes of the Island of Trinidad. Since the sailing of that first missionary 153 persons have been sent to the work—of whom 55 were men, and 98 were women. Forty-one native churches have been organized, over 12,000 persons have been gathered in to profess their faith in Christ, and more than 100,000, it is believed, have heard the Gospel for the first time from our missionaries.

Y. M. C. A.

—The beautiful mansion on West Monroe street, near Ashland Boulevard, in this city, recently purchased and fitted up for the permanent home of the West Side Department of the Association, was formally dedicated, with appropriate services, on Sunday afternoon, June 11. The auditorium was well filled with young men. A glee club composed of the members of the department led in the singing. The Scripture was read by Rev. Mr. Powell of Ohio and the dedicatory prayer was offered by Rev. Frederick Campbell of the Jefferson Park Presbyterian church. Rev. Dr. Goodwin of the First Congregational church indulged in some reminiscences of the early days of the association, and Prof. Graham Taylor of the Chicago Theological Seminary spoke on the theme, "Combination of Circumstances that Make the Young Men's Christian Association necessary in 1893." Rev. T. N. Morrison, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, spoke on "The Association as a Nineteenth Century Movement." Rev. Dr. Lawrence of the Second Baptist church and L. Wilbur Messer of the Chicago association also made addresses.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D.D.:—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848: "North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

A. M. MILLIGAN, D.D.:—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society: a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D.D.:—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason:—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. WARD, missionary in India:—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowery Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

DRS. LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PORTER and THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature:—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

REV. MOSES THATCHER:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TAKING CARE OF THE CLOTHES-LINE.

Washing-day is too full of hard work and vexation to take any risks of having to do any portion of the work over, and the housekeeper who looks well to the accessories to such labor may save many an annoyance and a great deal of weariness, beside considerable time.

Among the unnecessaries of such occasions is the patching and piecing-out of clothes-lines, the work of rubbing them with wet rags and the not unusual occurrence of a bad break, when the entire contents of the line may have to be rinsed again, even if not necessary to give them a thorough washing to remove spots and stains.

Clothes-lines should be carefully taken down as soon as the clothes are dry. In doing this do not drag them on the ground or pull them over the dusty walks or porches, for they are liable to be damp and will catch any particles of dirt that they come in contact with. This necessitates a thorough cleaning when they must be used again, or the risk of making spots on the clothes. Tie the line up in a close bale and put it in a bag kept expressly for this purpose.

Some people leave the lines out from week to week, and, as a consequence, have to clean them and take the chances of having streaks and soils on the clean clothes, or, worse than this, find them parted in some weak spot and the wash splattered and dragging in the mud. The few minutes' work necessary to take down and put away all lines is time well spent.—New York Ledger.

WHEN WASHING WINDOWS.

Use plenty of clean cloths, change the water often, and rub the panes until perfectly clear and dry. Then the glass will be clean, no matter what particular method is followed. To go more into detail, here is a good rule: Half fill a pail with tepid water, and add to it four tablespoonfuls of household ammonia. Wash the glass with old linen, or a piece of cheesecloth. Rinse the cloth often, and squeeze so, dry that the water will not run from it. Rub the glass quite hard. Now wipe dry with a clean piece of cheesecloth, and polish with a chamois skin or a piece of newspaper which has been crushed in the hands until soft. Change the water often, and always have the drying cloth perfectly dry and clean. Some housekeepers use only chamois skins for washing and wiping the windows, but I have found the above method more satisfactory.—Ladies' Home Journal.

COOKING IN HIGH ALTITUDES.

Housewives who think they struggle with many difficulties in cooking should be thankful that they are not dwellers in some of the high places in the west. There, according to the testimony of cooks, many recipes, and those for rich cakes in particular, are a failure. A woman living in one of the western forts, at an altitude of 5,600 feet above the level of the sea, found out by inquiring of the best cooks in the garrison that more flour and eggs and less butter and sugar must be used in cake baking than in lower latitudes.

The largest quantity of butter that could be used successfully in a large loaf of cake was one-half cup. Those who have lived in some parts of Colorado at an elevation of 9,000 feet or more have also noticed the effect of the altitude on cooking and found it necessary to revise their recipes.—New York World.

TO CURE EARACHE.

Take olive oil, one drachm; ether, one drachm; tincture of opium, one drachm; oil of bergamot, fifteen drops. Mix well together. A drop or two in the ear will cure the ache and soothe the sufferer to sleep in a very short time. The mixture should be kept in a bottle with a ground glass stopper to prevent evaporation. This is for children who suffer from earache, as children so often do.

which is added a sufficient quantity of sugar to correspond with the constituents of mother's milk. WHAT OUR WOMEN NEED.

A good rule to live by in these days when there is such a mental strain upon women as well as upon men, is to go out in the evening as often as you stay at home, and stay at home as often as you go out. We want to alternate things a little in this world. Variety is not only the spice, but the medicine and tonic of life. A change is good for us all. Live in a rut, and you will think in a rut. Going out evenings does not necessarily imply the expenditure of money if the domestic purse will not bear it. We need not go to the theater, to a concert, to a lecture, each time that we venture out.

The best society in this world is that of our friends—those whom we know to be our friends, to be sympathetic with our beliefs, to be in touch with our surroundings. An evening at the house of friends, or they at our house, is relaxation and diversion from the day's thoughts. Friends we all have—some more, some less—and the very fact of seeing other faces takes us out of ourselves, lifts us into new spheres of thought, gives us new ideas and takes us away from what we have to face on the morrow.—Ladies' Home Journal.

FARM NOTES.

THE PROPER FEEDING OF STOCK.

Prof. Henry has found by experiment in feeding hogs that bone meal makes corn go farther, and that hardwood ashes are nearly as good as bone meal. The effect of the bone meal and ashes was to save 28 per cent of the corn required to produce 100 pounds of gain. There was about 50 per cent more ash in the bones of the hogs receiving bone meal or hardwood ashes than in the bones of those not so fed.

The following points on feeding are condensed from the experience of the Missouri experiment station:

Rule 1. Feed animals as much as they can digest without injuring their health.

Rule 2. Feed a "balanced ration," i.e., one in which the composition is in proportion to their needs.

Rule 3. Food is required to maintain animal heat; save food by providing warm but ventilated shelter for your stock.

Rule 4. Stimulate the digestive capacity of your animal by a variety of food, salt, etc.

Stock foods are composed of substances usually arranged into six groups:

1. Water. The amount varies with kind of food. It is of no economic importance.

2. Ash. This is the residue left after burning away the combustible portions. It supplies the mineral ingredients to the animal body. A portion of the ash has a manurial value.

3. Protein. This is the nitrogenous portion of the food. It is used in the animal economy to form "muscle" and all other nitrogenous portions of the body; it also aids in the formation of fat. It is the most valuable ingredient.

4. Fat. This substance produces animal heat, or is stored up in the body as fat for future use. One pound of fat will produce as much heat as two and one-half pounds of carbohydrates.

5. Carbohydrates. This group includes the starches, gums, sugars, etc. They produce fat and heat.

6. Fiber. This substance has about the same composition as the carbohydrates, but it is much less digestible; it is of but little value.

In a paper before the Wisconsin farmers' institute, George Wylie said: "Peas sown as early in spring as possible make good feed for hogs. This crop is not appreciated by our farmers as it should be and probably will be in the near future. The peas are ready for use just when the pasture begins to fail and before any other farm crop is available. Peas range in price from 75 cents to upwards of $1 per bushel; and while they are worth far more than corn for growing bone and muscle in young pigs, we have no authentic evidence that when the hogs come to be finished up for pork they will make more pounds of pork at that particular time than will a bushel of corn. Yet I believe a bushel of corn and peas, half and half, will make more pork than a bushel of either fed alone."

DAIRY NOTES.

When the dairyman can feed his cows, and feed them well, with feed that is all home-grown, he will be far more independent than he is now, compelled to pay exorbitant prices for mill feed of various kinds. With clover hay and ensilage or dry fodder for forage, corn and Soja bean meal for the grain feed, what more do we want? Something with which to dilute the Soja meal? Well, I'd sooner use dust than pay millers $20 a ton for their bran when they only pay me about $23 a ton for my wheat. I would like a little more reciprocity in mine.—A. L. Crosby.

What would be thought of a dairyman who partly skimmed his milk before he sold it and then threw the cream away. And yet that is just what he does when he tries to get a yield of rich milk by half-feeding a cow. On a full ration a cow will support herself and give plenty of rich milk; with a half ration she will still give milk, but she takes most of the cream off of it and uses it for her own support. Given a good cow and it is only a question of good feed and plenty of it, and the profit will be found in the milk with all the cream in it.

The Internal Revenue Commissioner reports that the increase of receipts from the oleomargarine tax for the nine months ended March 31, 1893, amounted to $266,864. This means that the rendering establishments crowded out of the market 13,343,200 pounds of butter more than in the same nine months of the preceding year.

Butter on exhibition at the World's Fair will be judged on the following scale of points: Flavor, 45; grain, 25; color, 15; salting, 10; and packing, 5; total, 100. The general standard of color will be "June grass butter."

Pea meal is now recommended in reasonable terms by the best dairy authorities and the chemists are following with their approval based on analysis. It is especially recommended for muscle-making, for milk and butter.

The law in New York against the sale of substitutes for butter is said to work very well. The State dairy commissioner claims it has almost wholly stopped the sale of oleomargarine and its cousins in the Empire State.

A few good cows ought to support their owner if he gives them good feed and care, but they ought not to be expected to do that, and at the same time support about as many more that do not pay for their keeping.

It is tough on the farmers of this section to go into a store where a dozen full crocks are seen, and in answer to the question be told "We have no good butter."—Geneva Advertiser.

WATERS.

John Hare Powell, of Philadelphia, Pa., more than half a century ago predicted the great success that awaited the enterprising blooded stock raisers who would settle beyond the Alleghenies, where land was good and cheap. He imported Wye Comet, Durham bull, cost £1,000. His boys stayed on the farm to master his business, and now are the owners of Shadeland, at Stoneboro, Pa., with thirteen neighboring farms, rented, and have the greatest blooded stock farm in the world.

It was stated before the British commissioner of agriculture recently that there was enough margarine imported into England every year to furnish three and one-half pounds per head to the population. Most of it is sold as butter.

In the case of the arrest of several of the men implicated in the lynching of the Negro murderer, Sam Bush, at Decatur, Ill., the grand jury created great surprise by failing to indict any one for that barbarous crime, the particulars of which appeared in a previous issue of this paper. Surely it was not for want of evidence that this great outrage had been committed.

Last week, during a pleasant interview, at this office, with Mr. John McDowell, a prominent Prohibitionist from Oamaru, New Zealand, he was asked what is the influence of the Good Templars upon the local temperance work. His reply was, that "unfortunately they are too lukewarm to carry much influence." This, we believe, is the general testimony against the secret societies in any important reform. It is also proper to add that until after leaving New Zealand Mr. McDowell had never heard of our organization and its anti-secrecy work.

Thoroughly convinced that the question of Sabbath opening of the World's Fair is now definitely settled in favor of the Sunday-openers, and of the hopelessness of reviving it in the courts with any satisfactory result, the N. C. A. Board of Directors, on Saturday, expressed their marked denunciation of the spirit of greed and disregard of law and patriotism exhibited by the management of the Exposition. In view of the circumstances they instructed the N. C. A. Committee on Exhibit, so far as it can practicably be done, to withdraw their collection from the Exposition.

It was with much pleasure that we were on Saturday permitted to welcome to his former home in this city, after an absence of several years, our esteemed friend and co-worker, Rev. James P. Stoddard, the New England Secretary of the N. C. A. His labors in behalf of the anti-secrecy cause have been abundant and fruitful during his absence, as the Cynosure has amply testified; and we are glad to report him in good health and spirits, and armed and equipped for a continuance of his "telling" attacks upon the kingdom of darkness. He will remain here for a few days.

The Pope has issued another encyclical, addressed to Cardinal Gibbons in Baltimore, relative to schools in the United States, which endorses Satolli and Archbishop Ireland's system of education. Is not the alien head of the Romish church too officious in settling the character of our American educational institutions, when his satellites represent a foreign church comprising only about one-sixth of our population?

Besides the proceedings of the annual meeting of the N. C. A., we publish herewith the reports of the Corresponding Secretary, the Board of Directors, the Treasurer and Auditors, in all of which our readers, we are sure, will find matters of interest. Next week it is purposed to print the reports of the Field Secretary, the Eastern Agent, and the Committee on Obituary. All these reports convey a very accurate idea of the work and the needs of the Association.

Last week, Mrs. Margaret Rice, an esteemed evangelist, aged seventeen, who has been conducting open-air religious meetings in the West Division, was arrested by a policeman while preaching on West Madison street, and was taken to the station. The alleged provocation was her great success in collecting a crowd of listeners about her, to the annoyance of a neighboring merchant. Friends rallied to her assistance, and she was released on bail. At her subsequent trial she was fined for obstructing the street, but her fine was remitted. The whole affair was disgraceful in the extreme. If she deserved to pay a fine, why was it not demanded; if she was not amenable to the law, why was she arrested?

The new Board of Directors, elected at the annual meeting of the N. C. A., last week, met at the Cynosure office on Saturday last and organized, with Rev. E. R. Worrell as chairman, and Rev. Edgar B. Wylie as secretary. The election of W. I. Phillips as General Secretary and Publisher was confirmed. Henry M. Hugunin, who has served for two years past as office editor of the Cynosure, was re-elected for a third term. In the absence of the chairman, E. Whipple presided at Saturday's meeting, at which ten members of the board were present, including A. G. Johnson, a new accession, of whom an interesting sketch is soon to appear. The proceedings of the board, prepared by the secretary, will be printed in the Cynosure.

A Massachusetts paper—the Boston Record—prints nearly half a column, relating how Rev. J. F. Lovering, of Somerville, in that State, pastor of a local Congregational church, a 32-degree Mason, a chaplain in the G. A. R., and "a member of several other fraternal organizations," recently attended a Masonic banquet, and immediately afterward attempted to perform the marriage ceremony for an expectant pair of lovers. The wedding occurred—if at all—in a church, but the important service was inaudible or confused, as competent witnesses testify. As he explained his condition to the standing committee, "he had been at a Masonic banquet and had suffered from some lobster salad which he had unwisely eaten Tuesday evening, and had used whisky because he was unable to get Jamaica ginger, which he really wished. The standing committee was inclined to be very lenient with Mr. Lovering on account of his splendid record, and thought his explanation that, in his wife's absence, not knowing where the Jamaica ginger was, he should have taken the whisky, which was not good for him, was reasonable. What some of the parishioners ask is why he went to a bottle instead of to a doctor." His explanation was followed by the acceptance of his resignation as pastor of the church; and he is left free to remain undisturbed in his fraternal relations and booziness. What a spectacle!

France, as in many previous cases where her political character was at stake, has made another lamentable failure in bringing to justice the prime movers in the enormous Panama canal frauds, the exposure of which came so near disrupting the government, and did seriously injure the fair reputation of several of her prominent citizens. The trials in those cases, it will be remembered, brought about the conviction of Messrs. Eiffel, Charles and Ferdinand DeLesseps, Fontaine and Cottu, who were respectively sentenced to confinement. Quite recently the French Court of Cassation has set aside these sentences, basing its decision on the statute of limitations—three years having elapsed between the corrupt use of the Panama funds by the accused and their indictment. This defection permitted the court to release Eiffel and Charles DeLesseps from confinement, and to annul the sentences against the others. Thus, while their crime was proven beyond a doubt, a legal technicality relieves them from just punishment and restores them to society. We have known similar cases in America, under other circumstances and different pretexts. The law is therefore frequently made the coadjutor of crime and the protector of criminals, instead of becoming the minister of justice.

THE SINFULNESS OF WAR.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

I have nowhere seen so able an apology for war, as the right and duty of nations under some circumstances, as in Pres. James Fairchild's System of Moral Science. Because of the excellence of this work in its general character, it seems to me all the more important to call attention to what I regard as an inconsistency with its distinctive teachings as well as with the Gospel of Christ.

The learned author very wisely abstains from all reference to ancient Jewish wars, for manifestly what was then permitted, or even required, is not necessarily just under the fuller revelation of the law of Christ. He bases his entire argument on the vastly higher standard of New Testament morality, and holds that the great law of Christian benevolence is binding on nations in their relations to one another, just as truly as on persons. Unquestionably, the rulers of nations, both in their individual character and as the representatives of governments, are required by the law of Christ to "love their enemies, bless them that curse them, do good unto them that hate them, and pray for them that persecute them." How a nation whose rulers were actuated by such a spirit could ever become involved in a war, is a mystery to be explained. Surely this is not the spirit that leads to war.

It is quite remarkable that two of our ablest writers on moral science should, from the same premises, have arrived at exactly opposite conclusions. The late Francis Wayland, speaking of the relations of men in organized society, says:

1. The individual has, by the law of God, no right to return evil for evil; but is bound to conduct towards every other individual, of whatever nation soever, upon the principles of charity.
 2. The individual has no right to authorize society to do anything contrary to the law of God; that is to say, men connected in societies are under the same moral law as individuals. What is forbidden to the one is forbidden to the other.
 3. Hence I conclude that an injury is to be treated in the same manner; that is, that we are under obligations to forgive the offending party and to strive to render him both better and happier.
- Hence it would seem that all wars are contrary to the revealed will of God, and that the individual has no right to commit to society, nor society to commit to government, the power to declare war. Such, I must confess, seems to me to be the will of our Creator; and that hence, to all arguments brought in favor of war, it is a sufficient answer that God has forbidden it, and that no consequences can possibly be conceived to arise from keeping his law so terrible as that which must arise from violating it.—Moral Science, p. 392.

As President Fairchild comes to an opposite conclusion, there must be an error in the reasoning of one or the other of these distinguished writers. Let us examine their reasons. Pres. Fairchild assumes that war may be justifiable as the necessary means of sustaining civil government. He says:

A government must have the right to execute its own just laws. If resistance is offered to the execution of them it must be put down, or government is at end. If a mob interferes, the mob must be quelled at any necessary sacrifice of life. If resistance grows into insurrection, it must still be suppressed. If such a manifestation and use of power is war, on the part of government and in execution of its wholesome laws war is right.—Moral Science, p. 186.

He further argues that if it is right to resort to war to suppress insurrection, it must also be right to repel foreign aggression by the same means.

The author here makes two serious mistakes. He assumes that war (that is, military power directed by military law as distinguished from civil law) is sometimes necessary to the support of government. This remains to be proved. He also assumes that war is right because it is necessary to the accomplishment of a good end. But nothing can be shown to be necessary until it is first proved to be right. The end, however desirable, does not justify the use of any but righteous means, and that which necessitates the use of any means that are unlawful is not a good end.

Unquestionably we ought to sustain civil government, but only by righteous means. That government may have penalties, and that these may be enforced by the exercise of physical power, is admitted. How far this use of physical power may be carried is a separate question; but its use in the execution of lawful authority is not necessarily war.

The author misapprehends the objections to war, and hence he evades, rather than answers, them. It is not whether just laws should be enforced, but rather how they are to be enforced. The execution of civil law by civil authority is one thing; the maintenance of a military system under military law is, as will be shown, quite a different thing.

Military law is, in its nature and purposes, essentially different from civil law. It requires what manifestly contravenes the law of Christ. Civil law in its essential character is a declaration of what is just. This is always assumed to be true. "Whatsoever is just," said Cicero, "is always true law." Blackstone says that "laws in contravention with fundamental morality are in their nature void." An oath to obey the civil laws is simply an oath to do right.

Not so with the laws of war. The oath of every soldier on entering the army is to obey his commanding officers. In taking this oath he reserves no rights of conscience. If the military officers command him to do an act from which his moral sense revolts, such as firing shot and shell into a city in which he believes there are many innocent persons, he has no choice between implicit obedience and the forfeiture of his life. Now the author holds, very justly, that no man has a right under any circumstances to obey any command that requires the violation of the law of love; and that neither the civil officer nor the soldier has a right to yield such obedience. He says:

In ordinary cases, a sheriff or soldier may do what he is bidden to do, but if there be manifest wickedness in the transaction, or ground to apprehend there is, the subordinate must judge for himself and act on his own responsibility. He cannot shift the burden from himself to his superiors.—P. 176.

One would suppose that from the manner in which soldiers and sheriffs are spoken of, that their relation to superior authorities was much alike, and that it would be as easy in the one case as the other to escape the commission of crime. But the relation of the soldier to his commanders is widely different from that of any civil officer. The sheriff swore to execute the laws with the distinct understanding that they were in harmony with justice. Should he find that he was mistaken, and that he cannot do what is required of him without wrong-doing, he can either resign, or he may refuse to obey and take the consequences, or appeal to the courts. In any case, he could only be dispossessed of his office. Not so with the soldier. He took his oath without any such understanding. If he finds that he is required to do what his conscience forbids, he has no choice but to obey or to die. He cannot resign; and if he deserts, he will, if taken, be punished with death. It is not for him to appeal even to a court-martial; but if he disobeys, he may be brought before one and condemned to death for insubordination. Doubtless it is the duty of all men to choose death rather than sin, but surely it is not any man's duty to take an oath that may involve either wrong-doing or death. The great majority of common soldiers are not men of fine moral sensibilities. There is much in the soldier's life to perplex and benumb all sense of right; but many a soldier has been shot in his tracks for doing what he thought was right, under the circumstances. The absolute authority of the officer over his soldiers, irrespective of any rights of conscience on their part, is, and must be, a necessary incident of war. If every soldier retained his rights of conscience, and acted on his own judgment as to the propriety of what was required at his hands, an army would be impossible. There might be a great company of men, but they would be less efficient than an ordinary mob; for mobs are generally actuated by one common impulse to do some specific thing. The ideal army is a machine, in which each soldier plays the part of a cog, crank, or valve in the great engine. Conscience? What has conscience to do with the business of war? To consent to be a part of such a machine, and to swear to do so, is to take leave of personal responsibility to God.

Police officers do not take such an oath, and police regulations do not come under military law. When police authority gives way to actual war conducted on military principles, it ceases to be a legitimate means of government. The end to be obtained cannot justify the means. No means can be necessary to any good object if they are intrinsically unrighteous, or if they involve on the part of any one the relinquishment of personal responsibility to God. When the great mass of the people of any large section of country become convinced that they ought to have political separation, however much other people may think them mistaken, and however they may deprecate their conduct, it is far better, because far more in harmony with the law of love, to let them go, and await the return of sober second thought rather than to resort to war. The revolt of the ten tribes under Jeroboam was a great mistake on their part and a great evil to the Hebrew people, but it did not justify war for its suppression. It would have been far better for Great Britain to have quietly consented to let her American colonies depart in peace rather than to have gone to war with them; and I may add, that it would have been far more in harmony with the Christianity which they professed, if the colonies had borne their burdens with patience, until the mother country had become convinced of the justice of their cause, and conceded what she has since given to Canada—a virtual independence.

The author concedes that on one side or the other and often on both sides war is unjustifiable and simply a stupendous crime. This is, at least, true of the great majority of wars. But the author says:

That defensive war is prohibited by the Divine command does not appear, unless the general requirement to love our enemies and the exhortation not to resist evil, be taken as such prohibition. But if these prohibit war in self defense, they equally prohibit the infliction of any evil in the punishment of crime.—P. 190.

This by no means follows; for crime may be punished by civil law, which is essentially different in its character from the military system. War is not simply force, but force used under the military system. It is this last that we utterly condemn.

LIGHT VS. SECRETISM.

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come."—Isa. 60: 1.

For a great while I have been pondering over some little thoughts about the word "light". What a blessed thought that light is universal! Like many of the gifts of God, it is given without respect to persons, and without respect to character. Let us inquire what is here meant by light.

We must each of us realize an illumination of God in our individual soul. There must be a new revealing. We may have known, as it were, the presence of God as the early Christians did; but what we want in our every-day life is a personal illumination. All through the Bible, light means a revelation of God's divine will. It is a marvelous light. But I want you who read this for a moment or two to consider the conditions upon which this light is given.

I. YOU MUST BE WILLING TO RECEIVE IT.

Are you? Do you want to know God's will concerning secret societies? Are you anxious to receive the light on this thing? or are you like a man who has in his pocket a doubtful five-dollar piece, and who feels he would rather not tender it at the railway or postoffice, because he is afraid it will not stand the test of the light? Do you want to know God's will—the light? If so, if you say you are willing to receive it, do not shut your eyes and turn your backs and refuse light because you are afraid your actions will not bear the light upon them.

Now, what is God's will concerning secret societies? I will give it from his book—the Bible. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Eph. 5: 11. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord," etc. 2 Cor. 6: 17. These two passages, and there are many more, reveal to us God's will. Do you ask why you should not join a secret society? or why you should "come out from among them?"

1. Because they are of the world and in their very nature are worldly, and he that would be in friendship with the world voluntarily renounces his friendship with God, and is therefore at enmity with God. And he says, "He that is not with me is against me." Luke 11: 23.

2. Because they deliberately violate and request the candidate for initiation to violate the third commandment. Now for a moment open your Bible and read on bended knees before God the fourth verse of the fifth chapter of Leviticus. Read it carefully, considerately and prayerfully, and having done so, ask yourselves this question, can I conscientiously commit such a sin as to violate that law?

3. Because secret societies are a curse to our commonwealth, our churches and homes.

4. Because they destroy man's free-will agency and private judgment, making him a slave to the opinions, rules, laws and tyranny of others, in defiance to laws of God and morality.

5. Because the very object of deriving benefit financial and otherwise in futurity is an evidence of a serious lack of faith in God. The blessed Word says, "Without faith it is impossible to please God."

6. Because to join or remain with an organization founded on secretism is a direct violation of God's divine will. Now can you say honestly you are glad to receive the light? Are you glad to know God's will?

II. The second condition is a willingness to walk in the light, or, in other words, a willingness to regulate your conduct by the light that is given. Now I want you to understand this one thing, God will not give you more light unless you act up to what has already been given you. It is unreasonable to suppose that God will give us more light when we are unwilling to act up to that we already have.

Now, dear fellow-travellers to eternity, God has given you a revelation of his divine will. He has given you the "light". He speaks even now to your heart and reveals the fact that you must renounce secret societies once and for all. You have the light! You know his will concerning you. Are you willing to obey him? Are you willing to walk in the light? Are you willing to let God's will be your aim and object to obey? Remember, after you have received the light and refuse to walk in it, you voluntarily sin against God, and are in danger of being cast into "outer darkness," for sin shall not go unpunished. But walk in the light, obey the will of God. Let God have his own way with you now, and do whatsoever he commands you. "Come out from among them and be ye separate." "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."—John Bennetts Bailey, in the Vanguard, St. Louis.

The Committee on Resolutions, by Rev. T. H. Acheson, presented a report which was, after amendment, adopted as follows:

THE RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That having heard with gratitude the reports for the past year of the various agents of the Association, we express our high appreciation of the character of the work done by them, and that we hereby tender to them our sincere thanks.

2. That we urge all the churches of Christ in our land to take every proper step for the final eradication of the evil of oathbound secrecy from their membership.

3. That we gratefully recognize the guiding hand of God in leading many secret organizations to show to the world their true nature by outward demonstration, as evinced in the Homestead strike, the outrages of the White Caps, and otherwise.

4. That the present number, variety, power and activity of the secret associations about us everywhere are such that we cannot afford to lessen in any degree our present activity against them; and that, in the strength of Christ alone, we can and do expect victory.

5. WHEREAS, the managers of the World's Fair have disregarded the laws of God and man in opening the gates of the Columbian Exposition to visitors on the Christian Sabbath; therefore,

Resolved, That we utterly condemn this exhibition of anarchism and rebellion against the law; that we heartily commend the efforts of those who are seeking to close the gates on the Sabbath; and that we pledge ourselves to do all within our power to secure the closing of the gates on the Sabbath; and that we commend those exhibitors who do not permit their exhibits to be seen on Sunday.

The time for closing having arrived, prayer was offered, and the meeting adjourned.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, 1893.

The Association, at its last annual meeting, elected me Corresponding Secretary during my absence, and the duties designated for that office were already assigned when I returned. It was arranged, therefore, with the Board of Directors that a comparatively new field should be occupied, namely, the various denominational meetings and their constituent churches and the educational institutions.

In fulfilling this appointment, I have visited during the year, beginning June 1, 1892, 67 churches and 92 other religious assemblies, and fifteen institutions of learning.

My year's work has been, mainly, to bring the National Christian Association and the churches together. We prophesy against the Jeroboam altars. It is the business of the churches of Christ to keep his altar holy and its worship pure. If there be an organization on earth whose care this is, that organization is the Christian church. It should in every community instruct and testify and warn until men shall know that to worship at lodge altars is like bowing on the plain of Dura, or in the calf-worship at Bethel, or with face to the east in the temple at Jerusalem. If to kiss the hand to the sun was once an iniquity to be punished by the judge; if to put the branch to the nose was once abominable to God, the same kind of religious rites are to-day as abominable and as sinful.

THE CONFERENCE.

As a means to help the churches to take up this work, and in so far releasing our Association from it, the Board approved of a CONFERENCE OF CHURCHES to be held in connection with this annual meeting. This conference was to be composed of delegates appointed by the different church bodies; to be conducted by them; where there could be a free interchange of views, and careful examination of such facts and principles as might be set before them by our Association.

To promote this conference has been the object of many visits and large correspondence during the year. Representatives have been appointed from different bodies and from different divisions of the church, numbering, so far as reported, 39.

PASTORS AND CHURCHES.

My visitations to the churches have been a most agreeable part of the year's work. Pastors and people have, as a rule, been cordial, and have responded to appeals for the reform. At times individual members of the congregations have been hostile, but more often the tokens of awakened conviction have given cheering proof of the power of truth.

Among the hundreds of pastors visited there have been few instances where an interview on the lodge has been unwelcome. Often there has been unexpected and hearty approval of our work. In some cases pastors of large and popular churches are working effectively to separate their membership from the lodge.

CHURCH ASSEMBLIES.

To get a hearing before these bodies has been often difficult. To present a definite request was found a much better plan than to attempt an address in general terms. To have a proposition which bodies of all kinds of opinion on the reform would hear and vote up or down was a necessity in many meetings. The plan of a conference to which delegates could be invited was of great assistance. The request was an introduction, and often gave opportunity for a statement of the reasons for our reform. It has met so few refusals that I have not been to the trouble of keeping account of them.

COLLEGES AND SEMINARIES.

Rev. S. F. Porter has for several years been the faithful College agent of the Board. His labors have been generally directed to placing in the libraries of these institutions such books and other literature of our reform as would be useful for students. The value of this work would be greatly increased if students should become interested in studying this literature. The Students' Bureau of Correspondence was begun two years ago to promote inquiry in our educational institutions into the nature and effects of the secret orders. This society was reorganized at a meeting of exceptional interest in the Sherman House, Dec. 3 last. It is not established as a reform society; but to study facts and principles, thus preparing the choice youth of our schools to be reformers. I have helped the young men of this organization in their correspondence; and their last report, dated April 15, shows a very commendable beginning. Little could be done since that date, as the seminaries were then closed and the colleges busy with anniversary work.

WORLD'S FAIR.

Work was begun for a World's Fair exhibit Nov. 15 last. Formal application was made for space a few days later; but the actual grant was not received until the last of January. In connection with the other members of the committee appointed by the Board I have given much time to the installation of this exhibit. Bills of expense have been paid by the Treasurer to the amount of over $350, and through the efforts of the committee $213 has been contributed to meet this expense. Some small amounts have been sent to the treasurer, and we are promised $300 more from the fund left by Philo Carpenter with his daughters, Mrs. Cheney of this city and Mrs. Hildreth of Los Angeles. Of the amount raised $200 is from them. The committee believed the opportunity given the Association through this exhibit to be providential and of greatest value. We wished some of our best men to attend it, whose knowledge of argument and fact, and skill in conversation would be taxed daily by the crowds at the Fair. In this we have been disappointed, but have tried to do the best under the circumstances. Mrs. L. C. Hemenway, sister of Bro. E. A. Cook, is at present in charge; and later in the season we have promise of other excellent assistance which will be inexpensive to the Association.

THE CONGRESS.

The Boston Convention in 1890 recommended an international congress to be held in Chicago this year. A committee was appointed at the annual meeting the same year, and negotiations were begun with the chief of the Congress Auxiliary to the World's Fair. He did not favor the plan; but in fairness thought if secret society congresses were held, both sides should be heard. Nothing more was done, as I am informed, until last November, when the effort was renewed both with Judge Bonney of the Congress Auxiliary, and with the Committee on Religious Congresses. We succeeded at last, and on the 3d of April a date was given (Oct. 5) for a congress of two sittings. A large correspondence was begun before this time for the congress, and letters of great interest and cheer were received from several foreign friends, notably Dr. Kerr of Glasgow and Rev. John Boyes of Huddlestons, Eng. The Sunday opening of the Fair began about this time to be hotly discussed, and our efforts for the Congress have nearly ceased until that question is settled.

I recommend as follows:

1. That the direct effort to reach the churches be continued on a larger scale. District agents and lecturers should seek out the religious assemblies, visit and address them so far as possible. They will do well to make Sabbath discourses a special feature of their work.

2. With the opening of our educational institutions in the fall, the Students' Bureau should be encouraged to renew its work with new energy.

3. If Sunday-opening prevails, my judgment is to have as little to do with the World's Fair as possible. Our exhibit, however, installed under the law of Congress, must for the time being be cared for.

For whatever success has been given to a great work undertaken in much weakness, I gratefully acknowledge the hand of God, guiding, sustaining, and opening doors of gracious opportunity for his Word.

DIRECTORS' REPORT.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE YEAR FROM MAY 11, 1892, TO JUNE 20, 1893.

Brethren and Sisters of the Association:

At the annual meeting of the National Christian Association, May 11, 1892, the following Board of Directors was elected:

T. B. Arnold, Chicago, Ill.; C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill.; E. A. Cook, Chicago, Ill.; J. M. Hitchcock, Chicago, Ill.; G. R. Milton, Elgin, Ill.; J. P. Richards, Chicago, Ill.; Elliott Whipple, Wheaton, Ill.; Edwin R. Worrell, Tracy, Ill.; E. B. Wylie, Summerdale, Ill.; W. M. Howie, Chicago, Ill.; H. F. Kletzing, Naperville, Ill.

The Board was organized as follows: Rev. George R. Milton, President; Ezra A. Cook, Vice President; Edgar B. Wylie, Secretary.

Committee on Finances.—Prof. Elliott Whipple, Rev. W. M. Howie, Prof. H. A. Fischer.

This committee was also made their Auditing Committee.

Committee on the Buildings of the Association.—Wm. I. Phillips, W. B. Stoddard, E. A. Cook.

Committee on Publications.—Edwin R. Worrell, J. P. Richards, J. M. Hitchcock.

The Board has had meetings throughout the year for the due consideration of the interests of the Association. The regular business has run so smoothly that the meetings have not been frequent, but fully attended.

The list of membership of the Board has been preserved with the one notable exception of the death of Rev. G. R. Milton. Appropriate action was taken in view of the Association's loss in this death, and resolutions were spread upon the records of the Board. The vacancy thus caused in the Board was filled by the election of Mrs. W. W. Cheney. Rev. E. R. Worrell was elected to the chairmanship.

As the annual meeting of last year had adjourned before the death of ex-President Jonathan Blanchard was made known to the public, the Board, in behalf of the Association, ordered to be recorded an appropriate expression of their recognition of the divine will, in the removal of that veteran educator and philanthropist. The resolutions so appreciatively and happily expressed, and which may be found under date May 23, 1892, were drawn by Rev. George R. Milton, who soon after also put aside the armor of conflict for the crown of reward.

Arrangements have been made for a detailed report from each appointee of the Association and the Board; hence the present report will aim to give the record of the bare business transactions of the Board, referring the members of the Association to the individual reports for the particulars in the several departments which are to be presented by the Treasurer, Publisher, Field Secretary, Corresponding Secretary, and the district agents. It was thought, after consultation with the officers, that the consummation of the orders of the Board would be more justly and more fully placed before the Association by reports from those personally engaged in the work.

First. The Board, through the Finance Committee, has on several occasions examined the Treasurer's books and statements and found them correct to date, June 1, 1893.

Second. There has been little new business in the line of publications. The Committee on Publications ordered ten thousand copies of Pres. C. A. Blanchard's address entitled "Folly, Expense, and Danger of Secret Societies," and an edition of each of the new tracts entitled, respectively, "Families, Churches, Senates, Juries, and Camps; are they Secret Societies?" and "Testimony of Pastors."

Third. The work of the Field Secretary has received attention in the following particulars: The duties of the Secretary were made the same as last year, with his salary of $1,200 guaranteed. The Secretary's plan to divide the field into districts, including several States to be worked by district agents, instead of confining workers to single States, was endorsed. The plan to reach the South by sending the Cynosure to ministers and to educational institutions, and to co-operate more closely with the work conducted by Prof. S. C. Kimball in New Hampshire, was sanctioned by the Board. Under the experienced and efficient leadership of the Field Secretary the work has prospered all along the line. The letters from the agents have always proven a popular feature of the Cynosure. The reports of the Secretary and agents will form an important part of this annual meeting.

Fourth. The Board entered into definite agreements with the Corresponding Secretary at the beginning of this year. His duties were defined as follows: He was to represent the work of the Association in religious conventions and their constituent churches, and in educational institutions. He was to promote some system of limited membership by which the constituency of the Association may be augmented and its funds increased. His salary was to be $1,200 and traveling expenses. This report cannot forbear to mention one item in the Secretary's busy year which he will more amply present, viz.: The work of the Student's Bureau of Correspondence. The work in the educational institutions has been wisely done through this Bureau. The work was aided to the extent of $100 by the Board, and the report of the Secretary of the Bureau shows that the appropriation was wise. Thirty-five correspondents were secured in various institutions, and fourteen institutions visited. A list of lecturers has been secured, to the number of sixteen, including Joseph Cook, Dr. A. J. Gordon, who agree to address students on the secret societies. The work of the Bureau coincides with that of the College agent, and when the students demand information the libraries he has placed in the different institutions will be in more frequent use.

Fifth. The Committee on Buildings have furnished the following facts: The third floor of the Carpenter building has been used for a Chinese mission. The leading worker is a native Chinaman, converted in this mission a few years ago. Several who have been converted here are now at work in China. The hall on second floor has been used evenings till recently for Christian services held by the workers from the Moody Institute. The remainder of the second floor has been used for the office and composition and store rooms. The first floor and basement have been rented for a toy and baby carriage factory. Two coats of paint applied to the outside and other repairs of the inside have put the building into a much better condition than at the beginning of the year.

The Eastern agent has had charge of the Washington property and reports for thirteen months, from May 1, '92, to June 1, '93, as follows: The property is in as good or better condition than one year ago. The receipts from rents were $777.30, besides the rooms occupied by Mr. Stoddard, which are reckoned at $234, making the total receipts $1,011.30. The expenses for the year were $557.85, which includes payment of taxes for eighteen months, leaving a net income of $453.45. The Association has a cash offer of $10,000 for the building.

Sixth. A committee to raise funds and to organize an exhibit at the World's Fair was appointed consisting of Henry L. Kellogg, chairman, Edwin R. Worrell, T. B. Arnold, Mrs. W. W. Cheney, and Mrs. Edward Hildreth. This committee has charge also of the arrangements for the National Christian Association's Congress at the World's Fair. The exhibit is in place and has received the compliments of all the friends who have seen it. The Board contributed $350 toward the expense of the exhibit.

Seventh. The following persons are recommended for members of the Association: Mrs. Mary C. Baker, Chicago; Rev. W. O. Dinius, Harvey, Ill.; Rev. T. M. Chalmers, Winchester, Kansas; Amos Dresser, Jr., Chicago, Ill.; H. J. Becker, Dayton, O.; A. G. Johnston, Huntington, Ind.

Eighth. The amendment of the by-laws offered by the Corresponding Secretary (see Recording Secretary's book), was referred to this annual meeting with recommendation to adopt it.

Ninth. We feel that devout thanksgiving should be rendered to Almighty God for the many tokens of his favor during the past year, and that while the accomplishments are less than we might justly wish, still there is great reason for renewed efforts in behalf of the cause we represent.

CHICAGO, June 17, 1893.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Summer Thoughts.—The Borden case.—Commencement matters.—Work among the Greeks in Boston.—The Boys' Brigade.

June has thus far been as coquettish as April. She has given us days of scorching heat that made us feel quite willing to change places for the nonce, with Peary and his company of Arctic explorers. And then in one night the thermometer would make a wild plunge from 90 or 95 down to 60 or even below, and we have put on extra wraps, and shivered over the kitchen fire, and berated the freakishness of our New England climate. But, perhaps, it is this versatility in her atmospheric conditions which has helped to make us a versatile people. The tide of foreign immigration, the constantly increasing supplies of ready-made clothing and "prepared" foods, are fast eliminating the Jack-at-all-trades from our New England villages, and the Yankee house-keeper who scorns to buy anything she can make herself. As a consequence, our "faculty," using the word in its ordinary New England sense, has greatly degenerated. Perhaps this is one among the many reasons which have led to the intellectual decadence of New England, for the man who can do but one thing, no matter how well he can do it, cannot as a rule have the same mental keenness and suppleness, like a well-tempered Damascus blade, which characterizes the man who can in an emergency turn his hand to fifty things, and whose wits are therefore more freely exercised.

But I have strayed from the subject with which I began, this lovely June weather—for to-day is one of the perfect days when the whole countryside is rioting in the exuberance of verdure and bloom which attends the footsteps of the early summer, still in its early prime though rapidly nearing the limit when the days will begin to grow a little shorter, and the sere and yellow leaf, here and there, will send mournful prophecies to the soul. What beauties crowd around one in the shortest walk, though it does not extend beyond one's own dooryard. Our common dogtooth violet sells in Germany for three marks, equivalent to seventy-five cents a dozen; our mullein is a favorite in European greenhouses, and we ourselves pay large sums for foreign novelties that have less claim to beauty than many of our wild-wood plants which rank with us as "only weeds." Farmers who raise tobacco are complaining of the ravages of the tobacco-worm, which is, as one might naturally expect, among the most repulsive of its kind. I incline to think that even those birds—the wood-thrush for instance—who eat the tent-caterpillars without any qualms of conscience or stomach—let this filthy parasite severely alone, and if they could talk would express their minds after the fashion of the cannibal who turned away in disgust from a tobacco-saturated sailor with the remark, "him no smell good." I wonder if there are caterpillars, and currant worms, and all these creeping, crawling horrors that nip our hopes of "early vegetables" in the bud, and lead us to denounce gardening as a delusion and a snare, to be found in the Czar's realm. If so, how much better the Autocrat of all the Russias would be employed in issuing imperial ukases for their destruction than for the banishment of the Jews!

Gov. Robinson, in his argument for the defence in the famous Borden case, now closed, said a good thing to the jurors, which is quite as applicable to men in other situations, our legislatures for instance: "The man I want to see in the jury-box is he who says, as you have said, that he has read and had opinions, but who is capable of using common sense. The man I don't like to see is the one who is like a piece of putty, to take the impression of the last one who comes in contact with him." It may be apropos to say that many of the people who so coolly prejudged and condemned Miss Borden, without any evidence, were on the putty-like order. Her triumphant acquittal was what was generally expected, as even the testimony of the very witnesses called by the government proved to be more in favor than against her. Fall River had better change its public officials, and with all possible expedition. Their persistent bounding of an innocent woman may have been pig-headed stupidity merely, but it shows in a rather alarming light the risks which honest and respectable citizens may run when their lives and liberties are in the hands of Irish Romanists. The bearing of Miss Borden throughout, in its quiet, reserved, gentle dignity, has been beyond praise, and honored alike womanhood in general and New England womanhood in particular. Now the great trial is over, the question naturally arises, will the real murderer ever be found? Probably not, as the Fall River officials could hardly have done more had they been in direct collusion with him, to aid his escape.

Twenty-five per cent of the Harvard graduates drift into the law. So say the statistics of that institution. There is something about the triumphs of the bar that seem especially to fire the young imagination, and it is melancholy to reflect how many of these future legal lights may find themselves snuffed out and in some other employment, or else as they wait for clients that are slow to come or do not come at all, envying the steady pay of a clerk or a mechanic.

The unpractical character of the usual Commencement essay has been often remarked. Sex does not seem to make any difference in this regard, but the student almost invariably seeks his or her theme among the stars, or a way back in the times of the ancient Greeks and Romans, and snubs any line of thought that seems to have a practical connection with our homely, everyday life, but I notice that "a sweet girl graduate" in some Western university, recently discussed the servant-girl question in her Commencement essay, and I hope, before long, Wellesley, Smith and other New England colleges for girls will train their students to give social economics a place beside political economics. If "the higher education" is not brought to bear upon these household problems that are wearing so many women into untimely graves, it will be in a very important sense a failure.

President Hartnaff of Hartford Seminary recently spoke before the Congregational Club of Boston in favor of women studying theology on the same footing with men and declared "that women's faculties are such as peculiarly to fit her for studies which require not only strong but also intuitive thought." I am glad that poor St. Paul is getting to be better understood. Little did he think when he dictated those words of counsel and reproof, which had only to do with certain local conditions that they were to be made such a dreadful handle to use against the whole female sex, as if women just converted from heathenism, undisciplined, childish, and utterly lacking in mental training should set the stand for the Frances Willards and Mrs. Livermores eighteen centuries after.

I had the pleasure lately of making the acquaintance of Mrs. Calliope S. Vaistes, who with her husband is carrying on evangelical work among the Greeks of Boston and Lowell. Though but recently begun, God's blessing has been manifestly shown by numerous conversions, and in the marked favor with which it has been received by the churches of all denominations. Mrs. Vaistes is a bright, earnest little woman who speaks English like a native. She and her husband came to this country, and studied together preparatory to going back to Greece as missionaries, but felt called instead to stay and work among their neglected countrymen.

The law which passed the Massachusetts Legislature forbidding societies that are not composed of bona fide military to bear arms, is very obnoxious to the Roman Catholic members, and doubtless next year will witness efforts to secure a repeal. One of the queerest things is their assertion that "the Governor did not know what he was signing." If this is so it stamps Gov. Russell as singularly incompetent for the high office he fills. The same law which forbids the secret military societies of Rome even when they profess to be temperance organizations, it seems to me, forbids also the Boys' Brigade in our Protestant churches with their real guns and real uniforms. English law forbids the parading with military weapons by any company which does not belong to the regular militia, and this is why over the water the Boys' Brigade is a different thing from what it is with us.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

Freemasonry and Romanism—no matter what may be pretended—are hand in hand, working to the same end, and that end is not only the control of the schools, but of the entire United States.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JESUITISM AND SECRECY.

—, N. H., June 14, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is generally believed—at least, has been believed—that Romanism and Freemasonry are opposed to each other. That this is really only a trick—a pretence—is shown by the close relations that exist in many places between the Church of Rome and the secret lodge.

The daily paper with the largest circulation in New England—the Boston Globe—is also the particular organ of Catholicism—read, probably, by a quarter of a million Catholics daily; yet it devotes ample space to news of what it calls "The Mystic Orders," and is especially friendly to Freemasons. They can secure favors; a Masonic newsman can secure the Globe agency when a plain man is refused. So, too, when Catholics apply—secrecy and Romanism "take the cakes" every time. So, too, like the majority of New England papers, no word against Masonry can be found in print, while they go out of their way to keep secrecy. As proof, look at a dispatch in the Daily Globe of June 13th. It begins thus:

Washington, D. C., June 12.—Alexandria, Washington's Virginia suburb, where George Washington went to church and attended lodge meetings, in common with all the rest of the country, is eagerly reading the accounts of the trial of Lizzie Borden.

"And attended lodge meetings." Thus it is that "the lodge" is endorsed and kept at the front.

In a New England town, a few years ago, a priest was caught in altogether too close relations with a female of his flock. Masonic lawyers protected him, and to-day he is in charge of a church in the same county. But the town and those who exposed him are being punished. A club—named, too, after the "old man at Rome"—was formed. Its members were Masons or Catholics; its object not the good of the town, nor the good of anyone; its works have been secret, and yet native-born New Englanders have been its presidents, and its work has been all that Satan himself could desire. One man was charged with stealing, but not arrested or tried, yet driven out of the State, and a Romanist fills his office. Rum is as free as water; taxes are doubled, and the town in the hands of a gang of bummers. This is the result of a priest being exposed, and is made possible only because the Masonic and other secret bodies joined hands with Romanists, and they, acting together, are able to rule, rob and ruin at pleasure; all because a Protestant caught, unintentionally, a priest, and imagined the law would apply to one as well as to another.

TRUTH.

COMPARATIVE VALUE OF PUBLIC CON-TRACTS.

WHEATON, Ill., June 16, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On the second page of the Chicago Tribune of the 13th inst., in a paragraph headed, "His Views on Sunday-closing," referring to ex-President Harrison, are these words: "All questions in which the public are so deeply interested, and which affect an enterprise like the World's Fair, should in my opinion be settled as quickly as possible." He said: "Whatever I think personally about Sunday opening, it seems to me that when Congress made the law and gave an appropriation to the Fair, that settled the question." And it ought to—not with ex-President Harrison only—a man who understands law, and certainly this law which by discussions and petitions had become so prominent before our whole people, Congress and himself—I say this matter should have been regarded as settled by every one claiming to be a citizen of this government and more especially by all public officers. The will of the American people, expressed in legal form, is the law of our land,—or we have no law; and any public officer who will act or teach inconsistently with this fact, whether in a country village or in the city of Chicago, favors anarchy and deserves impeachment.

A grand spectacle—a great lesson—an exposition (is it a revolution?) is before us. We have invited all the peoples to witness it. It is in the city of Chicago, where a few years ago anarchists disregarding law were punished.

But does some one say that certain moneys are not paid—certain conditions are unfulfilled?

Are laws then abrogated by the non-payment of money? "We, the people," by our representatives in Congress assembled, have voted an appropriation. The money is somewhere; let the wronged party show and enforce his claims against any withholding it, and it will be forthcoming; but let the legally expressed will of the people be done; or let us at once acknowledge, here and before the men of every clime assembled, that our pretended government is a mere mess of loose contracts and we have no law—that we are an anarchy.

I may not now take time to write more. In haste yours,
JAMES BREWER.

N. C. A. WORK IN INDIA.

BOMBAY, India, May 20, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The blessed testimony of anti-secrecy reform must speedily become world-wide. The brave few who come out amid perils and prayers, preaching and giving their earnest testimony, little thought at the time what winds of grace would scatter their tear-watered seed. The man who preached his anti-secrecy sermon; the one who compiled a tract; my beloved friend and namesake—Jonathan Blanchard, as he toiled over the many pages of his volumes—how little these humble but God-honored reformers then thought of how a newspaper office in Bombay, India, would announce their books in many thousands of circulars. Yes, they could not foresee that their testimony was to speak for Jesus against the apostate Christianity which brings secret lodge heathenism to play "labor and refreshment" with its twin heathenism in India.

For years the India Watchman has been spreading the publications of the National Christian Association throughout India, Burmah and Ceylon. This paper is a union mission monthly, and just now rejoices in attaining fourteen years of hard and blessed work. We do not beg aid from any one but God. He giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. Our greatest need is humble, holy, happy workers. Jesus twice bids his people to pray for workers to be sent of God to the great and very needy harvest fields.

I have two good colporteur evangelists in the field, selling books and preaching Jesus. One of these—Bro. Moss, from Shenandoah, Iowa—writes for more secrecy books, having sold his supply. I have just sent a new lot. With this I send to the N. C. A. office for $30 worth more of books. I have to sell some of them at less than the market prices, as English books are often cheaper than the American. But I do not "make money" on the books; it is all a mission work for our Saviour.

Oh, how blessed to publish a free, full and fiery salvation! Over twenty-one years ago God brought me to India, and I love this business of spreading the Gospel better than ever. Purity of heart, separation from worldliness, and joy in Jesus will win in India just as well as anywhere in the world. Hallelujah! Pray for your work in India, and pray, too, for your lonely worker,
WALLACE JONATHAN GLADWIN.

FREEMASONRY.

ITS CHRISTLESS DEGREES AND THOSE THAT BURLY CHRISTIANITY.

In the following Masonic degrees the name of Christ is excluded from its prayers and rituals.

It is noticeable that in the initiation ceremonies of the first degree (Entered Apprentice), which is the stepping-stone to all that follow in the Blue Lodge, the Chapter, the Consistory, or the Commandery, occurs the following colloquy:

"Worshipful Master.—Mr. —, in whom do you put your trust?

"Candidate.—In God.

"Worshipful Master.—Your trust being in God, your faith is well-founded."

In this brief passage, and throughout this degree, the name of Christ is ignored and excluded; and the unfortunate novice who should say that his trust is in Christ would quickly be corrected for using such an un-Masonic term.

It must be remembered, also, that the term "God" in Masonry applies equally to the popular deity in any country, whether Christ is known and honored, or not. In the professedly Christian United States the Mason's popular deity is known as "the Grand Architect of the Universe," but he has no affiliation in the lodge with the Christ of the Bible.

I.—ENTERED APPRENTICE.

There are properly two prayers attached to the work—one in the opening ceremonies; the other in the initiatory rites—and in neither does the name of Christ appear, nor in either is it allowable. Mackey's Encyclopædia (p. 594) says that "Freemasonry is a religious institution, and hence its regulations inculcate the use of prayer;" and on page 641, it tells us: "Freemasonry is not Christianity, nor a substitute for it." Therefore the use of the name and offices of Christ is officially ignored by the fraternity.

II.—FELLOW-CRAFT.

Prayer is omitted in the opening ceremonies, in the initiation, and in the closing rites.

III.—MASTER MASON.

No prayer in the opening of the lodge; prayer at the mock resurrection of Hiram Abiff, but with no Christ in it—a mere medley of scattered quotations from the Old Testament; none in the closing ceremonies.

IV.—MARK MASTER.

No prayer in the opening ceremonies, but a collection of emasculated texts of Scripture drawn from the New Testament, with the name of Christ carefully excluded. In the initiation there is no prayer but more abbreviated and Christ-excluding Scripture texts. The prayer in the closing ceremonies is addressed, without reference to Christ, to the "Supreme Grand Architect of the Universe," that he may "enable us so to practice the precepts of Masonry that all our actions may be acceptable in thy sight"—on their own merits, we suppose.

V.—PAST MASTER.

In the opening ceremonies of this degree, prayer is allowable, if addressed only to "Most holy and glorious Lord God, the Great Architect of the Universe, the Giver of all good gifts and graces," but the intercession of Christ is omitted. The prayer is for blessing on the lodge. There is no prayer arranged for the initiation rites, but in the closing ceremonies Mackey furnishes a form for a petition to the "Supreme Architect of the Universe."—Ritualist, p. 311.

VI.—MOST EXCELLENT MASTER.

After the lodge has been duly arranged in this degree, the Senior Warden says: "Brethren, please assemble around the altar for the purpose of opening this lodge of Most Excellent Master Masons." Then all form in a circle around the altar, being close to each other, with a break in one place for the Worshipful Master to enter. Then all kneel on left knee and join hands, each giving his right-hand neighbor his left hand, and the left-hand brother his right hand, their left arms being uppermost, and heads bowed, when the Master reads Psalm 24, and as he comes to the expression "King of Glory" each time he advances toward the kneeling circle of brethren, and when finished kneels with them, thus completing the circle. They then lift up their hands and arms six times together, as the Master counts one, two, three; when, led by the Master, all repeat the Lord's prayer. After some other dumb-show performances the Most Excellent Master says: "In the name of God and King Solomon I declare this lodge of Most Excellent Masters opened in form."

During the initiation rites many texts of Old Testament Scripture are quoted and several Old Testament incidents referred to, and the Most Excellent Master recites or reads part of King Solomon's prayer at the dedication of his temple, addressed to the "God of Israel."

In the closing ceremonies the brethren "kneel on the left knee, forming a chain, with the left hand over the right arm," when the Master offers a prayer to the Supreme Architect of the Universe, similar to that form used in the initiation of a Past Master, followed by the same dumb-show as in the opening ceremonies. The Master reads Psalm 23, and declares the lodge closed in the name of "God and King Solomon."

Masonry, it must be remembered, is "a religious institution, but not Christianity." We have no Christ in this degree.

VII.—ROYAL ARCH.

In the opening ceremonies considerable Old Testament Scripture, in scraps, is quoted, together with the passage found in 2 Thess. 3:16, with all reference to Christ carefully eliminated. Prayer is omitted.

In one part of the initiation a long prayer is offered, full of Old Testament allusions, and addressed as follows: "O thou eternal and omnipotent Jehovah, the glorious and everlasting I AM, permit us, thy frail dependent and needy creatures, in the name of our most excellent and Grand High Priest, to approach thy divine Majesty;" but the name of their High Priest is not mentioned, and the name of Jesus Christ is excluded in toto.

A second prayer is addressed in the words of Psalm 141; a third, extracted from Psalm 142; a fourth is quoted from Psalm 143. Sometimes a prayer, more resembling a toast at a banquet or a benediction, is pronounced at the close.

This degree is largely founded on Old Testament Scripture, tradition and imagination, but its religion and ceremonies have no just claim upon the support of the followers of the Lord Jesus.

LITERATURE.

PHILLIPS BROOKS: The Man, the Preacher, and the Author. Based on the "Estimate" by Newell Dunbar. With an introduction by Joseph Cook, and a Supplementary Chapter from the venerable Frederick W. Farrar, D.D., Archdeacon and Canon of Westminster. To which are added Selections from the Writings of the Great Divine. Profusely illustrated with Portraits and Views of the Scenes of His Life and Labors. One volume, large paper, pp. 290. Boston: John K. Hastings, 47-49 Cornhill. Price, in cloth, $2.50. Sold by subscription.

This elegant memorial volume appeals to the good taste of every reader in its letterpress, illustrations and general outward appearance, as well as to the excellent material comprised within its contents.

The "Estimate," by Mr. Dunbar, upon which this book is based, was written before the death of Bishop Brooks, and was greeted with numerous encomiums for its intelligent appreciation of the man and the preacher.

The "Introduction," by Joseph Cook, is worthy of its author as a study of the distinguished divine. In it he says: "Quantity of being; amplitude of natural endowment; richness of emotional, intellectual and spiritual power, were what impressed men most in Phillips Brooks. He was in every way a large man, and in almost no sense fragmentary or fractional. An orator easily addresses every side of human nature that he possesses. Phillips Brooks had a many-sided soul. . . . A polygonal nature is usually a powerful nature; but a spherical yet more so. Size without symmetry may mean mischief. Phillips Brooks had both size and symmetry, both sensitiveness and spirituality, and so was remarkable for quality as well as for quantity of being. Even his commanding physical presence was a palpable advantage to him in his public work. He was unconscious of the fact, but others were not. Culture did what it could for him; birth did more."

The estimate of Phillips Brooks furnished by Canon Farrar is also noticeable: "He is a man of magnificent physique, at least six feet four high, and of proportionate mould. . . . The most cultivated and the ablest preacher in America, he is wholly free from self-consciousness, the artificial mannerism and the petty pomposities which mark the commonplace ecclesiastic in every country. He always acts and speaks like a man among men. . . . setting an example of that stainless chivalry and large-hearted tolerance which mark the true gentleman and the true Christian."

The appended "Extracts from Sermons and Addresses" are fair specimens of his methods of thought and expression, and indicate his views of education, the state, war, the church, skepticism and life. Young men may profit by a perusal of them.

The illustrations represent Bishop Brooks at various stages of his career—as a student at Harvard, as the pastor of several churches, as the matured man in daily life, and as the churchman in his episcopal robes. Other engravings present views of the several churches in Philadelphia and elsewhere in which he officiated.

The book is printed in two colors, from clear, handsome type, with open pages, wide margins, on a fine quality of paper, and in tasteful binding.

IN BRIEF.

A FLOATING ISLAND.

In certain places floating islands are not uncommon; but one seen three times last year in the North Atlantic ocean was not only a rare occurrence, but was, besides, of peculiar scientific interest. It was first seen on July 28, in latitude 39 degrees, 31 minutes, and longitude 65 degrees west. The second occasion was on August 26, in latitude 41 degrees, 49 minutes, and longitude 50 degrees, 39 minutes; and the third time was on September 19, in latitude 45 degrees, 29 minutes, and longitude 42 degrees, 39 minutes. As it was never seen after that date, it was presumed the island was destroyed in the autumnal storms. On the three occasions the island was come upon it was moving toward the Azores at the rate of about a mile an hour. Its extent was about 300 feet each way, and it contained much forest growth, many of the trees thereon being fully 30 feet high. The finding of such an island in that section of the Atlantic is in itself a curious incident, but to scientists generally it is more interesting as showing the possible migration of animals by this means, as put forth by Darwin.

HOW TO CONQUER CHOLERA.

A European authority on cholera believes that the best way to conquer that disease is by going to the roots of the evil. He says: "This disease is endemic at the delta of the Ganges river in India, in a low area of about 7,500 square miles, caused by the putrefying remains of animal and vegetable life cast into the river by the inhabitants, and constantly floating about. Formerly the fellaheen of Egypt interred their dead on the borders of the river Nile, and the bodies were then washed out into the stream during the annual overflow of the river, and were carried down to spread disease throughout the delta. Since an end has been put to this custom the plague no longer harasses the country."

AMELIORATION OF SMALLPOX.

It was several years ago that Gallavardin drew the attention of French practitioners to the advantages of treating the smallpox according to the plan originally suggested and carried out by John, of Goddesden, and Waters. The treatment in question consisted simply in keeping the patients absolutely away from all solar light; and this solar darkness had to be, from first to last complete and uninterrupted, otherwise no beneficial results can be looked for. The same authority has recently published the results of his experience with this method, covering a period of some sixteen years, showing that, if this plan be carried out, the great advantage ensues of there being no period of suppuration, and in consequence the subsequent scarring is infinitesimal.

CURIOUS EGYPTIAN TABLETS.

In 1887 some 320 brick tablets, covered with inscriptions, were found amid the ruins of the palace of Amenophis IV. on the east bank of the Nile, about 180 miles by river south of Cairo. These tablets have now all been translated and prove to consist for the most part of important political correspondence between kings, governors and officers who lived about 1480 B. C. Some specimens of these translations were given in a recent issue of "Science," by the Rev. Thomas Harrison of England, and they show that many of them were appeals to the Pharaoh of Egypt for aid against attacks by the Abiri (Hebrews). The reading of the tablets, Mr. Harrison states, affords strong evidence as to the chronological correctness of the Biblical account of the Hebrew conquest of Palestine under Joshua.

A BENZINE CAB.

The benzine cab is the most novel means of transportation in Germany. It is a four-wheeler, guided by the touch of the finger on a lever, and provided with motive power by a benzine engine, which neither heats nor smokes the occupants. The first of this style of cab, says the New York Sun, was completed a month ago, in a Mannheim factory, and was

In every city on his route the conductor, who is at the same time engineer, has run his cab through the streets, taken on and let off curious passengers, and made his way across crowded market places to show the ease and safety with which the machinery can be managed. The cost of the cab is but $1,000, and this can be reduced in process of wholesale manufacture to $450 or $500. HENRY M. HUGUNIN. - - - Editor.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

We yield considerable space, in this issue, to the proceedings of the annual meeting of the National Christian Association and the reports of the work performed by its officers and agents. The consensus of these indicates progress in the right direction, and hopeful anticipations for the year to come.

The deliberations of those present were harmonious and helpful.

As regards the work of the Association, as has been well demonstrated in the past, it is peculiar, and partakes largely of an educational character.

The pastors having been awakened to the dangers of secret societies, as inimical to the best interests of the church, the home and the state, they are better prepared to co-operate with us in enlightening their people upon the subject.

The excellence of this method is largely confirmed by the experiences of the corresponding secretary, and Rev. Messrs. Gault, Paden, Fenton and others. During their labors they made especial effort, with marked success in many cases, to instruct pastors and their congregations along this line of work. In those churches where secret societies are better understood and their lodge adherents are excluded from communion and fellowship, they found little difficulty in obtaining hearings for lectures and a distribution of anti-secrecy literature. But in those churches where lodge members were regular attendants, supporters and communicants, and the evils of secret organizations were not recognized, they were met with indifference and coldness.

Again, among both pastors and people, they found our reform obstructed by ignorance of its design and the real evil which it proposes to remedy.

The result of these experiences, therefore, is shown in the necessity: 1. Of interesting clergymen in our work by furnishing them with requisite information, and arousing them to a realization of its importance wherever there is indifference or prejudice manifested. 2. To obtain their consent to the education of their congregations by lectures, addresses and tracts, as often as possible, upon this subject. While this preliminary work is done by the agents or lecturers, it will be necessary, further, to have the pastors take up the subject at stated periods—the oftener the better—and impress its value upon their people.

Especially should the features of secret societies most damaging to the church, the home and the state be carefully dwelt upon and supported by extracts from the best of our authorities, living and dead. The thoroughly informed agent, even if he is not a recalcitrant member of a lodge, is the proper medium for this class of field-work.

At the same time every member of the Association can do capable work in this direction by personal contact with the uninformed and unprejudiced, aided by sample copies of our publications, tracts and the Cynosure.

In the meantime, as in all reforms, ours especially needs constant activity and agitation. The field is large, and the laborers too few. Yet, by the blessing of God, we hope to diminish this great evil by our labors from year to year, until victory shall crown the work which has been so ardently begun and continued in the Lord, and which we hope to prosecute in the power of his might to a glorious finish. That we need more active laborers is self-evident, and the number of them, we trust, will be increased. Energy, money and earnest prayer and co-operation are the mainsprings of our success.

PERSECUTION.

Persecution for righteousness' sake is never out of fashion. It is one of the legacies left to the Christian church by our ascending Lord; but it carries with it an inestimable benediction. See Matt. 5: 11, 12. As the church of Christ is made up with himself as the head, and all its faithful members are very dear to him, and as he suffered for righteousness' sake, he warned them that the disciple is not above his Master, and that as his enemies had persecuted him, they had no reason to expect better treatment in this world.

Thus, since that day, individual disciples engaged in Christian work, and whole churches striving to serve him in spirit and in truth, have felt the bitterness of fiery persecution, and have suffered for his sake. And the end is not yet.

Out in the Indian Territory, in the village of Gwenddale, as many Cynosure readers may already be aware, is a monthly religious newspaper bearing the quaint title of John Three Sixteen, published by J. E. and Kate T. Wolfe, whose theology, while engaged in Christianizing the Indians, among whom they are active evangelists, is based solely upon the passage found in the Gospel of John, chapter 3, verse 16. Hence the strange title of their little paper.

Our acquaintance with Bro. Wolfe has left upon us the impression that he is a servant of the Lord Jesus, faithful and sincere in his labors of love, and consequently a shining mark for the shafts of Satan and the sons of Belial.

The June issue of John Three-Sixteen contains a partial experience of what Bro. Wolfe has undergone at the hands of his enemies, and his refutation of the charges which they have brought against him.

The tongue of slander seems to have been the principal weapon brandished over the heads of these worthy evangelists. One was the report that Bro. Wolfe had been deposed from the ministry of the Presbyterian church. This he denies, and adds: "I preached too plainly on the doctrine of 'separation', and said too much about the accursed system of secretism to suit a number of Masonic and Odd-fellow ministers belonging to the Synod of Texas and the Indian Territory. The bitter, persecuting spirit manifested by these lodge-blinded parties I truly believe was due to this fact alone." Under these circumstances, he wrote and sent in his withdrawal or "self-excommunication." For aught he knows, his "name is still on the Presbyterian church rolls, although that cuts no figure in these days as a true sign of the salvation of the individual."

Other slanders which he positively denies were as follows: That he was seeking to establish another denomination. That he was immoral. That he collected moneys for the purchase of a Gospel wagon and outfit, to the amount of $1,700, and that he is becoming immensely wealthy. For the wagon and horses he collected only $500, he says; and as for his wealth, he adds, he is poorer to-day than he has been for years. A part of the work of these devoted missionaries has been the establishment of an asylum for Indian waifs and orphans, and every dollar contributed by their friends, we believe, has been honestly spent in the pious work in which they are engaged.

Now, with God's help, they purpose to go on their way working and rejoicing, praying and trusting for the divine assistance by which they have already been able to accomplish something for the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

THE NEGRO'S RIGHTS.

A letter from a correspondent in West Virginia tenders the following advice to the editor of the Cynosure: "You would do well to let the Negro question alone. That question belongs to the South. If it is never solved till the North solves it, it will never be solved. The Southern people are not brutes. . . . The meddlesome fanatics and South-haters of the North only stir up strife and sectional hatred. The South has intellect and honor enough to deal with its own questions, and to settle them to the best interests of all concerned. Let the North attend to its own business." This is the ante-rebellion spirit.

All that the Cynosure requires of the South is that it will grant to the Negro those social and political rights which the Constitution and laws of the United States have conferred upon him, and which make him the equal of the white citizen until he forfeits his rights and liberties by overt acts against the government and the people. And, even in that case, he is entitled to all the powers and privileges of the white man to legally prove his innocence; and, if guilty, may justly demand that no degree or form of punishment more severe than is meted out to his white fellow-criminal shall torture and disgrace him.

We admit that "the South has intellect and honor enough to deal with its own questions;" but this is a question in which the whole Christian world is interested. It is not honor or intellect that is needed to solve it, but more justice and humanity than has yet been displayed in its discussion at the South. If honor is the handmaid of justice, let it bestow upon the Negro even the commonest rights that belong to the human race, and of which Southern prejudice is ever depriving him.

They have nothing to do but earn a precarious living, to starve, or resort to crime in order to keep soul and body together. "The Southern people are not brutes." But they do all in their power, by neglect and antipathy, to make brutes of the Negro.

"The Negro question belongs to the South." Then it is the duty of the South to solve it, if she can. For thirty years she has let it become a stench in her nostrils, without endeavoring to solve it in any practicable manner. Yet the Negro is despised and abused without a cause.

Most of the education and help he has received during those years he has gained from his friends in the North.

THE ANTI-NUISANCE LEAGUE.

This society has its headquarters in New York, and its name has for a prefix the word "National," to indicate the extent to which it designs to carry on its work. Its object, ostensibly, is to test, by judicial inquiry, the constitutionality of liquor-license laws, and to secure legislative enactments declaring the saloon a nuisance, to be abated as such.

Though organized in 1888, its work has not been pushed until lately. Now it has resumed activity, and proposes to bring matters to an issue. Extensive correspondence with lawyers has resulted in much encouragement that the plans of the league are feasible. It is proposed to inaugurate suits at law in a number of States, against saloons as public nuisances. Then, if necessary, these cases will be carried up from court to court, to find final decision in the Supreme Court of the United States.

We have no intimation as to the promoters and supporters of this movement, but it seems to be a laudable method of arriving at the proper character of one of the vilest institutions ever established by the ingenuity of Satan for the destruction of humanity. By a large number of intelligent people, however, the saloon is not so frequently classed as a nuisance as it is a heinous crime; but in either case it deserves no mercy at the hands of those whom it is ever seeking to destroy.

THE CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

The Conferences of Churches, held at the invitation of the National Christian Association, to consider important facts in the relation of secret societies to the churches of Christ, met in Carpenter Hall, Chicago, Ill., on Tuesday, June 20, 1893, at 2 o'clock p. m., being called to order by the corresponding secretary of the N. C. A. Bishop H. J. Becker, Dayton, Ohio, was made temporary chairman, and Rev. T. H. Acheson of Hopkinton, Iowa, was made temporary secretary. Rev. J. A. Richards led in prayer. Brother Kellogg read a list of delegates appointed by different churches to the conference. The temporary organization was made permanent.

Rev. E. B. Wylie, of the Summerdale Congregational church, Chicago, first addressed the conference on the topic: "The Creed of the Lodge, its Force and Effect." Such points as the following were presented, with copious extracts: That prayers are to be offered without Christ's name, that Christ's name is struck out of certain passages of Scripture, that Christianity is rejected by law, etc. A general discussion followed. It was participated in by President Blanchard, Rev. Howie of the U. P. church, D. A. Norton of the Baptist church, a young gentleman of the Masonic order, W. B. Stoddard, and others.

Rev. M. A. Gault, second on the program, was not present to treat the topic assigned him. H. L. Kellogg next discussed the "Mysteries of Ancient Paganism". A general discussion then followed. Revs. Norton, Hallner, Swarts, Worrell, J. A. Collins, R. W. Chesnut, and others spoke.

It was argued that we suggest to the N. C. Association that another meeting similar to this be called at an early date. It was also agreed that the members of this conference endeavor to hold similar conferences in various places. Bishop Becker spoke of the difficulties in the United Brethren church arising from leniency to secret societies, and mentioned his encouragement from this conference. Adjourned after prayer by Bishop Becker.

THE ANNUAL MEETING AND CONFERENCE.

The business anniversary of 1893 passed with harmonious counsels. Perhaps there was too much harmony; at least the meager roll does not prove so great interest in the work of the Association as the cause deserves. Many faces of old friends, of whose abiding interest no one doubts, were missed, and some new ones were therefore the more welcome. Bishop Becker, broad, strong and genial; Revs. Acheson of Iowa and Chesnut of Illinois, representing the two branches of the Covenant church; and Bro. Dresser, a wide-awake Christian business man of the city, were with us for the first time.

Bro. John Dorcas presided in the absence of Rev. M. A. Gault, detained by the illness of his wife at his new home in Bloomington, Ind. Bro. Dorcas directed the business admirably and with a quiet and easy dignity appreciated by every one present.

The reports of the secretaries, agents, and of the treasurer were approved without debate. The only questions that seemed to invite discussion were raised by the committees on nomination and resolutions. Bro. Gault was recommended by the first committee for corresponding secretary, it being understood that Bro. Kellogg wished for several reasons to retire. Some suggested that the office be not filled this year; but to others the proposal seemed like suspending one-half the work of the Association.

The whole question of this appointment was at length referred to the Directors, who can at more leisure settle it.

There was but one opinion about Sunday-opening at the World's Fair; but a number as to the duty of the N. C. A. Personally most present would have been willing to withdraw from all connection with the Fair; but the fact that the gates might yet be closed, that the expense of withdrawal could not well be afforded, and that the law still remained with us, untouched by the last decision of Judge Fuller,—these and other considerations prevailed with the majority.

THE CONFERENCE

is reported admirably elsewhere by the secretary, Rev. T. H. Acheson. Some forty delegates, from twenty-one different religious bodies, had been appointed. A considerable number were present but the absence of a larger number was a disappointment; so was the absence of brethren Stoddard and Gault, on whom much had been relied. Rev. E. B. Wylie of the Summerdale Congregational church, Chicago, kindly consented to aid in the statement of our principles before the Conference, and read a paper on the Force and Effect of the Lodge Creed; its denial of the true God, degrading Christianity to a "sect" on the level with Mohammedanism, and vitiating conscience, breaking down faith and rendering millions of our young men indifferent to the claims of the Gospel. These points were proved by copious extracts from the books of the lodges.

The Mysteries of Ancient Paganism; are they revived in the secret orders as claimed by their writers?—was the topic presented by H. L. Kellogg in the same manner, with proofs from undoubted authorities.

The discussion which followed was general and of great interest. Several of the brethren present took notes, as if for future use. Bishop Becker declared it the best reform meeting he ever attended. One of our best field workers said it was a discussion that struck the right line; and the cordial vote of the Conference asking the N. C. A. to arrange for another meeting of the same kind, and promising to promote others in various localities proved the meeting not in vain, but that its object as an initial step in the direction of a closer co-operation of the churches was accomplished.

—At one of the sessions of the International Supreme Lodge of Good Templars, at Des Moines, Iowa, Friday week, the Committee on Prohibition adopted a report, in which is entered an emphatic protest against the traffic in intoxicating beverages at all times and places, and demanding that the votes of members "shall be planted where they shall equal the enemies of prohibition, and of prohibition enforcement, wherever and whenever they are found."

—Among those at the annual meeting whose presence was peculiarly appreciated, may be numbered Rev. H. J. Becker, of Dayton, Ohio, for years an esteemed bishop of the United Brethren in Christ (Radical), who now succeeds Rev. C. H. Kiracofe as editor of the Missionary department of the Christian Conservator. Before leaving the city, Bro. Becker handed us the following sterling testimony of his co-operation in our work:

In answer to the interrogation why I am opposed to the secret lodge system, I desire most candidly to reply, that I see that if the secret systems prevail in this country, the safety and sanctity of church and state will cease long to survive; and that if the perpetuity of either or both is desired, the secret lodge must be disrupted. In proof of my observation I need but call attention to the respective objects for which they exist, and the substances upon which they subsist.

H. J. BECKER.

—Berea College Commencement, on the 21st inst., was attended by some 5,000 people gathered from the mountain and Blue Grass regions of Ky. Four young men who had completed their collegiate course, acquitted themselves with credit and received their diplomas. The reports of the Faculty were very gratifying to the board, showing, as they did, efficient work, entire harmony, and an increased number of students. The new President has demonstrated his fitness to "hold the fort" and unify the elements that enter into an efficient and eminently successful administration. No time was consumed in the board by dissensions or divisions, and a new impulse was given to this institution of which I want to say more in the near future.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, June 21, 1893.

It is fitting that the English-speaking nations should lead the world towards a universal peace union, which would substitute international courts of arbitration for the great standing armies which are productive of nothing but uneasiness and expense. Although no general law was enacted, President Harrison's administration committed the United States to the arbitration policy, and there are the best of reasons for believing that the present administration is just as strongly in favor of arbitration. This being the case, it naturally follows that a very strong sentiment exists here in favor of the proposition which has gone so far as to reach the calendar of the British House of Commons, in the shape of a bill providing for the negotiation of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain which would make war impossible, by providing for the settlement of all international disputes between the two countries by arbitration.

Only one regret is expressed in Washington concerning this matter, and that is, that the United States did not make the initiatory movement towards securing this great boon for the civilized world. But that is, after all, a small matter. The great object of the friends of peace, in the United States, should be to create such a public sentiment in favor of such a treaty that Congress will meet the British Parliament more than half way, by taking up and passing a bill at the coming session authorizing the negotiation of a perpetual treaty of arbitration, not only with Great Britain but with any other nation which might be willing to join the movement for universal peace, which is ardently hoped for by the truest friends of Christianity and civilization.

Such action on the part of Congress would show to the world that it is no mere idle boast to claim that the credit for inaugurating the greatest and most marked advances in the work of Christianizing and bringing the world to a higher state of civilization belongs to the English-speaking nations. With such a treaty in existence between the United States and Great Britain, it cannot be doubted that the good example would soon be followed by the principal European nations, and that the standing armies which now menace the peace and prosperity of more than half of Europe would soon belong to the barbaric past. The accomplishment of such an object is a goal worthy of the grandest minds of our time, and how puny when compared with it would appear the greatest achievement of the greatest soldier the world has produced. No wonder that the idea appeals to the enthusiasm of such great and good men on both sides of the Atlantic as William E. Gladstone and Benjamin Harrison; it is grand enough to appeal to every lover of humanity; and could it be accomplished before the dawn of the twentieth century it would dwarf all other achievements of the nineteenth century, great as many of them have undoubtedly been.

United States officials claim that French officials are violating the agreement entered into at the Dresden International Sanitary Conference, that each nation there represented should inform each other nation at the earliest possible moment of the appearance and progress of epidemic diseases within their respective borders. According to reports made to their government by British consuls there have been more than 500 cases of cholera and something like 200 deaths from the disease in French cities near the mouth of the Rhone river, and, instead of reporting these cases, according to agreement, the French officials have actually tried to conceal them. Although it has not been fully determined upon, Secretary Gresham may call the attention of the French government to this very dangerous apparent breach of faith on the part of its officials.

President Cleveland appointed, within the last week, thirty Indian agents; and, in accordance with the new law, twenty of them were army officers detailed to act as agents. The ten civilian agents were assigned to those Indians who are the farthest advanced towards civilization.

The coroner's jury who sat upon the death of one of the unfortunate clerks who perished in the Ford's theater disaster found that four men—Col. Ainsworth who was in charge of the clerks in the building, the contractor who was making an excavation under the building, and two minor officials—were guilty of criminal negligence resulting in manslaughter. They have each been put under $10,000 bail to appear for trial should the grand jury find true bills against either or all of them. There is no longer any excitement over this matter, everybody expressing a willingness to leave it with the courts.

REFORM NEWS.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 23, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have great reason to praise God for the measure of success that he is giving my efforts in this wicked city. Though the heated season is upon us, and the tendency is to relax effort, doors are opening for work, and I may expect much good to be accomplished in the week to come.

Night before last I spoke to a goodly number who gathered in a Swedish mission church, Rev. Bjork, pastor. Both pastor and people received me kindly, and I believe a good impression was made. In canvassing among these friends, yesterday, I secured fifteen new subscribers to our paper. As the evidence of man's feeling is his action, we may well believe these friends will stand with us against the terrible powers of darkness that are so domineering and controlling in the affairs of this city.

Let us lift the veil of concealment, friends! Let us, as far as possible, expose the powers that are so blighting and damning to all that is pure and lovely! All these wicked abominations ask is to be let alone. What they seek is darkness. Can any Christian or patriot view the sad condition of things in this city without having his heart stirred within him? Let the Cynosure shine out in this moral darkness! Put it into thousands of homes! Let everybody act as missionary agent!

Several lectures are being arranged in city churches, of which I hope to report next week.

The past annual meeting and conference of Christians has been a source of inspiration. I enter upon the new year with a firmer determination to battle for God and against the wrong. May God help us never to grow weary in well-doing, but to ever remember that in due time we shall reap if we faint not. What will the little trials and vexations of this life amount to when at last the victory shall be eternally ours.

THE HOME.

TWILIGHT.

Slowly dies the long June day,
Softly rolls the earth away,
Lovelier light at length divining,
All a dream of misty bloom,
Trembling stars, and golden gloom,
Larger heavens and sweeter shining—
Which is dearer, dusk or day?

Where the glory dyed the dark,
Lost in light the ruby spark,
Violet gleam, and saffron splendor,
Melt and mingle into one,
When the long June day is done.
All the depths throb close and tender—
Is it day, or is it dark?

Love! the long June day had life,
Silver showers and sunny strife—
Now its rosy wreath fades o'er us!
Eld's vast twilight fills our eyes,
Yet what freedom of the skies
Parts the star-sown way before us—
Is it death, or is it life?

FREEMASONRY—WHAT IS IT?

To the uninterested my story may seem of little worth, but those who know the dangerous paths they tread who mingle with secret societies will understand and, as I trust, sympathize with me. My story is true. I can prove it by a score of witnesses. Briefly related, it is as follows:

About nineteen years ago my father, now dead, had a shock of apoplexy and came near dying. My mother was alone with him at the time. She was a nervous, high-strung woman, and, although father recovered from the attack, the shock nearly killed her. She was very ill, and for many months could not sleep except while under the influence of opiates. She used nearly all kinds of narcotics, and finally settled on chloral and opium in its various forms. She used them for sixteen years. She is still living, and is eighty-three years old.

In the spring of 1889, a brother-in-law of mine, who had been living in one of the Southern States, returned to his former home in "York State," where I was then living. He was a Freemason, had passed several degrees, and at the time of which I write was Grand Master. He was sent as delegate to many large cities, including New York, Washington and Baltimore, and was regarded among the Masons as one of their leading men. He and his wife were offended because I wrote for Anti-masonic papers. They remonstrated with me, but I did not mind their threats. His wife was my own sister, and, as such, was always dear to me. The sweet summer months passed on, and although I did know it, they were about to spring a mine beneath my feet that would cause me such sorrow and humiliation as I never before experienced.

It was in the latter part of November. I had been to ———, to visit a sister who lived there. When I returned home I went at once to visit my sister, this Freemason's wife, and she told of a discovery which they had made, regarding me, that filled me with such horror and consternation as no words can describe.

She said: "We" (that is, she and her husband) "have been to the drug-stores in this town and have learned that you have been buying opium in large quantities, and that you are using it habitually."

"I don't use it," I indignantly exclaimed. I saw at once that she knew nothing about mother's habit of using it, and I begged her to say nothing to mother about it.

"I intend to tell her," she said.

"Do you intend to make it public?"

"It is public already," she replied.

"You don't know what you are doing," I said.

You see, reader, I had always bought the medicine for mother, as she was old and feeble, and the druggists set it down on their books in my name. I was held responsible.

Well, I went home and said to mother: "Do you know what ——— has been reporting about me?" "Yes," she said; and she leaned her head against my shoulder and cried like a child. "What shall I do?" she said. "They have forbidden their selling you any more of that medicine, and you know I cannot sleep without it."

I pacified her by telling her I would get it for her in some way. You see, reader, I took all the blame. Not a word was said about mother in any way. They fastened the blame upon me in such a way that it seemed there was no escape for me. They called me an opium eater, and said that I wrote under opium influence. (Heaven save the mark!) Think of that! I cannot tell you what I suffered; the horror, the agony, the humiliation—it is past description.

True, the majority of my friends stood by me, and would not believe the story. Several of them said to me: "Don't everybody know that you don't use opium? Would a person that used opium be as fair and clear-complexioned as you are? Would he or she be as bright and wide-awake and full of life and animation? Why," they said, "the very idea is absurd, and you contradict that story more in your looks and appearance than in anything you can say."

But the iron entered into my soul all the same, and for many days I was almost delirious. I was frantic with grief. I did not even dare to pray. Think, reader, while walking the streets during those awful days the people that I met would sneer in my face. But some would look pityingly upon me, and my eyes would fill with tears. Why did I not tell the truth? because no one would have believed me. There was my name on the druggists' books. But, thanks be to God! the truth came out at last, and in a strange and unexpected way.

A GENIUS FOR HELPING FOLKS.

"There is a man," said his neighbor, speaking of a village carpenter, "who has done more good, I really believe, in this community than any man who ever lived in it. He cannot talk very well in prayer meeting, and he doesn't often try. He isn't worth $2,000, and it is very little he can put down on subscription papers for any object. But a new family never moves into the village that he does not find them out, to give them a neighborly welcome, and offer any little service he can render. He is usually on the lookout to give strangers a seat in his pew in church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor, and look after his affairs for him; and I've sometimes thought he and his wife kept house-plants in winter just for the sake of being able to send little bouquets to invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word for every child he meets, and you'll always see them climbing into his one-horse wagon when he has no other load. He really seems to have a genius for helping folks in all sorts of common ways, and it does me good every day just to meet him on the streets."—Selected.

POPULAR AMUSEMENTS.

Intelligent and regenerate Christians of all denominations agree in opposition to sinful amusements. C. H. Spurgeon says: "The caperings and wantonings of the ball-room are death to the solemn influences of our ministry, and many an ill-ended life received its bent for evil amid the flippancies of gay assemblies met to trip away the hours."

Bishop Coxe, of Western New York, says: "The gross, debasing waltz would not be tolerated if Christian mothers would only set their faces against it and remove their daughters from the contaminations, and their sons from the contempt of womanhood and womanly modesty, which it begets. Alas! that women professing godliness should not rise and drive these shameless dances from society."

Robert Pollok wrote:

The theater was, from the very first,
The favorite haunt of sin; though honest men—
Some very honest, wise and worthy men—
Maintained it might be turned to good account;
And so, perhaps it might, but never was.
From first to last it was an evil place;
And now such things were acted there as made
The devils blush; and from the neighborhood
Angels and holy men trembling retired.

The Rev. W. B. Green, in the Presbyterian Journal, writes: "That there are few young girls whose modesty is so delicate after they have passed through a season of balls as it was before; that there are few young men whose sense of right does not lose some of its keenness after a round of progressive euchre parties; and that habitual theater-goers rarely support the week-night prayer meeting."

We oppose dancing, card-playing, etc., for they ruin the piety and usefulness of those who engage in them. Where these prevail and are approved and indulged in by church members a moral paralysis antagonizes every God-ordained agency for the salvation of men. They are the devil's genteel bait to ensnare decent people. A true disciple of Jesus cannot, dare not, will not dishonor the Master's cause by engaging in pleasures so far beneath the dignity of a child of God.—Our Monitor.

FIGS AND THISTLES.

God has given only one tongue to two hands. He meant us to do at least twice as much work as we do talking.

The tongue is the only edged tool that becomes sharper by constant use.

If a man's walk don't keep step with his talk, the less he says, the better.

Unconscious teaching makes the most lasting impression.

Any fool can be a critic; but it takes more than a fool to go in and do better work than those whom they criticise.

Do family prayers in your home constitute a momentary discord, rather than a note of harmony?

Parents are the family Bible most read.

God pity the mothers and sisters who send boys off to attend the devil's night school, because they are afraid if they remain in the house the carpet might get worn or some bric-a-brac-ish trash be broken.

Whisky is the mother of all abomination, the devil's best friend and God's worst enemy. It is the mother of want, the nurse of crime. Nine-tenths of all criminal acts are concocted in saloons.

The ball-room is the devil's parlor. The billiard or card-room is the devil's sitting-room. The bar-room is the devil's back kitchen. It is but a step from any of these into perdition.

High license and gilded saloons are the devil's best ways of taking men to hell in palace cars.

Public dances, especially masquerades, are the rivers that empty into the oceans of harlotry and abandonment. Every one who countenances public balls is leagued with the devil to destroy the virtue of our land.

A man is either a fool or a villain who says there is no harm in the dances. Every church in Christendom is opposed to the dance.

Tell me God is omnipotent, omniscient or omnipresent, and I naturally fear and shrink from him. Tell me "God is love," and I long to fly into his outstretched arms and snuggle up against his great beating, loving heart.

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

Ben Martyn set down a basket on the slippery sidewalk and signaled the car; it was dragging slowly up a hill. The driver looked cross at the idea of stopping again.

"This is the third time I have had to stop the car since I started up the hill," he said in a grumbling tone. Ben looked sympathetic.

"It is too bad," he said. "If I had thought so far, I could have waited, but my thoughts always come afterward."

There was one vacant seat and no room for baskets or bundles. Ben took the seat; but at the top of the hill the car stopped again, and a feeble old lady in a calico dress came in. Ben jumped to his feet. "Take my seat," he said, cheerily, as if it was a great pleasure to stand. The woman took it, and she forgot to thank him; but I know she was grateful. Everybody was out that morning, and everybody wanted to ride in that car; they kept crowding in. One man jostled against Ben and knocked the smallest basket out of his arms, and red and green apples went rolling over the dirty car.

"That's bad," the man said, heartily, but he didn't offer to help pick them up.

"Never mind," said Ben, cheerily; "accidents will happen, especially when they don't give us more elbow room than this. It's lucky it wasn't the other basket; they are eggs. I'm afraid they wouldn't pick up quite so easy." It wasn't three minutes after that that a finely-dressed lady, complaining of the crowd, and of the tiresomeness of having one's dress sat on, moved away from her next neighbor with such a jerk that she came with her elbow against Ben's other basket, and out rolled a small package, and an egg; and of all places for that egg to fall; it went plump into the finely-dressed lady's lap. Of course it broke—eggs always do when they shouldn't—then what a time there was! Ben's face was red away up into his hair with sorrow and mortification; he made as many and as humble apologies as though he had ruined the lady for life.

"They ought not to allow such people to ride on the cars," she said angrily, in answer to an exceedingly humble sentence from Ben. "I think they ought to have a market wagon run to accommodate the people who are inclined to turn the street-cars into walking stores." Ben looked interested in the idea.

"It would be a good thing," he said; "I wonder they don't run a special car for us working fellows in the morning; it really is a nuisance to have our baskets and bundles getting into everybody's way; but we don't know how to help it. Still, I am not generally so careless as this. I'm just as sorry as I can be." The lady did not choose to say another word.

More people began to have accidents. A little girl lost two of the pennies that were to pay for her ride down, in that wretched hole in the floor where pennies and car tickets are so fond of falling. She looked after them hopelessly for a minute and then began to rub her eyes. Ben didn't see the falling cents; he was busy trying to tie with one hand a paper of sugar into a more secure package; but he looked up in time to see the tears in her eyes and inquired into it. Then he had a hard time shifting baskets and bundles from one arm to the other and finding his way to his pocket, from which he drew out two bright pennies.

"Here," he said, "pennies are nice things; I'd like to have a billion of them; but I never think they are worth crying for, especially after they have slipped down a hole. There are always more to be found that will take their places;" and the little girl's tears didn't fall.

A gentleman with a file of bills poking out of one pocket and a bank book out of the other, who had occupied a seat near Ben all the way, now leaned forward and touched his arm.

"Young man, what is your name and business?"

"My name is Benjamin S. Martyn, sir, and I am Mr. T. G. Lewis' errand boy at the country store."

"Do you like the work?"

"No, sir; not so well as some things I can think of, but a great deal better than I like doing nothing this cold winter."

"What do you want to do?"

"I want to be a clerk in a store; not a boy to do things when there is something to be done, but a boy who has regular work and regular hours."

"Then you are not regularly employed?"

"No, sir; only when they happen to have something for me to do and don't happen to send somebody else who happens to be going that way."

"Have you any time to spare in the city this morning?"

"Yes, sir; I have just one errand to do and then I must wait for the next car up."

"Well, sir, you may call at that address, and I will have a little further talk with you about some important business," and the great merchant handed him the business card of the largest firm in the city. And as he left the car and walked down town with his nephew, he said: "I've found the boy at last that I have been hunting after for two years. I've discovered during this morning's ride that he is quick-motivated, kind-hearted, respectful, good-natured, patient, thoughtful, and can keep his temper under great provocation; and in my opinion a boy can who do that is apt to be conscientious and trustworthy."

But even to this day it is a marvel to Ben Martyn and to the boys who envy his "streak of luck" how he came to be a favorite clerk in a store where they pay higher wages, and give more privileges, and are more careful about references and all that sort of thing, than any store in the great city; but the senior partner and you and I know only; you mustn't tell Ben.—Anonymous.

HE LIVETH LONG WHO LIVETH WELL.

He liveth long who liveth well!
All other life is short and vain;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of living most for heavenly gain.

He liveth long who liveth well,
All else is being flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.

Waste not thy being; back to Him
Who freely gave it, freely give;
Else is that being but a dream;
'Tis but to be, and not to live.

Be wise, and use thy wisdom well;
Who wisdom speaks must live it too;
He is the wisest who can tell
How first he lived, then spoke, the true.

Be what thou seemest! live thy creed!
Hold up to earth the torch divine;
Be what thou prayest to be made;
Let the great Master's steps be thine.

Fill up each hour with what will last;
Buy up the moments as they go;
The life above when this is past,
Is the ripe fruit of life below.

Sow truth if thou the truth wouldst reap;
Who sows the false shall reap the vain;
Erect and sound thy conscience keep;
From hollow words and deeds refrain.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage pure;
Sow peace, and reap its harvest bright;
Sow sunbeams on the rock and moor,
And find a harvest home of light.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN ENGLAND.

The Western Temperance Herald, of Bristol, England, for June, gives the following facts in regard to prohibition in England and Scotland, and its advantages. Some of the facts may be new to our readers:

"In a parliamentary return for 1875 it is stated that there were 141 parishes in Scotland in which there were no licensed houses. Crossing the Channel we find John Grubb Richardson in his evidence before the House of Lords' committee on intemperance in 1880 stating that 'there has not been a drop of drink sold in Bessbrook since 1847. There has never been a police-barracks, nor a policeman, nor a pawn office in Bessbrook.' A vote of the householders was taken by ballot whether they would prefer to have public houses, and by nine to one they decided against it. Mr. T. W. Russell, now M. P. for South Tyrone, was another of the witnesses examined by the committee. He said there is a district of 61½ square miles adjoining Dungannon, in County Tyrone, with a population of 10,000. He lived there for five years. When he went there he found public houses, but they were all closed by the proprietors refusing to renew the leases. The results were that the police-barracks were closed twelve months afterward, and the policemen removed, and the poor rates were reduced from 1s. 6d. to 8d. in the pound.

"In England, we find a district in Liverpool which has been called 'The bright spot on the Mersey.' By a clause in the leases all liquor traffic is prevented in the Toxteth district. There are now about two hundred streets in it, with twelve thousand houses, a population of sixty thousand. The death rate has only been from ten to twelve per thousand, while in other districts where public houses exist it is 41 per thousand, and the poor rates are 1 instead of 2-6 per pound. In the debate in the House of Commons on the Welsh Veto bill in 1891 it was stated that the Duke of Westminster had suppressed 37 out of 48 public houses on his estate. Sir G. O. Trevelyan, Bart., M.P., the present secretary for Scotland, says there have been no public houses on his estate in Northumberland for thirty-six years, and there is no pauperism and no discontent with the system. It was recently stated in the public newspapers that there are no licensed houses on the Prince of Wales' estate at Sandringham. In London there is a district on which no intoxicating liquors are sold—it is the Shaftesbury Park estate. At the opening in 1874, Mr. Disraeli said, 'The experiment you have made has succeeded. In its success is involved the triumph of the social order, virtue and character of the great body of the people.' Prohibition in this country has been hitherto dependent on the will of the landowner, and it is only a step further in the right direction to empower the ratepayers to do what some landowners now do with such great advantage, viz., to prevent the common sale of drink in the district in which they reside. The traffic depreciates the value of neighboring properties, and increases rates and taxes, and therefore ratepayers ought to have a voice in determining whether it is to be permitted or not."

THE TOPER AND THE OPIUM-SMOKER.

A toper and an opium-smoker happened to meet. "I have noticed," said the latter, "that you seem to give yourself airs of superiority, as if you considered me scarcely your equal. Now, we are both the victims of vice, but I consider that so far as outward appearance is concerned, I am quite as respectable looking as you, and in every way as useful a member of the community. Why, then, should you treat me with disdain?" "I look down upon you," replied the toper, "for the same reason that churchmen look down upon dissenters. You are distinctly inferior. I belong to the Establishment, while you are a mere chapel." "I don't quite see what you mean," said the other. "I mean that my appetite for drink is provided for by the government, in a recognized, legalized, public institution, called the saloon; while your appetite for opium is not. Your opium-joint is a private affair, which is under the ban of the law, and has to be run at your own expense and risk." "But is the opium habit any worse, morally, than that of alcohol?" asked the other. "That is not to the point," replied the toper. "The saloon is established and endowed by government. The opium-joint has no public standing nor respectability. Please pass on; I do not care to be seen speaking to you. When the opium business is licensed, I will have no objection to making your acquaintance. In the meantime, au revoir!"

Moral.—The government should make provision for the indulgence of all vices, or of none.—Hamilton (Can.) Templar.

NUGGETS.

Every church of the Scottish Evangelical Union now uses unfermented wine at the communion.

The Michigan Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias has voted by 46 to 13 to exclude saloon-keepers, bar-tenders and wholesale liquor-dealers from order.

The Akron (O.) W. C. T. U. has established a noon-rest for working girls and women. At a donation party held in its interest lately $236 in cash and a large supply of provisions were supplied.

The Norwegian government annually grants about 6,000 kroners ($1,665) to be divided between the various temperance societies, according to the official returns of numbers and work accomplished.

A Chicago wholesale whisky dealer has, according to the Tribune of that city, $250,000 invested in rare paintings by old masters, which he lends or leases to saloon-keepers who wish to increase the art attractions of their saloons.

That high medical authority, the London Lancet, says: "It is time that the attention of all responsible persons should be seriously directed to the prevalent increase of tobacco-smoking among boys. Stunted growth, impaired digestion, palpitation, and other evidences of nerve exhaustion and irritability have again and again impressed the lessons of abstinence, which has hitherto been far too little regarded."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Paul and Silas arrested. Vs. 19-21. This is the first recorded instance where the Gospel came in direct contact with that love of unrighteous gain which is at the bottom of all our great national sins to-day. This poor girl was possessed of clairvoyant powers, joined perhaps to a low, insane cunning, and under the control of an evil spirit. Why this evil spirit or demon should inspire her to bear testimony in favor of the apostles, which she repeatedly did, and "for many days," is not clear, but doubtless Satan thought this was the best way to stir up a tumult of opposition which should drive them out of Philippi. They were laboring quietly, humbly, obscurely; but the devil is astute enough to know that the Gospel works most surely and effectually in such ways, and if he did not do something to stop it, the whole city would be leavened with its teachings. Spiritualism may often speak the truth through the lips of a medium, and yet the system is one of mingled fraud and diabolism. Jesus would not accept testimony in his favor from such a source; neither would Paul; and by that same mighty Name to which she ignorantly bore witness he cast the evil spirit out of her. This greatly enraged her masters, for "the hope of their gains was gone." So, to-day, the love of money is all that sustains the liquor power. Men do not want the evil spirit of alcohol cast out, because it will interfere with their unrighteous gains. Paul and Silas were persecuted under a mere pretext that they were Jews seeking to introduce a new religion contrary to Roman law, which forbade the introduction of new gods while tolerating all religions already established. Their enemies did not dare give the true reason. So reformers seldom find their persecutors willing to say, "We hate this man because he is casting out the evil spirit of the saloon;" or because he is trying to bring the slaves of the lodge into the freedom which is in Christ. They prefer instead to find some handle which they can use against him, that perhaps has no connection at all with the real ground of their opposition.

2. The apostles imprisoned. Vs. 22-25. A mob never stops to reason. "The multitude rose up against them," and the magistrates, without going through the form of a trial, commanded them to be beaten. The many stripes and the charge to the jailer shows the unusual harshness and severity of the treatment. "But at midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises to God." So it has always been in every age. The church has sung her sweetest songs in her darkest hours of persecution. Paul and Silas did not know how near they were to the dawn, but they rejoiced all the same. Joy in tribulation is always an earnest of the coming day. They did not question God's wisdom in allowing such a fiery trial; they did not try to philosophize or to reason. They simply praised God, "and the prisoners heard them." Neither argument nor sermon goes so far as the voice of prayer and praise in the midst of trial. Others hear and are led to look up to God themselves and find help; or, if they are enemies of the Gospel, are forced to accept a testimony that cannot be gainsaid nor set aside.

3. The deliverance. Vs. 26-34. God might have sent an angel, as he did to the imprisoned Peter. Instead, he sent an earthquake. He might have taken Paul and Silas right out of the prison by a supernatural hand, but he had work for them to do in that Philippian jail which necessitated their stay awhile longer. The jailer, knowing that he would be punished with death if the prisoners escaped, was about to kill himself when arrested by Paul's loud cry to do himself no harm. This is what the Gospel says to every sinner, for all sin is suicidal. The jailer's cry in answer, "What must I do to be saved?" is the most important question a soul can ask, for it includes everything, the fulfillment of life's true ends here, as well as eternal joy hereafter; salvation from the consequences of sin, and, what is of far more importance, from sin itself. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." The apostles taught but one way. Masonry would have told him to live uprightly according to the rules and tenets of the order; Romanism would have bid him pray to Mary and the saints, but none of these answers would have brought the jailer to repentance. "He was baptized . . . rejoiced with all his house." Salvation does not stop with the individual. Christianity is pre-eminently a family religion, joining households together by cords of love, and giving them one great common source of joy. Let us learn from this lesson to expect hindrances from evil men, but also to expect great deliverances; and to praise God most when things look darkest.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The great fire at Fargo, North Dakota, which destroyed three millions of property, and rendered homeless 3,000 persons, also severely damaged Baptist interests. The Swedish chapel, a beautiful, commodious structure, just completed, was destroyed. The pastor, Rev. O. N. Lindh, lost his home, not saving a single thing, his family barely escaping. Many of his parishioners fared the same fate. Rev. L. J. Anderson, pastor of the Norwegian church, saved only a very few things, and many of his people lost their homes. Rev. G. W. Huntley, former general missionary of North Dakota, and some of the members of the First church shared like fate with the rest. The associations of the State have appointed C. H. Holden, general missionary, Rev. W. L. VanHorn, pastor of the First Baptist church of Fargo, and Deacon K. Knudson a committee to receive and distribute relief funds and supplies that may be sent.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, pastor-elect of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, which his father made the most famous Protestant sanctuary in the whole world, was recently in Chicago. He preached Sunday morning in the First Congregational church, and in the evening for Mr. Moody at the Chicago Avenue. At the close of the morning service, he was greeted by several hundred persons, who, for his father's sake and his own, wished to take him by the hand. He is to remain for a time, assisting Mr. Moody in his meetings.

—The Woman's H. M. Union of New York State has recently passed its tenth milestone. The Union now numbers 218 auxiliaries. A constant gain has been made in interest and contributions. In the first year of its history $345 was contributed; the past year, $9,248; total contributions for the ten years, $48,704. Of this the several national societies have received: American Home Missionary Society, $17,476; American Missionary Association, $10,990; Church Building Society, $7,777; New West Education Commission, $5,863; Sunday-school and Publishing Society, $2,395; and the College and Education Society, $1,756.

—The church at Oswego and the New York State Home Missionary Society are specially bereaved in the death of Prof. E. J. Hamilton, who for thirty-five years was the popular superintendent of the Sunday-school, and for several years a director of the missionary society. He was all his life prominent in educational work.

—Fox River (Ill.) Congregational Club met June 13 with the Batavia church. Judge Charles Wheaton, of Aurora, was elected president for the coming year, and Rev. G. H. Smith, of St. Charles, secretary. Prof. H. M. Scott, of Chicago Seminary, spoke on The Work of the Religious Teacher. Dr. J. G. Johnson gave a magnificent address on Artist or Artisan: Which? A dinner with a capital aftermath of speeches was a delightful feature.

DUNKARDS.

—At Muncie, Ind., they have recently held large meetings. The attendance has been estimated at 15,000. They are German, or of that origin. They practice immersion, are particular about dress, and hold to some other peculiarities, such as the parting of the hair, the washing of feet, and the rejection of life insurance. But they are a sturdy, thrifty and conscientious people.

EVANGELICAL.

—A national camp-meeting is announced to be held at Hackley Park, Lake Harbor, near Muskegon, Mich., under the auspices of the National Holiness Association, beginning June 29 and continuing until July 9. Rev. Drs. W. McDonald, J. A. Wood, W. Jones, H. M. Brown, M. L. Haney and others are expected to be present.

—The Chautauqua Assembly has issued a bulletin for ministers, calling attention to various courses which are to be given at Chautauqua, and which will possess especial interest to the ministerial profession. The exercises will include lectures on philosophy, ethics, Biblical study, homiletics, sociology, church work, missions and many other subjects. Among the lecturers and preachers may be mentioned Prof. Henry Drummond, of Glasgow; Pres. George H. Palmer, of Harvard; Pres. J. W. Bashford, of Ohio Wesleyan; Prof. Herrick Johnson, of Chicago; Prof. S. Rigg, of Auburn Theological Seminary; Dr. W. H. Boole, of New York; Bishop Alphaeus

Wilson, of Baltimore; Rev. A. J. Palmer, of New York; Rev. Russell H. Conwell, of Philadelphia; Prof. A. J. Herbertson, of Edinburgh, Scotland; Rev. Philip S. Moxom, of Boston, and many others. A ministerial club will be organized at Chautauqua early in July and will hold daily sessions during the season. The general schedule of lectures, concerts and entertainments is unusually attractive and quite in accord with the very material changes and improvements which have been made at Chautauqua since last season.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The committee appointed to visit places inviting the general conference will meet in Saratoga, June 28, and begin a tour of inspection. They will take in Saratoga, Detroit, Cleveland, Indianapolis, and Chicago.

—The annual camp meeting at Eaton Rapids, Mich., for the promotion of holiness will be held July 20-30. It will be conducted by Rev. Jos. H. Smith, assisted by Rev. Dr. John Parker of New York and other prominent workers.

—Rev. W. D. Morgan, pastor of Gilford Avenue church, and a member of Baltimore conference, applied recently to Bishop Paret for orders as a priest in the Protestant Episcopal church.

—Rev. Dr. M. C. Harris a few days ago organized a Japanese church of about thirty members at Portland, Ore., and baptized twenty-four adults.

—Rev. Francis Penzotti, whose long imprisonment in Peru for preaching the Gospel awakened so much sympathy and interest throughout the church, was ordained by Bishop Andrews at the mission rooms, June 5.

—There is a great social commotion in Tennessee. Bishop Joyce, of the Methodist Episcopal church, was called to dedicate a church building for the colored people. He was invited to, and accepted, entertainment at the home of the presiding elder, who is a colored man. The hospitality was all that the bishop could ask for and was gratefully received. Now some of the white people are coming forward with an unlimited amount of railing and bitterness toward this servant of God for his simple discharge of Christian duty. This incident is only another step in the progress of Americans toward the destruction of a most foolish race prejudice.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The general assembly of the Presbyterian church South, which recently met at Macon, Ga., expressed itself thus upon the woman question: "The session must absolutely enforce the injunction of Scripture forbidding women to speak in the churches (1 Cor. 14: 34) or in any way failing to observe that relative subordination to men that is taught in 1 Cor. 11: 13, and in other places."

—The Christian at Work thinks the Presbyterian church might be spared sufficient time from the Dr. Briggs issue to consider the "suggestive little fact that of its 7,000 churches last year 1,254 churches were reported vacant, not even having a stated supply. Besides this, during the past six years the Presbyterian denomination had been compelled to draw on other denominations for 550 ministers to do its work."

—There is something wrong with our method—the Presbyterian method—of conducting trials in church courts, from the session to the assembly. We believe the general system, or the essential principles, are right. But is there not something wrong in a court being prosecutor, judge and jury? In a session or small presbytery the members are generally acquainted with the case, intimate with the parties, and often unconsciously prejudiced and biased. To try a case in a large synod or assembly is like trying it in a mass meeting. We like the idea of trying cases before commissions.—Midland.

REFORMED CHURCH.

At the recent (eighty-seventh) annual meeting of the General Synod in America, at Asbury Park, N. J., the debate on Federal Union was resumed and was mainly on the question of the constitutionality of the last synod's action in failing to ratify the action of a majority of the classes, which was in favor of union with the German Reformed church. After lengthened discussion, the action of the last synod was declared to be constitutional, inasmuch as it was of the nature of ordinary legislation and strictly within the supervisory power bestowed upon the General Synod by the constitution. It was resolved to indefinitely postpone the further consideration of Federal Union with the Reformed (German) church in the United States.

—The report of the Committee on the State of Religion, at the same General Synod, showed very gratifying progress. The principal statistics are as follows: Churches, 603; ministers, 598; families, 53,996; additions on confession, 5,435; total communicants, 97,520; Sunday-schools, 884; total enrollment, 109,758; benevolent contributions, $330,524; congregational expenses, $1,095,968.

Y. M. C. A.

—Recent statistics show that there are 1,439 associations, with an aggregate membership of 245,809. They employ 1,185 paid officers, own 284 buildings, worth $12,591,000, and other property in excess of all debts (including buildings) to the amount of $14,208,043. An aggregate of 2,582,365 young men attended the young men's religious meeting during the year, and 350,000 the young men's Bible-classes.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

PRES. THOMAS HOLMES, Union Christian College.—I am the uncompromising foe of secret societies in any form whatever.

REV. JAMES W. STRONG, D. D., Pres. Northfield College.—We do not favor secret societies; hope there will never be one in this institution.

REV. P. M. BARTLETT, D. D., Maryville College.—I believe that secret societies, generally speaking, are fraught with mischief and should be discouraged, especially in our institutions of learning.

PRES. JOSEPH MOORE, Karlham College.—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

REV. ALEX. BURNS, Pres. Simpson Centenary College.—Although a Mason myself, I have not a very exalted notion of the importance or influence of Masonry. In fact I don't see much necessity of secret societies of any kind.

REV. S. B. ALLEN, D. D., Westfield College.—Deeming them (especially those best known) injurious to all the best interests of mankind and destitute of all moral right to an existence, we cannot but pray and labor for their overthrow.

PRES. A. M. WESTON, Eureka College.—No human institution has the right to exact oaths. Even the church has, formally, none, and civil governments, if they require them, can only do so because they themselves are ordained of God. Freemasonry has no such right, having no divine origin.

PROF. BASCOM, Williams College.—Bind not the corrupt to your very bosom with bonds of secrecy, and hope to escape their influence. That breath of pollution, the breath constantly on you, which you draw into the seats of life as if it were air, is malaria, ready to creep stealthily through soul and body.

PROFESSORS EDWARDS A. PARK, ABNER PHELPS, E. P. BARROWS and EGBERT SMYTHE, Andover Theological Seminary, to the American Tract Society, Boston, 1865:—Asking for "a judicious and carefully prepared tract, tending to dissuade the members of the churches of Christ from joining secret societies."

REV. E. H. FAIRCHILD, D. D., Berea.—Secret societies are of two kinds, those which aim to secure special and unequal advantages for their members, in social, civil, political and business relations; and those which seek to promote some moral, social, or political reform. The first among which Freemasonry is the most prominent, we regard as selfish in their nature and essential aim, and hence antagonistic to the Christian religion.

HORACE MANN, the American apostle of Education.—Why do all languages ascribe an open countenance to a brave and high-souled man, but a close, shy, disguised, secretive one to villains? To what class do the secretive animals belong—the fox, the tiger, the cat, the snake? Should brutes imitate men as in Esop's time, would not those form the secret societies? ... Where do gamblers live? Where do counterfeiters ply their trade? Where does licentiousness breed its pollutions? Do these seek daylight, the open street, the market place, the common resorts of virtuous men? No, they all belong as by the tie of natural affinity, to the order of secret societies.

REV. RANDALL ROSS, Pres. Lincoln College, Mo., 1873.—Take the report of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows for the year from which it appears their revenue amounts to $4,291,071.12. Of this sum only $1,503,471.40 has been spent in "relief and charity." Only about one third of their revenue is thus expended annually. This leaves an immense sum of money unexpended by the order every year, which must in a few years become a dangerous power in the hands of the order. And this is but an illustration of all the secret orders of the land: and hence we look upon the power of such an immense amount of money in the hands of a power whose workings are in the dark, in secret, as far more dangerous to the financial affairs of the country than all our much talked about railroad monopolies.

HOME AND HEALTH.

WAYS OF INJURING THE HEALTH.

Contriving to keep up a continual worry about something or nothing; giving away to fits of anger.

Being irregular in sleeping and eating, partaking of too many kinds of food, and that which is too highly seasoned.

Wearing thin shoes and stockings on damp nights and in cool, rainy weather; wearing insufficient clothing, especially upon the limbs and extremities.

Sleeping on feather-beds in seven-by-nine bedrooms, without ventilation at the top of the window; and especially with two or more persons in the same small bedroom.

Allowing the power of gain to absorb our minds, so as to leave no time to attend to our health; following an unhealthy occupation because money can be made by it.

Tempting the appetite with bitters and niceties when the stomach says "No," and by forcing food into it when nature does not demand, and even rejects it; gormandizing between meals.

Marrying in haste and getting an uncongenial companion, and living the remainder of life in mental dissatisfaction; cultivating jealousies and domestic broils, and always being in a mental ferment.

Neglecting to take proper care of ourselves, and not applying early for medical advice when disease first appears, but by taking quack medicines to a degree of making a drug shop of the body.

Beginning in childhood on strong tea and coffee, and going from one step to another, through chewing and smoking tobacco and drinking intoxicating liquors; and mental and physical excesses of other kinds.

Leading a life of unfeeling, stupid laziness, and keeping the mind in an unnatural state of excitement by reading trashy novels. Going to the theaters, parties and balls, in all sorts of weather, in thin dresses; dancing until in a complete perspiration, and then going home without sufficient overgarments through the cool, damp night air.—Jenness Miller Magazine.

AROUND THE HOUSE.

Benzine is an excellent polish for the finger nails.

Rub lamp chimneys in salt before washing them; it will brighten them.

A mixture of cream and ink is a good thing to rub on ladies' fine kid boots.

Paraffine will soften leather which has been hardened by water and will restore its suppleness.

An excellent beautifier of the complexion is a hot water bath, followed up by dabs of beau de cologne upon the face.

Headache, toothache, backache, or almost any joint ache, will be relieved by heating the feet thoroughly, with the shoes on.

Lemon juice stains can be easily removed by washing in a weak solution of ammonia. Tomato stains, if treated in the same way, will disappear.

Half a dozen onions planted in the cellar, where they can get a little light, will do much toward absorbing and correcting the atmospheric impurities that are so apt to lurk in such places.

If you dip your broom in clear hot suds once a week, then shake it till it is almost dry, and hang it up or stand it with the handle down, it will last twice as long as it would without this operation.

Mink may be cleaned and freshened with warm corn-meal, and, like the other short-haired furs, may be done without removing the lining. But the long-haired furs are best ripped apart and freed from stuffing and lining.

To keep bright steel or iron tools from rusting, do this: Slake lump lime in a closed vessel with just enough water to make a powder. While yet hot, mix with tallow enough to make a soft, doughy paste, and rub it on the metal.

necessitated a very painful surgical operation and many months of confinement to her bed. When the physician had finished his work and was taking his leave the patient asked:

"Doctor, how long shall I have to lie here, helpless?"

"Oh, only one day at a time," was the cheery answer; and the poor sufferer was not only comforted for the moment, but many times during the succeeding weary weeks did the thought, "only one day at a time," come back with its quieting influence.

I think it was Sydney Smith who recommended taking "short views" as a safeguard against needless worry; and one far wiser than he said: "Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

FARM NOTES.

REMEDY FOR TICKS.

Correspondents of Rome and Farm write to that paper, severally, as follows: No. 1—I drove them off by feeding sulphur and salt freely. Mix three pounds of salt to one of sulphur, and keep in the trough. I learn the ticks are very appropriately called the shingle tick, as they cover the steer or horse, one hanging over the other just as shingles on a roof. They grow to be as large as our common dog ticks. I cleaned off the ticks from my steers, and am feeding thirty-five head. I keep one hog after each steer, and in sixty days will gain one hundred pounds to each hog. No. 2—I had quite a nice lot of grade Jerseys, and went to considerable expense fencing pastures, with the intention of raising cattle, and the first thing I knew they were covered with small ticks, and I found it a matter of impossibility to get them to take on flesh while the ticks remained on them. My remedy is this: Make an emulsion of coal oil and lye soap, of equal parts. Take one quart of coal oil and one quart of lye soap, and put in gallon jar, and then shake till it is thoroughly mixed; then have a tub of warm water and pour the emulsion in the tub, stirring it altogether; then get a large cloth and rub or wash the animal from head to foot, and in a few days' time you cannot find a tick, and your cattle will begin to take on flesh right along. Of course, you will have to select a warm, sunny day to do this washing, or else your cattle will be liable to take cold, and you will be likely to lose some of them.

AMONG THE BEES.

Why don't farmers keep bees and care for them as they do their live stock and crops? They work for nothing, board themselves, and furnish a surplus of honey in an ordinary season. From a single colony I have taken sixty-seven pounds and a swarm in one season. Of course, I have the best Italians I could get, which work on red clover. The labor is very light and pleasant to anyone interested. The idea so common, that the honey bee is on the alert to sting somebody or something, is a mistake. If one learns their nature, and treats them accordingly, they can be handled with as much ease as a cow or a horse, the latter being the most dangerous. I have clean, painted hives, and keep the grass down about them. If a colony is weak, I give them a start in the world by feeding, which they pay back next season with interest. I put chaff cushions around them in winter to keep them warm; therefore brood-rearing goes on lively in spring, and the bees and keepers are happy.—Kansas Farm Record.

IMPORTANT IF TRUE.

A dispatch from Topeka, Kan., June 1, is responsible for the following statements:

The officials of the Rock Island railroad claim that they have the true secret for making rain, and the result of recent experiments made by their rainmaker, C. B. Jewell, along the line in northwestern Kansas, proves beyond question, they claim, that Jewell possesses the wonderful secret of bringing down torrents of rain under the most adverse circumstances. He claims to be in possession of Frank Melbourne's secret, and by sending certain powerful chemicals and gases into the clearest sky clouds are made to form into one solid and compact mass and drenching rains descend.

Jewell has caused a large scope of country around Goodland, in northwestern Kansas, to be thoroughly drenched three times this year, while the far western part of the State has suffered from a prolonged drought since last August. At Mankato he sent his wonderful and powerful gases into the heavens at two different times when the government predicted dry and fair weather, and upon both occasions watered a territory twenty miles square and saved a wheat crop which will yield twenty bushels per acre.

Jewell arrived here in a special car provided for his use by General Manager St. John. He goes to southwestern Kansas from here, into the center of a drought-stricken district, where there has been no rain for nearly a year. In an interview Jewell said there was no question about producing rain at any time or under any circumstances. He uses gases and chemicals that are all-powerful. He is a practical electrician, and says by means of these gases he can send a current of electricity into the clouds which will produce rain and a terrific thunder-storm when the atmosphere is dry and the clouds are scattered. He sends a captive balloon, charged with certain explosives, into the nearest clouds, and invariably rain falls.

Jewell declines to say what he uses. But the fact that the management of the road has faith in his discovery, and is preparing to send him into all the drought-stricken sections, has convinced the people of Kansas that Jewell possesses the true secret. Great interest is manifested here over the experiments to be made to-day. If rain comes after Jewell has sent his chemicals and gases into the heavens in a district that has not had rain for nearly a year, the problem is solved, and rain-making will no longer be regarded as a delusion.

Several articles are unavoidably omitted from the Cynosure until next week. The pressure upon our columns, in this issue, is unusual, but is owing to the annual meeting and directors' reports.

Underlined for insertion in the next issue of the Cynosure is an interesting paper entitled: "Testimony of a Converted Mason of the Thirty-third Degree," by Mr. E. T. McIntire, of Boston, who freely expresses his opinion of Freemasonry as he has found it.

The recent depreciation in the value of silver, the numerous business failures, the shutting down of several great industries, and other important financial events, have caused President Cleveland to call for an extra session of Congress, to convene August 7. Silver mines and mills have ceased production.

The San Francisco (Cal.) Examiner, describing a peculiar Masonic ceremony, says: "The following original chant was repeated." The "original chant" is Solomon's description of a virtuous woman, in Proverbs 31, recently used as a Sunday-school lesson. The Masonic knowledge of the Bible seems to be as limited as the practice of its teachings by the secret lodges.

What miserable stuff and nonsense enters into the composition of theoretic ("speculative") Masonry! Wm. E. Glinther, of Charleston, Ill., writes, in the July Voice of Masonry (p. 509), that, "not only all the brazen vessels, but also the two brazen pillars for King Solomon's temple, were cast hollow that they might typify a rational repository for (the) heavenly archives of Masonry!" There is a good deal of brass in this assertion, as well as in the vessels and pillars referred to.

We had a pleasant call, recently, from Mr. John McDowell, a prominent Prohibitionist residing at Oamaru, New Zealand, who is now visiting the United States for the purpose of investigating the methods of our temperance reform. By going from State to State, interviewing prominent temperance workers, and gathering important information from all sources, he hopes to strengthen the cause in his own country, upon his return.

In another column is given an account, in detail, of the serious rebellion in the Indiana State Normal school at Terre Haute. The remarkable feature of the affair is the importance attached to the cause of the controversy—the removal of Prof. Tompkins for making reflections on the president of the school and his co educators, and the unanimity with which the recreant teacher was supported by nearly all the 1,000 students. There may be other causes not yet made public for this outbreak; but as it stands, it is the most notable insurrection on record in the history of American educational institutions.

A new secret society—"The Army of Liberty"—binds its members by a solemn oath to aid in removing the prohibition law of Kansas from her statute books, by voting at all elections only for whisky-men, regardless of all parties. In this manner they propose to defeat the enforcement of a law that has proved itself a blessing to the people of that State. But why this secrecy? Here, in Chicago, we have seven thousand saloons, and of those who own and habitually frequent them, not one is ashamed to declare his anti-prohibition principle, and vote for them, on every occasion. A secret whisky-drinker cannot keep his secret from the public long, for "when the wine is in, the wit is out."

At a recent conference of Baptist clergymen in this city, when the question of "boycotting" the World's Fair for the latest decision of the Federal court was under discussion, Dr. Henson spoke concerning "boycotts." He hasn't been to the Fair. He is ashamed of Chicago, in this matter. But he thinks that every man must be left to decide for himself in regard to boycotting the Fair. Dr. Haynes said that he thought it was time for radical action. The directors are sensitive only to the loss of money. We need education in conscience and morals far more than we need education that the Fair can give us. There seems to be a very large section of common sense in this expression.

We have rather suspected for a long time that the devil is a Mason, and now we have it on the word of Mystic Shriner Robert Waiton, of Rugby, Tenn., a member of Alhambra Temple at Chattanooga, Tenn., that he is. This erudite Shriner also mentions Eve as "the first and only woman-Mason—a member of the first lodge." "She was Grand Junior Warden," but she had the misfortune to be over-persuaded by her infernal brother-Mason, and so he was admitted to Eden lodge! We all know what happened then. But it is no credit to the fraternity. Shriner Waiton should have known better, we think, than to call Eve the only woman-Mason. What about Hon. Elizabeth St. Leger, Mrs. Beaton, and Madame de Xaintrailles? Masonry is such a subtle "science" that it needs careful study to keep even "bright" Masons from making these "bad breaks."

Some of the "higher critics" are talking very glibly about "the new Bible" and "the newer thinking". Especially in the vicinity of Andover Theological Seminary are these terms frequently heard, and quite often in connection with those of "the larger hope" and "the larger Christ". With the editor of the Standard, "we wish we could understand it;" but we doubt whether the knowledge, when gained, would pay for the trouble of research. "Remove not the ancient landmark," said Solomon, "which thy fathers have set;" and "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." (Prov. 22:28 and Jer. 6:16.) In the light of this instruction, we see no necessity for the "newer" or "larger" theology.

There is something startling in the suddenness of the disaster which recently overtook the English battle-ship "Victoria," off Tripoli, in the Mediterranean, involving the loss of over 400 lives of officers and men. The unfortunate vessel was engaged in friendly nautical maneuvers with another, both under the direction of competent commanders, each of whom had the highest reasons for avoiding a collision; yet they came together. One was taken and the other left. A most distressing feature of this catastrophe was the horrible mutilation of the sinking men by the knife-like screws of the steamship. To add to their sufferings the boilers exploded, and many were scalded. There was no commotion of the elements; the vessel was near the shore, and hundreds of the friends and companions of the crew were within hail, yet, in the providence of God, destruction overtook the unhappy seamen and sent them to their final account, as it were, in the twinkling of an eye.

THE SINFULNESS OF WAR.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

(Concluded.)

But since the necessary methods of war are the same in the so-called defensive as in aggressive wars, and the objection lies mainly in these unrighteous methods, it holds equally against all forms of war, whether for offense or defense.

But really the difference between offensive and defensive war is apparent rather than actual. Nearly all nations that have been engaged in war have claimed that they were simply defending themselves, their rights, their honor, or perhaps the rights and interest of a weaker nation. But nations engaged in war always claim the right to invade the enemy's territory and in every way seek to destroy their military resources. In both of our wars with Great Britain we did not hesitate to invade Canada. The South claimed, and the claim was conceded by other nations, that they were fighting in self-defense; and yet they did not hesitate to invade the Northern States. In the war of '70-'71, between France and Germany, the latter claimed to have acted on the defensive, and yet they captured the emperor of the French and their capital, and dictated the terms of peace in the city of Paris. But the author does not confine his justification to merely defensive wars. He says, "A strong nation may be bound to defend, even by war, a weak nation that is unjustly attacked." Certainly this is true if war is in harmony with the law of Christ. But to admit this is to admit that we may go to war on all occasions of evil and wrong which may exist in other nations. Surely we ought to be interested in the well-being of our fellow-men everywhere. Our government did right to remonstrate with the Czar of Russia for his treatment of the Jews, but it was neither our duty nor our right to seek to relieve them except by our benefactions and our moral influence.

Again our author claims that war may be justified by "the right of revolution". He says, "When a government becomes a tyranny and fails to do its essential work, it is the right of the people to break it down if they can, and institute a better. An attempt to set right by violent means a great wrong in government, is wise and right if there be reasonable hope of success. If not, it may be folly and madness. . . . An attempt at revolution without sufficient reason is rebellion, and the result does not change the character of the transaction." Pp. 177, 178. Of course it follows from the above, that if there is any reason to doubt the necessity or the success of an attempt at revolution, then such attempt becomes criminal; for all things of doubtful morality are in their nature wrong. But let me ask, is there not danger in every instance that those who undertake a war of revolution have either been mistaken as to the necessity of their undertaking, or in their prospects of success? Let us take a few instances. The British colonies, which afterwards became the United States, thought they were justified in war against Great Britain. They thought they had a fair prospect of success. The people of Great Britain thought they were mistaken in both conclusions. The result had nothing to do with the character of the transaction. The conclusions of each party admitted of doubt. It had in it the element of uncertainty and hence, by our author's own premises, did not justify a resort to war. Again, the people of the so-called Confederate States, with far greater unanimity and enthusiasm than the people of the original colonies, thought they had the right and ability to secure their independence by a resort to war. We of the North did not think so. Now, according to the author's theory, their conviction that they had just cause for revolution, and were able to sustain that cause by an appeal to force, was a real justification of their attempt. We did not so regard it. They were put down with a strong hand and with dreadful violence.

Does Dr. Fairchild think that war was justifiable on the part of the South and unjustifiable on the part of the North? No, he thinks just the reverse.

But may we not concede that all the parties to each of these great conflicts were sincerely mistaken, and that they should have contented themselves with moral and political methods rather than to have resorted to war? But is there any right of revolution except through moral influences? Surely the New Testament Scriptures concede no such right. If there ever was a tyrant who might rightfully be resisted and his government overthrown, it was Nero. And yet Paul, in writing to Nero's subjects, says, "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God, and the powers that be are ordained [in the providence] of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive condemnation." Rom. 13: 1, 2. Writing to Titus he says, "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, and to be ready for every good work." Nowhere in the New Testament Scriptures is there given the slightest countenance to any disobedience to constituted authority, except when it requires us to disobey God. The Gospel of Christ most clearly and fully forbids resistance to constituted authorities. This teaching is fully sustained by the example of Christ and his apostles. The most cruel and wicked exercise of power that the world has ever seen was when Jesus was arrested in the garden, condemned by a mock trial, and his crucifixion demanded at the hands of Pilate. Resistance in this case was not hopeless, for if the Lord had so pleased, legions of angels would have come to Peter's assistance when he attempted to resist. But the Lord said, "Put up thy sword. They that take the sword shall perish by the sword."

In thus forbidding forcible resistance to this most terrible of judicial crimes he has forbidden all resistance (except by moral influences) against any constituted authority.

There is another reason for regarding all war as cruel and unjust, which the author entirely ignores. War puts to death the innocent for the crimes of those who deserve to die but are almost sure to escape; nay, are quite sure to be treated with great consideration. To illustrate: A strong nation, with some plausible but false pretext, makes war on another people. Its rulers summon an army to do the bloody work. Of course they are resisted by all the force that can be brought against them. The men who declared the war are the really guilty persons.

The rank and file of the army have little knowledge, and less responsibility. Many of them are there without their consent, and all are simply instruments in the hands of their officers. Now, admitting the right to resist the king, president, or the legislative body that sent them to the field, it by no means justifies the deliberate slaughter of their instruments. Napoleon I. was the greatest of modern aggressors and of the murderers of men, yet it was not he, but his soldiers, that were torn by shot and shell. He was always treated with great consideration.

It is said that men found with arms in their hands are thereby convicted of an attempt on the lives of their fellow-men, and therefore deserve to die. This might possibly be true in case of a mob, where each was governed by one common purpose to do some unlawful act. But it is not true of the soldiers in any army. They are not a mob—have no personal hatred to their so-called enemies. They are but parts of a great machine in which the moving and responsible power is the government and the men who represent it. These glory in the suffering and death of their fellow-men, and the world applauds instead of punishing them. If it were true that every soldier engaged in an unjustifiable war deserves to die, then he would deserve death after he was taken prisoner just as truly as before. If soldiers who are prisoners do not deserve death then it is as truly wrong to kill them on the battlefield. If we cannot punish the guilty we surely should not take vengeance on the innocent.

The immense and increasing cost of war, the heavy burden of taxation and debt that it entails on the nations and on posterity, the suspension of all legitimate business, the immense destruction of property, and, above all, the awful miseries of the battle field, ought to weigh heavily against the inauguration of a war. Especially we ought to consider the personal and national demoralization that it brings in its train. War is a school of dissimulation. Strategy—that is, the deception of an enemy—is regarded as the very soul of war. Every soldier, from the commander who plans, down to the soldier who executes the lie, is a partaker in its wickedness. The more adroitly they deceive, the greater their triumph.

It is a school of violence and blood. The business of the warrior is to kill and to destroy. It greatly cheapens human life. It blunts men's sensibilities as to all distinctions between the morally innocent and the guilty. If the ancient law of Great Britain rightfully excluded a butcher of beasts from serving on a jury in cases involving the question of a human life, much more ought we to exclude the butchers of men. It destroys men's ideas of the rights of property. It teaches men to hate the people of other nations. It promotes drunkenness, blasphemy, Sabbath desecration and licentiousness, and, in short, tends to destroy most of the nobler sentiments of our nature. As a matter of history all wars have been demoralizing. During the seven years of our Revolution the cause of Christian morals went backward many degrees. Infidelity made such advancement that through its influence the name of God was excluded from the Constitution and even from the oath which the President is required to take. The late war for the suppression of the rebellion exerted an influence on public morals, both North and South, which, after more than a quarter of a century, is a source of anxiety and alarm.

The cause of temperance went back immensely. Lotteries and gambling in its various forms that had theretofore been deemed immoral were endorsed by the churches. All kinds of secret societies, the old and the new, increased immensely; and Christianity, especially in its hold on the masses, correspondingly declined. The percentage of suicides, divorces and murders has very largely increased, and in spite of all our temperance work the amount of alcohol consumed per capita goes on increasing. There are doubtless other causes for this enormous growth in crime; but doubtless it is mainly due to the familiarity with the dreadful scenes of our fratricidal strife. Surely it cannot be in harmony with the law of love for a nation to engage in any undertaking that brings in its train such deplorable results. Wars, in the providence of God, are sometimes overruled for good. So was the betrayal and crucifixion of Christ; but the good that grows out of it is no justification of the undertaking. Until we come to regard all war as intrinsically wicked there will be continual pretexts for its existence.

NEW POLAR EXPEDITIONS.

The failures and disasters that have attended the many polar expeditions in no way discourage the adventurers who are willing to sacrifice even life to solve the mysteries of the Arctic regions. Four expeditions will start for the North this summer with the hope of making new discoveries.

Lieutenant Peary, who returned from his last expedition only a year ago, will again sail for Greenland and will try to cross a part of that land with burros and the ice with sledges and dogs. This will be the first experiment in using burros as pack-horses in the frozen regions.

The Ekroll expedition will leave Cape Maher on the east coast of Spitzbergen this month in a boat specially constructed for boat and sledge service and try to reach Peterman's Land, an island north of Francis Joseph Land.

A third expedition has been organized by Frederick J. Jackson, of the Royal Geographical Society, of London, who proposes to sail for the southern coast of Francis Joseph Land and next summer push farther north and try to establish a supply depot within one hundred miles of the pole. He will there spend the winter and the next summer make his final effort to reach the pole.

The most novel expedition is to go out in charge of Nansen, the well-known explorer, who proposes to enter the ice-pack from a point not far from where the unfortunate Jeannette was crushed in 1881. Nansen will allow his ship to enter the ice-pack and drift with it, as it has been established that this ice drifts to the north. He expects this drift to carry him across the pole within three years, and ultimately land him on the Greenland coast.

The last plan is perhaps the boldest move yet made to reach the north pole, as it means trusting to the ice to carry the explorer through where engineering skill and human efforts have failed. From this last expedition no news can be expected from the time it enters the ice-pack until it reaches the Greenland coast, if it ever does.—Inter-Ocean.

AMERICANS ARE EXCLUDED.

An editorial in the Century contains these remarkable statements concerning the trades-union method of controlling certain trades:

"An extreme example of the way in which this is done was furnished by the agreements which the Journeymen Plasterers' Union, of New York City, induced the employers to sign in 1890 and 1892. By the first agreement, signed in 1890, it was stipulated that no one was to be taught the plastering trade in the city for two years. This agreement was kept, and at the end of two years another was signed by which it was stipulated that no one should be admitted to the plastering trade who had not served an apprenticeship of five years. When these agreements were signed, plastering, like most of the building trades, was largely in the hands of foreign-born workmen. The effect of the two agreements, which are still in force, has been to exclude native-born Americans from a good trade for seven years. At the same time foreign workmen, who may not have worked at the trade over six months before coming here, are admitted as journeymen. The effect of these agreements is to keep the trade entirely in the hands of foreigners.

"As we have said, this is an exceptional case, but it differs only in degree from many others. In all the trades Americans are discriminated against as much as possible, and similar results to those accomplished in the plastering trade are reached by more mildly worded but no less effective rules. Thus, when an employer is allowed two apprentices, and the apprentice is required to serve four years, the employer can graduate only one journeyman every other year. The number of employers in any one trade is not large, and such restrictions amount virtually to an exclusion of American young men from the trades. At the sixth annual convention of the Pennsylvania Association of Master House Painters and Decorators, held at Scranton in January last, one of the delegates read a paper on the apprentice system as observed in his trade, in which he said that after a personal investigation 'among at least six hundred master painters and decorators of Philadelphia and vicinity,' he had discovered that not an average of one in fifteen had a single apprentice in his business, and that 'the larger the workshop or establishment, the greater seemed the abhorrence with reference to the employment of boys to learn the trade, many of the masters going so far as to say, and with an evident spirit of pride, that in all their experience as masters, extending from fifteen to thirty-five years, and employing from fifteen to fifty, and as high as eighty workmen, they had never bothered their brains teaching a boy the business.'"

THE ILLINOIS ANTI-TRUST LAW.

The anti-trust law passed by the Illinois Legislature is interesting for its careful and extended definition of a trust. This, in somewhat abridged form, defines a trust to be a combination of capital, skill or acts by persons, firms, or corporations for any or all of the following purposes: (1) to create or carry out restrictions in trade; (2) to limit the production or control the price of commodities; (3) to prevent competition in manufacture or sale; (4) to fix at any standard or figure whereby its price to the public shall be in any manner controlled, any article intended for sale, or to establish any agency whereby the sale of such article shall be covered up, to enable the original vender to control the price; (5) to enter into an agreement of any kind by which the parties agreeing shall bind themselves not to transport or dispose of any article below a certain fixed price, or in any way settle such price so as to exclude unrestricted competition. The bill provides that any corporation violating its provisions shall forfeit its charter, and also for enforcing the provisions of the law against foreign corporations. Any person participating in its violation is rendered liable to a fine of from $2,000 to $5,000. In respect to proof, it is necessary to prove that the combination defined exists, and that the defendant belonged to it or acted with it. The character of the trust may be established by general reputation. It also provides that any contract or agreement in violation of this act shall be void, and that any person who buys any article from any person connected with such a combination shall not be liable for the purchase price of said article. It will be interesting to see how this act will operate in relation to the combinations of labor as well as of capital. Trades unions which seek to control the labor market and to control production would fall within this definition, and the law be made to work with damaging effect against them. But the public, which is weary of all forms of monopoly, will not regret this.—The Advance.

MR. MOODY'S GENERAL BIBLE CONFERENCE.

DEAR FRIENDS AND FELLOW LABORERS:—"By the good hand of our God upon us," we are enabled to issue our call for another General Bible Conference, to be held at Northfield, Mass., from August 1 to 13, 1893. The ten conferences past have been so manifestly marked by the Divine favor, and have so richly abounded in blessings to multitudes of grateful hearts, that we cannot doubt our privilege and duty to go forward another step on the same line of service.

It is to me a great joy to issue this year's call, with the prospect and expectation of being myself permitted to share the services and the blessings of the Conference with my friends. I have returned to my own dear native land, from fourteen months' labor in the Old World, with an ever-growing conviction that nothing but the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, proclaimed with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and exemplified in the holy lives and devoted service of Christian disciples, can ever meet the needs of this lost world, and prevail against the powers of evil. And I rejoice to see that, at home and abroad, the Lord is raising up increasing numbers of consecrated workers who are not ashamed of this old Gospel, and who glory only in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.

It shall be our highest aim, at the coming Conference, as heretofore, to advance the interests of the kingdom of God, seeking a closer union of Christian hearts in faith, hope, and love, that we may have "fellowship one with another," and may "know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge," and be "filled with all the fullness of God," fitting us for Christian life and service.

Let us then come together, as fellow laborers in Christ, "all with one accord in one place," "with a true heart, in full assurance of faith," to wait upon the Lord, and to "consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works, exhorting one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching," for "the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

Among the speakers who will be present are: Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., of Boston; Rev. A. C. Dixon, Brooklyn; Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, Albany; Merrill E. Gates, Ph. D., LL. D., President of Amherst College; Mrs. J. K. Barney, Providence; Maj. D. W. Whittle, Northfield, Mass. We also confidently expect many of the Christian workers, including several from foreign lands who are now assisting us in the Chicago "World's Fair" campaign, to be present and take part at various times. In addition we hope to have with us: Rev. B. Fay Mills of Providence; Prof. W. W. More of University of Virginia; Prof. Robert Thompson, Lake Forest University; Hon. R. Morton, Hamilton, Ontario; Rev. John McNeill, Scotland; and others whose names will be announced later. The singing will be under the direction of Messrs. Ira D. Sankey and Geo. C. Stebbins.

Accommodations may be obtained at the Seminary buildings during the time of the meetings for one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per day. The Betsey Moody Cottage will be open, as last year, for the accommodation of any who may desire more quiet and retirement than is possible in the larger buildings; rates will be two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50) per day for room alone, or two dollars ($2) per day in room with another person. Parties wishing to tent can have a suitable place on the Seminary grounds free of charge, and, if desired, board may be had for seventy-five (75) cents per day. "The Northfield," a beautiful, quiet hotel, furnishes first-class board to those desiring.

All communications in regard to accommodations at Seminary buildings, as well as at "The Northfield," should be addressed to the manager, Mr. Ambert G. Moody, East Northfield, Mass.

Yours in his service, D. L. MOODY.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

REPORT OF THE EASTERN AGENT.

My report covers a period of thirteen months, from May 1, 1892, to June 1, 1893. During this time I have delivered 117 lectures and addresses, aided in holding three conventions and one Christian conference.

My book shows 2,242 calls made and 449 Cynosure subscriptions obtained. Five hundred and thirty-eight dollars and twenty-five cents has been realized for Cynosure subscriptions. Cash collections on the field aggregate $368.31. Nearly $300 additional has been raised through my effort, which has been expended in holding conventions, or remains in State treasuries for future use. My expenses have been as follows: Hotel, $69.20; railroad fares, $213.06; postage and stationery, $11.40. Total, $293.66.

It will be noticed that I have secured less subscriptions to the Cynosure during the past than in former years, while the cash contributions have been larger. The impairment of health during part of the year diminished my efforts in securing readers for our paper.

Holding conventions and other large meetings has required some energy formerly put forth in this direction, so that I need not regard the smaller number of Cynosure subscriptions obtained as indicative of a loss of interest on the part of friends. The increasingly liberal contributions show the reverse to be true. I am glad to report this evidence of confidence and growing interest.

Pennsylvania has been the field of much of my labor during the past year. In this State I find many men and women of the true reform stamp. They think not of consequences when loyalty to Christ, their Head and King, is asked. I refer especially to the descendants of the Scotch Covenanters. Our work is making grand advancement in this State, as shown at the annual convention held in Carnegie Music Hall, Allegheny, in February last. Not less than eight hundred wide-awake, resolute hearers welcomed the speakers of the evening at this notable gathering. A strong State committee is pushing the work with good results.

A convention in the Empire State was held at Walton. While the attendance was not large, and we were disappointed in some of the speakers not reaching us, we felt that a good impression was made in the community, and our cause gained strength by this gathering.

Some two months were spent very pleasantly in aiding the New England agent prepare for what proved to be a very successful meeting, held in the heart of the city of Boston. This gathering showed an inclination on the part of many who had been led astray by the lodge to return to the old paths. The Puritanic spirit is not dead in this old commonwealth. Once thoroughly aroused, lodge shackles must fall.

Not the least of our notable gatherings during the year was the conference of Christians held in New York City. This meeting will long be remembered in that great metropolis, and will, we are confident, be the means of opening other and wider doors to our future work.

I have found some time to labor among the colored churches in Washington and vicinity, as in former years. While I do not regard this as the most hopeful field, it is certainly very needy. Flags, buttons, and great sounding titles will probably continue to attract these grown children, until the white grown children teach them better.

At my lectures the usual attention has been respectful, though the baser element has occasionally shown itself. As reports of my meetings have appeared from week to week in the Cynosure, I need only wait to say that my feeble efforts have been attended with the divine blessings. The Eastern division of our work has experienced a healthy growth during the year past.

There is much reason to take courage and press forward. Respectfully submitted,

W. B. STODDARD,
Agent Eastern Department N. C. A.

REPORT ON OBITUARY.

During the year which has just passed, and since our last annual meeting, some of our able and aggressive co-workers have finished their labors.

Pres. J. Blanchard, who had been for years the recognized leader in our reform, has been called to his reward. It is not necessary for us to speak, in particular, of his services, for though he rests from his labors, his works do follow him and bear the highest testimony to his life of usefulness.

Rev. Geo. Milton, former president of this Association, has died, during the past year, with his face to the foe. Bro. B. T. Roberts, Capt. Wm. Wilson and Bro. Milton Ford were true and tried helpers, all of whom, on several important occasions, have spoken and written in defense of our cause and all Christian movements.

These all died in the faith, bearing testimony to these divine principles.

While recognizing the wisdom of God in these providences, we feel that additional work and added responsibility have been laid upon us; and their fidelity admonishes us to continued loyalty and persistent endeavor in this reform.

REPORT OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE SECRETARY.

NEWMARKET, N. H., June 12, 1893.

Beloved Brethren of the National Christian Association:—I send you the greetings of the New Hampshire Christian Association, which was organized Nov. 24, 1875, and which has been in active work for nearly eighteen years.

We are glad to be able to report progress. A large amount of anti-secret literature has been put in circulation; many anti-secret lectures given; our State organ, the Christian Witness, has an average circulation of about 1,300; many secret society members have been brought out of their lodges, and many honest people have been kept out. Lodge jewelry is much less worn than formerly, especially by Christians; anti-secret principles have made great progress, among preachers of the Gospel especially.

Our Association has, we think, with much wisdom, worked not only against lodgism, but also on evangelistic, holiness, and temperance lines. We think this course has greatly strengthened our testimony against the lodge empire. The N. H. Christian Association was incorporated at the last session of our State Legislature.

May the blessing of Almighty God rest upon the annual meeting of the N. C. A.

Your brother, S. C. KIMBALL,
Sec. of the N. H. State Ass'n.

REPORT OF DIRECTORS' MEETING.

The new Board of Directors of the National Christian Association met at the office of the Association, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, June 24, and, after prayer by Rev. J. P. Richards, perfected the following organization:

Edwin R. Worrell, President; Rev. T. B. Arnold, Vice President, and Rev. Edgar B. Wylie, Secretary.

Committees were appointed as follows:

Publications (including the Cynosure).—Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard, Prof. H. F. Kletzing, Rev. A. G. Johnson, Rev. J. P. Richards.

Finances.—Prof. Elliot Whipple, Prof. H. A. Fischer, J. M. Hitchcock.

This committee was also made the Auditors for the year.

Buildings.—Wm. I. Phillips, Rev. W. B. Stoddard, Ezra A. Cook.

Some matters were referred to the Board by the annual meeting, June 20, and they received their first attention.

The minutes of the annual meeting were read, corrected and approved.

The election of an editor of the Cynosure was referred to the Board, and Mr. Henry M. Hugunin was chosen to that office. The Board expressed great satisfaction with the work Mr. Hugunin has done for the two years past, and was confident of the wisdom of the choice made. It was voted to request the editor to allow his name to appear at the head of the editorial page of the Cynosure.

In view of his eminent success last year, Wm. I. Phillips was made General Secretary in charge of the whole field, at a salary of $1,200.

With a hope that Rev. M. A. Gault would accept the office so ably filled last year by Rev. Henry L. Kellogg, who leaves it for work in the pulpit, the General Secretary was instructed to communicate with him in reference to the work.

As an expression of the appreciation felt toward the work done by Miss Elizabeth E. Flagg in the columns of the Cynosure, the Board voted her a donation of $25. Her salary is to continue at $15 per month.

The question as to what the Association should do about its exhibit and Congress in connection with the World's Fair, was discussed very thoroughly. The exhibit is in place and presents a creditable appearance; and had the Fair authorities obeyed the laws of the land and of the universe, the friends of the anti-secrecy cause would have rejoiced in this opportunity of showing the literature of the Association; but in view of the present lawless management of the Fair, the Board ordered the exhibit withdrawn if it be possible to do so, and that the committee on the Congress make no further arrangements so long as the gates of the Fair are opened on the Lord's day.

Prof. Elliot Whipple, E. A. Cook, and J. M. Hitchcock were appointed to care for the exhibit while it must remain where it is.

Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard, Rev. Edwin R. Worrell, Rev. T. B. Arnold, Prof. H. F. Kletzing, and Rev. A. G. Johnson were given charge of the Congress and instructed as above.

The expenditure of the $500 in the Jackson will case, providing for work in Vermont, was left to the New England Association.

The committee on the exhibit was allowed the profits on sales of books and Cynosures made at the Fair, to defray the expenses incurred by caring for the exhibit while it remains in place.

Great cheer and hopefulness was felt by the Board in view of the outlook for the new year.

ELLIOT WHIPPLE, Chairman, pro tem.

EDGAR B. WYLIE, Secretary.

THE FIELD SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The Board of Directors instructed your Secretary to organize the States into districts, so far as practicable.

The East is so well cared for, under the labors of Brethren Stoddard and Kimball, that it seemed advisable to help other fields into a like condition.

A somewhat extended statement of organization and work of the Western District will illustrate the work attempted. This district is composed of Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, with Rev. W. C. Paden as District Secretary.

Before starting out upon a campaign, State maps are studied; the possibilities of accomplishment in the time allotted are considered; places where friendly congregations and colleges are located are marked, that as many may be visited as possible.

Secretary Paden gave some time to each State in his district. A convention was held in some place in each State, selected by himself or by the Executive Committee of the State.

These conventions are a blessing to the whole State, and to the regions beyond, even to places where the lecturer has not been. The reports are carried to all parts by the public press; especially is the Cynosure an important convention auxiliary, for in connection with the convention it is sent for several weeks to hundreds of ministers, notifying them of the conference and carrying reports of its proceedings.

The plan has worked well, and commends itself as practical and useful.

The labors of one man encourage the many to labor. In Missouri, Bro. M. N. Butler did much, beside aiding Bro Paden in the State convention. The same convention had the splendid services of Rev. T. M. Chalmers, whose voice was heard with much interest and profit, also, in the Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska conventions.

The Iowa State Convention was held at the time appointed by their State Executive Committee, of which Brethren Robb and Mendenhall are members. In this State is an able lecture-bureau which supplies any locality with able addresses on the secret lodge question, for traveling expenses only. How much this agency has accomplished I am not informed. But, besides the distribution of papers and tracts, and the steady shining of the Free Press of Birmingham, addresses have been given by Messrs Paden, Gault, Kellogg, Fenton and myself; so that in the aggregate considerable labor has been performed in Iowa.

A conference in this office, a few weeks ago, with Brethren Robb and Dorcas, of the Iowa State Executive Committee, we hope, will result in a more extensive seed-sowing and better harvest for the Master's kingdom this coming year.

Secretary Paden gave several months of faithful service in Kansas. He held one successful convention. Every State in his district has had a testimony lifted up before its inhabitants, and hence much more good has been done by personal address, by tracts, by the visits of sample Cynosures, or other anti-secrecy publications, than can be known at present.

The following from a recent letter is in place here: "The Association, through its agents, its printed publications, and its lecturers, is a great enlightener of the people. It is also a great moral support for the few, who, like myself, alone, in a lodge ridden community, try to resist their baleful influences."

The work in this Western District, of which Bro. Paden is the Secretary, illustrates our efforts and success in the Pacific District, the Central District, the Northern District, the Eastern District, as well as in New Hampshire and New England.

It will be in place here to state that the first State convention was held this year in Nebraska, and a State organization formed. The plans for constant work by an efficient agent for this State are well under way. One of her citizens has put his property into shape to make this possible within a few years.

The conventions of the year have been unusually good and well attended. They have averaged one for each month, and, with one exception, what Rev. H. H. Hinman wrote of the Wisconsin Convention may be said of each, viz.: "It is the best one that we have ever held in the State."

Much is due, under God, to Rev. S. Matthew for the organization of the Pacific Department. This auxiliary to the N. C. A. was formed at the convention held in Oregon, in August last, at which time some four hundred signed the constitution, of whom thirty-five were ministers.

Rev. P. B. Williams is their District Secretary. He has arranged for this present month an average of three anti-secrecy lectures per week.

From correspondence with Christian friends in Canada, our hope was that Canada would, by this time, have a District Secretary. In this we are disappointed; but the month's work of Bro. J. P. Stoddard, in Berlin and Toronto, and other towns, is worthy of a word, since, in addition, to a lecture for nearly every day in the month, the secular press of Toronto kept up the work for some weeks or months succeeding his visit. It is expected that this work will be prosecuted and extended this fall.

Hence we ought to praise God and, I trust, do praise him, for the extent to which he has blessed the field work this past thirteen months.

The following-named have given much of their time to field work during the past year: Rev. Sam'l F. Porter, Rev. James P. Stoddard, Rev. M. A. Gault, Rev. W. B. Stoddard, Rev. Wm. Fenton, Rev. W. C. Paden, Rev. S. C. Kimball, I. R. B. Arnold; and to this list belongs, of course, the Corresponding Secretary. Many others have rendered valuable services by their addresses in conventions or testimonies in other public places. The following occur to me as I write:

M. H. Nichols, who acted as agent on the Pacific coast for a short time after their State convention; Rev. W. W. Ames, T. R. Griffin, Bishop H. J. Becker, Rev. F. J. Davidson, Rev. Robert A. Paden, J. K. Glassford, Rev. S. H. Swarts, Rev. Thos. M. Chalmers, Prof. H. F. Kletzing, Eld. A. B. Lipp, Rev. E. R. Worrell, John F. Hanson, M. N. Butler, Rev. H. H. Hinman, Rev. J. B. Galloway, R. N. Countee, and many others.

A few words concerning the work of those giving most of their time to this reform may not be uninteresting:

Rev. S. F. Porter gave his attention and time, at the beginning of the year, to visiting the ministers of Northern Illinois, and the rest of the year to work in Southern Ohio, Virginia, and West Virginia. He has placed in institutions of learning, during the year, TWENTY-SIX ANTI-SECRECY LIBRARIES! His has been a very important work. No one can say definitely what influence for good these anti-secrecy libraries in colleges may have on the destiny of a future Summer, or Lincoln, or Blanchard.

It was the intention of Rev. J. P. Stoddard to furnish you with a more detailed report of his work than I can give in this short summary. There has been most hearty co-operation and sympathy between him and your Field Secretary, as well as between the New England and the National Christian Associations.

The N. E. Association has an endowment secured, though not yet productive, amounting to some $14,000. Its convention, last year, was of national interest. The last session—the climax of the convention—was addressed by women only—Mrs. A. J. Gordon, Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, and Miss Elizabeth E. Flagg. This, in itself, is a notable event. Many hope it may mark the beginning of a more active interest among the women of America in this vital question.

Rev. M. A. Gault's labors continued until his health demanded a change and rest. He hopes to find it in a pastorate in Indiana. We trust it may be so. He gave more anti-secrecy addresses in six months than many agents do in twelve. Besides averaging over four addresses for every week, and speaking at the Pennsylvania Convention, he organized three successful State conventions.

W. B. Stoddard, Secretary for the Eastern District, has held three conventions of considerable influence. That in Pennsylvania is thought to have been equaled by few ever held in that State. His report will be given by himself, but may not tell you that, though this work is telling on his health, so that for two months he was what an ordinary man would call sick, yet his monthly reports show 77 anti-secret lectures, 40 sermons, 2,245 calls, 457 subscriptions to the Cynosure, taken in thirteen months.

Rev. W. C. Paden, the Western District Secretary, came among us an untried man. He has won friends, and advanced the interests of Christ's kingdom as often as he has found an open door in Iowa, Missouri or Kansas. He also aided Bro. Gault in the Nebraska Convention. He has served nine months, and given 68 anti-secrecy lectures and 42 other addresses, made 370 calls, and taken 136 Cynosure subscriptions.

Rev. Wm. Fenton has been virtually the secretary of the Northern District, though his labors have been mostly in Minnesota, where he held the State Convention. He aided the convention in Wisconsin and lectured in a number of places in Northern Iowa. He is constantly at work, and, like our College agent, generally pays his own salary and expenses. I have received some excellent commendations of his work from ministers in whose churches he has spoken. The total appropriation to his district, this year, was about $150. This does not include some hundreds of Cynosures sent to the ministers of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

I am very glad that we have a letter of greeting and a report of progress from Eld. S. C. Kimball, the N. H. Secretary. The relation of the N. H. State Association to the N. C. A. has been very cordial during the past year. Bro. Kimball thought that he could make good use of some of Thurlow Weed's testimony on the Morgan abduction, and 1,000 were appropriated for N. H. work.

It is to be regretted that we have no personal report of the year's work on the Mission Boat by Bro. I. R. B. Arnold. His need of a steam-tug has been duly advertised in the columns of the Cynosure, and sums received here have been forwarded. He has now received nearly enough to purchase the tug. When he has fully accomplished it, the light upon the secret empire needed so sorely will be carried to multitudes more than it has been possible for him to reach heretofore in any one year.

It is an interesting fact that, at one place, many conversions to Christ took place in his floating chapel.

As a storehouse of information, as an arsenal of supplies, the N. C. A. has proven itself useful to many persons, including ministers and missionaries, during the past year. Aid has been given by personal conversation in the office, by correspondence, and by the judicious appropriation of books and tracts to meet the need which becomes, each year, more urgent, as the nature of secret societies is being experienced by the churches.

The tract work has been considerable. Forty thousand pages of these little leaflets were sent out in one month. That some good is accomplished by tract distribution is evidenced by these two or three extracts from letters:

"I picked up an anti-secret tract on the floor of Fisk University. It has led to my salvation, and that of many others, from the lodge."

A merchant writes that he uses our tracts in his business letters, and has sent them into nearly two hundred wholesale houses, in different cities. He has heard from a few, and believes that many, under God, will tell for our reform.

Rev. S. Matthew writes that many have been converted to this reform by the tracts which he has circulated during the last ten years. He says: "I have proved that the circulation of tracts is a very important part of the work of reform."

Rev. Dr. Carradine's 20-page sermon has maintained its popularity. Though two other houses printed it, the edition printed by the N. C. A. had an average circulation of twenty copies per day for the eighteen months after it was first issued.

One man in Idaho ordered 800 of the booklet, "Folly, Expense and Danger of Secret Societies," by Pres. C. A. Blanchard; and one denomination is making arrangements for its wide circulation among its membership.

"God helps those who help themselves." This is true in this reform. Notice a few of the providences which have been observed the past year. The secret societies are themselves compelling thinking people to take sides against them. Consider the murder of Rustin by the D.K. E. of Yale College; the fraternity trouble in the Iowa State Agricultural College; the barbarities practiced in Harvard on Mr. Garrison; the more recent ones on students in Ohio, as illustrated by cuts in the public press.

Speaking of these the Catholic Review asked: "What better are these 'secret societies,' or 'Greek-Letter' young ruffians than the young brutes of the Sioux Indians who tortured the prisoners from Custer's column, taken at the battle of the Little Big Horn?"

The newspapers tell us that no man could talk more fluently about "the Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man" than the organizer of the Iron Hall, who had been advanced from a salary of $1,000 to $20,000 at the time his victims were caught in the fall of the order. Many of such minor orders have collapsed during the year. Massachusetts has recently passed a law forbidding such societies a place in her commonwealth.

Other object-lessons have been the secret society riots among the miners of Tennessee and Idaho, and murder of non-union men; the death of two obnoxious cattle men in Kansas, laid at the door of the Farmers' Alliance by the public press; murder in Michigan by an emissary of the Paris Terrors, who, true to his oath, had followed his man until the deed was accomplished; the Buffalo strike and prostration of business; the revival in Pennsylvania of the Molly Maguires, and the murder of those obnoxious to them.

The Highbinders and Mafia, according to the public press, have not allowed the American people to lose all interest in these imported secret societies of Europe and the Orient.

The Homestead riot will not soon be forgotten as an attempt of a secret society to control a corporation,—though officers of the law be shot down, and non-union men be poisoned by wholesale. Hugh F. Dempsey, though convicted of poisoning the non-union men, was unanimously elected Master Workman of Labor Association No. 3, Knights of Labor, of Pittsburgh.

The character of these associations is thus being forced upon the attention of the people, and good men must take sides against them.

The foreign call has been for both men and literature this year. Both are needed. Every country seems cursed with secret lodge-worship. Orders for books and tracts have been filled for New Zealand, South Australia, India, Africa, Switzerland and Canada. An extract or two from letters will emphasize the importance of this branch of work.

Rev. C. B. Ward, of India, writes: "On every hand I see secretism gaining ground among the natives of India. . . . It must be admitted that Masonry has a fast hold on India. This thing is spreading among native Christians, too."

Under date of April 29, 1893, Mrs. H. M. Bridgman, who, with her husband, has been for many years under the A. B. C. F. M., in Natal, South Africa, writes: "The order of Freemasonry is very strong in South Africa, though I have not heard of any of the natives who have given the matter consideration."

In this letter Mrs. B. sends for a second order for literature.

The above will give an idea of what is being done, and that the fields are white already to harvest.

We have looked back over the past year, and now confront a new year. The same mighty foe to the Kingship of Jesus Christ is before us. We cannot destroy the evil. God alone can do that. He does not ask us to try to do it. He reserves that to himself. But we are to do two things next year, as last year: Keep out of evil, and testify against it.

W. I. PHILLIPS,
Field Secretary.

REFORM NEWS.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN ILLINOIS.

CHICAGO, June 30, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It has been my privilege to again attend a Wheaton College Commencement. To one out in life's field, battling for an unwelcome cause, seeing multitudes blinded by the god of this world and rushing on to destruction, realizing that he is but a drop in the great ocean, that his best effort to lift the fallen may be of little avail, such times are most refreshing. It must rejoice the heart of every true man and woman to know that God is calling out from the darkness and superstition of this world an army of consecrated young men and women, thoroughly equipped to do battle for the King Immanuel. Such are the graduates of Wheaton College. I would not speak disparagingly of other reform colleges. I know of many sending forth men and women of whom they may be justly proud.

I am naturally allied to Wheaton. It was my spiritual birthplace. After listening to the graduating orations of yesterday, I rejoice more than ever that God in his providence gave me such a favored home. I have had my fears lest prosperity and the blessings of God bestowed upon this institution should lead to pride and a lowering of the standard to suit the world. I am glad to report that such is not the fact. On the contrary I never attended a commencement where a more devout, determined, and universal giving up all for Christ was manifest. A deep spirit of Christian love and unity pervaded the entire atmosphere. No wonder over eighty per cent of the men and women going forth from this institution go as Christians, more than forty per cent of the male graduates entering the ministry or missionary field. It has been well-said of this college, "She has sent out many splendid barks on the voyage of life, and not one has drifted back a wreck."

In the graduates of the class of '93 the world is given sixteen trained Christian workers; sixteen reformers, whose talents are henceforth to

CORRESPONDENCE.

OBSERVATIONS OF AN EVANGELIST.

GREEN CO., Tenn., June, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—While looking over an old copy of the Christian Cynosure, I felt impressed to make a few statements regarding that which I have seen while holding revival meetings in Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches.

I am an evangelist of the German Reformed church, and hold my church membership in Philadelphia under Pastor W. Deleany. I have never belonged to any secret order, always being afraid that if I joined them I could not have freedom. I have witnessed two or three things done by those who were in such fraternities, and they had to flee to escape the punishment which they deserved.

I notice that whenever I come into a community of Masons, Odd-fellows, or Knights of Pythias, I am found out the very first day; and I also observe that all through parts of Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee, when going from city to town, they shun me and brand me as a tramp or imposter; yet I have a letter from my church, and more from other churches in two of those States; still they dodge the truth, and those who are ministers, and who go ten miles, through snow and sleet, to attend their lodges, crossing dangerous creeks and rivers, yet cannot attend religious meetings within four hundred yards of their homes, because it would give them a cold to go out in the night air.

Another thing I notice. These so-called Christians will hardly allow one to come under the shadow of their dwellings. I have suffered more than any one could realize in those communities and bodies where secretism reigns. I have scattered a great many tracts among them; I talk to men concerning the deadly influence of the lodge upon the churches, and labor with some of these ministers to send to your association for tracts. Some have promised to do so. Remember, I am but a little gimblet; but I am trying to help make a little hole in the secret lodge system, and so to aid in seeing it sink into oblivion; for it is one of the worst pieces of mendacity and swindling that we have in America, and in the churches. I should say that one lodge minister will do more harm in a neighborhood than all the rest of the people. He will tell his congregation not to attend the revival services, and they tell others, thus breaking up the meetings and induce the people to drive away the evangelist by refusing to give him food and a place to sleep, charging him, to the very last cent, for what he buys.

Out in these States, where the rough men and secret distilleries flourish because they will not pay the government taxes on their products, they get into the mountains, do just as they please, and are almost sure to shoot or stab the very first one who offends them. There are many murderers secreted in these mountains who should have been hanged; but they belong to the Masons, Knights of Pythias, Odd-fellows and the devil.

People may say what they please respecting deeds of charity in the lodge-ridden communities; but I found out in talking with those who have fallen behind in their payments of dues, how soon a member of these societies will be thrown aside as deadheads. This I feel free to say as a man among men, and with men who possess a principle of their own.

But I am sorry to add that there are men in some counties who think that I am no better than a pig. I was talking with one man who had made the statement that Masonry began away beyond the age of Solomon. I told him that I had been in London and very close to the spot where stood the tavern in which his fraternity first organized, in 1717; and that any one who has visited that part of London knows that, like Masonry, it is very dark and dead—nothing but a low drinking-place.

I am glad to say, and declare with all my being, that from rivers to lakes, where my work has been among all classes of men, I do not see that secrecy is any benefit morally, much less spiritually.

I showed to some of the preachers the tracts that I received from your office, with two of your books on Masonry, and their oaths, and some of the Christians were shocked; but I am sorry to add that many of the preachers are poor and unable to buy your publications. Some of them get scarcely enough to support their families, yet some of their members are doing well and paying their dues to the secret societies. To me it seems like rubbing grease on a fat hog, to give money to these orders.

I find there is a fear among the people in the different States that the secret power in these societies can rule and impel every one to bow to their wicked schemes. I hope that we are not far from the time when we shall see all ministers and churches standing together against this great evil, rooting it out of God's house, and casting it back to the originator from whom it came—the father of lies. Your friend, for purity, peace, and love to God and man, AN EVANGELIST.

A PERTINENT TESTIMONY.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., June 18, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—If the secret lodges are not depleting the churches, I would like to know what does.

Some two years ago a church record fell into my hands, and I found sixty-seven names on it; but only nine were men, and the two deacons and two others were lodge men, with probably more of them.

OBSERVER.

OBERLIN COMMENCEMENT.

OBERLIN, O., June 22, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Senior Academy class (Preparatory) held their exhibition in the First Church on Saturday, June 17. On Sunday afternoon, Pres. Ballentine preached the baccalaureate sermon from John 16: 33. The theme was victory through love, and was an able presentation of the subject. At night the missionary sermon was by Rev. W. H. Davis, of Detroit, on the imperative command to evangelize the heathen world, Mark 16: 15. The Conservatory of Music held its Commencement on Monday, 19th. On Tuesday forenoon was the meeting of the Alumni, at which several other addresses were made. The Senior class had their exercises on Tuesday afternoon. These corresponded with the usual exercises of graduation day, except that the number of addresses was fewer, and there was greater opportunity to put into them more of thought. The addresses were all able; some redundant with wit, others with logic and eloquence. Three poems were all of marked excellence. The only address which was criticised was an able plea for the theater. On Tuesday night was the first concert, at which "St. Paul" was rendered, much to the satisfaction of those who appreciate classical music. On Wednesday the Commencement address was by Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus of Chicago. His subject was Savonarola, and his presentation was very able. After conferring the 92 degrees the Alumni enjoyed a bountiful dinner and speeches.

Of the 92 graduates there were about an equal number of young men and young women. Forty-five were from the Classical, 29 from the Philosophical, 10 from the Literary and 8 from the Musical departments.

Wednesday night was the final concert.

Oberlin has perhaps never sent forth a class of higher intellectual attainments.

FREEMASONRY.

ITS CHRISTLESS DEGREES AND THOSE THAT BURN LESQUE CHRISTIANITY.

Following the exposition of this subject as to the Blue Lodge and Chapter, in last week's Cynosure, we now take up the thirty degrees of the Scottish Rite for the same purpose.

I.—SECRET MASTER'S DEGREE.

This is a drama, by which Solomon and Adoniram are represented in the opening ceremonies. There is no prayer, but Solomon opens the lodge by saying: "Illustrious brethren, this lodge is open and devoted to God." No specific deity is designated.

In the initiation drama there are numerous collaborated passages from the Psalms of David recited at various points, with Scriptural appliances, such as the golden candlestick, pot of incense, etc. A prayer reads thus: "Oh, God, we pray thee, thou Grand Architect of the Universe, to cast thy all-seeing eye upon this sanctuary, which symbolizes the conscience of man, and help us to use the key of intelligence within the balustrade of reason, so that we may know ourselves, link ourselves unto thee, and become fit for the immortality thou has promised."

In the "historical discourse" to the candidate are given the Jewish names of God, Adonai, Jehovah, etc., out of the consecutive initials of which are formed a name and number to designate the lodge distinction of the candidate. There is no mention of Christ in this degree.

II.—PERFECT MASTER'S DEGREE.

No prayer, no Christ, in all this degree, and only a few Scriptural recitations; but the old fable of Hiram Abiff is revived.

III.—INTIMATE SECRETARY.

This is another drama; time, soon after the completion of Solomon's Temple; characters, Solomon, Hiram, King of Tyre, etc.

In the opening ceremonies, Solomon asks Hiram what are the object and motives of this assembly. Hiram replies that the object is "to instruct ourselves," and that the motives for this are "the preparation of our souls for immortality and love of God and man." Then comes the question, "How shall we instruct ourselves?" and the answer of Hiram is: "Through curiosity and the exercise of the physical and mental powers;" and this is to be done in the lodge. This is either verbiage having no meaning, or it intimates that men are able to save their own souls, without the intercession of a Mediator. There is no prayer in the opening ceremonies, during the initiation or in the closing rites. Christ is entirely ignored.

IV.—PROVOST AND JUDGE.

This degree lodge is called a "college," and it is the "dress rehearsal" of a drama in which Adoniram again appears, with several new characters. No prayers, no Christ—no Christianity—appear in this absurd degree.

V.—INTENDANT OF THE BUILDING.

Another drama, in which one character represents Hiram Abiff "dead to sin and vice," yet hopeful of his being made "alive to virtue and truth," through the lodge ceremonies. This degree has no prayers, but "furnishes a murdered Hiram as a counterfeit for a crucified Christ, and to raise him from the dead as a ridiculous caricature of Christ's resurrection, 'by the strong grip of Judah's Lion.'"

VI.—MASTER ELECT OF NINE.

Still another Solomonic drama—traditional, not Scriptural; murderous, not religious—un-Christian, Christless, nonsensical.

VII.—MASTER ELECT OF FIFTEEN.

Closely resembles the previous degree in the foregoing characteristics. The obligation is to "keep exactly in my heart all the secrets that shall be revealed to me!" And there is not one worth remembering in the entire degree; but he promises, "in failure of this my obligation, I consent to have my body opened perpendicularly, and to be exposed for eight hours in the open air, that the venomous flies may eat of my entrails" (laugh!), "my head to be cut off and put on the highest pinnacle in the world; and I will always be ready to inflict the same punishment on those who shall disclose this degree and break this obligation!" And then he seals his obligation with this prayer: "So may God help and maintain me!" Praying for divine help in such a miserable business! Yet Masons tell us that "Masonry knows no punishment but expulsion from the lodge!"

VIII.—SUBLIME KNIGHTS ELECTED.

A continuation of Solomonic "legends" and drama. In the obligation the candidate promises "to adore my God," and calls on his God for help. Hebraic allusions to God are introduced in the ceremonies, with Jewish symbols, but without Christ or the interests of his kingdom in this age of the world. It is difficult to see how this degree can benefit any one.

Harper, David Brook, and C. M. Hardy; with the customary editorial notes and illustrations, book notices, etc. Published by W. B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union, New York.

St. Nicholas for July has a good collection of readable and instructive papers, such as John F. Ballantyne's Chicago, illustrated; Grace W. Soper's Festival Days at Girls' Colleges, illustrated, and The Children's Building of the Columbian Exposition. Boys and girls of the younger classes will also find much to entertain them in the minor novelties of this issue. New York: The Century Co.

LODGE NOTES.

THE HEART OF A MASON.

There was a strange ceremony performed in Oakland on Monday night last, the like of which is without parallel in history, and within a few days there will be buried somewhere within the Masonic temple in Oakland the heart of a man who died for Masonry.

The ceremony was the receipt of the heart by Gethsemane Chapter, No. 5, Rose Croix, of the Scottish Rite of Masonry, and the formal assuming of the care of it by the Chapter. It was a brilliant gathering, and one that was unique in its way. Even in the history of Masonry it has no equal.

The heart was that of Ygnacio Herrera y Cairo, who was the governor of the State of Jelisco, Mexico, thirty-five years ago, and was killed, so the Masons claim, because he was one of the first Masons in Mexico. The murder was committed thirty-three years ago, and until the present the heart was carefully preserved in Mexico—where, the Masons say, will always be a mystery except among the craft. It finally came into the possession of Mrs. Rosalie L. de Coney, the wife of Alexander K. Coney, now the Consul-General of Mexico and a resident of San Francisco. The last request of the dead man—that his heart be preserved and removed to some place where it would not be disturbed in future years—had never been carried out. The heart had been preserved, and it was still in Mexico and in danger from the unsettled condition of the country, and those who felt the responsibility of carrying out the last request did not feel that their strange charge was safe until it had been deposited with the Masonic fraternity in the United States.

The ceremonies on Monday evening were unique, as befitted the strange occasion and the strange act. There were many prominent Masons present, representing the United States and Mexico. Both Mr. Coney and his wife were present, and after introductory ceremonies, Mr. Coney presented the casket and a painted portrait of Ygnacio Herrera y Cairo, while his wife handed to the care of the Chapter the large bottle with the human heart floating therein.

The Mexican national hymn, translated, was then sung, and on behalf of the Chapter Major Edwin A. Sherman accepted the heart and promised to forever care for it.

Then the coronation ceremony was performed, Mrs. Coney being crowned with roses and Mr. Coney with laurel.—San Francisco Examiner.

A MASONIC BIBLE.

A book has been published, recently, entitled: "The History of the Ancient and Honorable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons and Concordant Orders, written by a board of editors under the direction of Henry Leonard Stillson, assisted by that eminent Masonic writer, William James Hughan, of London. This work is a standard Masonic authority, and is to the Mason what the Bible is to the Christian, an oracle to be consulted and studied whereby to learn the history of all the various orders working under the 'generic' name of Masonry. The key-note of the book is read in the Eulogium: 'Freemasonry, the Conservator of Liberty and the Universal Brotherhood of Man'—Masonic Chronicle.

MASONRY IN EGYPT.

The Grand Lodge of Egypt is composed exclusively of lodges of Free and Accepted Masons, and has jurisdiction of such only. It has thirty-four lodges under its jurisdiction, none of which sprang from the Grand Orient of France or other (unrecognized or cladenstine) Grand Orients. The Grand Lodges of England, Scotland and Ireland have officially recognized the Grand Lodge of Egypt, and have appointed Grand Representatives near it. Its present Grand Master is Bro. Idris Ragheb Bey, of Cairo, a gentleman of culture and official standing, who speaks English fluently and correctly.—Exchange.

HENRY M. HUGUNIN - - - Editor.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1893.

When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.—OUR LORD.

ANARCHISTS PARDONED.

Governor Altgeld has pardoned, and thus restored to citizenship in this State, the convicted anarchists, Neebe, Schwab, and Fielden.

These three men were tried and convicted of participation in the Haymarket riot, for which Parsons and three others forfeited their lives upon the scaffold about seven years ago.

The sentence of one was fifteen years in the penitentiary; the other two were condemned to confinement for life.

The crime for which they suffered was an armed resistance to the government of the State of Illinois and the city of Chicago, which resulted in the death of several officers of the law.

The anarchists in 1886 were a secret organization, composed mostly of persons from foreign countries, who expressed themselves opposed to our Constitution, our laws, and our existing civil and social institutions. They openly denounced these things, declared war upon capitalists, and organized armed forces to inflict damage upon them and their property. They were dangerous, because evil at heart, wrong in their ideas of personal and national liberty, and without affiliation with what are considered the best interests of society under our republican form of government. They were not devoid of intelligence, but whatever they knew was distorted by their prejudices. Probably these prejudices are still quite as strongly cherished by them.

After their incarceration their friends persistently labored to secure their release; but until Governor Altgeld came into office, their freedom was not considered desirable or their punishment unjust.

The petition for their pardon contained the following statement, which met with the approval of the Governor and resulted in their release:

1. That the jury which tried the case was a packed jury selected to convict.
2. That according to the law as laid down by the Supreme court both prior to and again since the trial of this case the jurors, according to their own answers, were not competent jurors and the trial was therefore not a legal trial.
3. That the defendants were not proved to be guilty of the crime charged in the indictment.
4. That as to the defendant, Neebe, the State's attorney had declared at the close of the evidence that there was no case against him, and yet he has been kept in prison all these years.
5. That the trial judge was either so prejudiced against the defendants or else so determined to win the applause of a certain class in the community that he could not and did not grant a fair trial.

In granting the pardon of these convicts, Governor Altgeld displayed, as the Chicago Mail expresses it, "an unwarranted feeling and questionable taste in making as he did a vindictive and even personal attack on the venerable Judge Gary. There is no instance before, we believe, where a pardon has been made the instrument of attack on an honored bench. It is a precedent which is not only not in keeping with the dignity of the office from which it came, but will tend to harmful ends."

The prisoners were pardoned upon the condition that they eschew, or relinquish, all revolutionary associates or plots, and it is said that they have become convinced that forcible measures are wrong, and will hereafter keep the peace. "So mote it be."

CATHOLICS IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The "fine hand of the Jesuit" is frequently making itself obnoxiously felt in our public schools, and, in some instances, finds itself pinched in the operation.

A female teacher in one of the Philadelphia city schools, following the instructions of the Board of Education to read the Bible daily to her class, substituted the "Douay" (or corrupt Roman Catholic) version for the authorized Protestant Scriptures, and refused to read any other. The board promptly dismissed her for insubordination, and informed the other teachers that they must read only the Bible furnished by the board.

At Oro, near Leadville, Colo., two of the school directors learned that Mr. Lynch, the teacher of the local public school, was attempting to force the children to Catholic prayers in the school-room each day, and Mr. Lynch was requested to resign. He refused to do so, and was upheld by the third member of the school board. One morning, upon going to the school-house, he found it tightly closed with large padlocks, and was informed that if he attempted to break in he would be placed under arrest. The case goes into the courts, where the teacher's bigoted insubordination will receive an airing.

REBELLIOUS STUDENTS—AGAIN.

In the Cynosure for June 15 was mentioned a serious rebellion of students, arising from the request of the faculty of the Terre Haute (Ind.) Normal School that Prof. Arnold Tompkins, of the chair of literature, should resign his position. This request met with general opposition from nearly all the 1,000 students in the institution, who rallied to his support. Then the board of trustees summarily removed the professor from the faculty.

After the board had removed him, a committee of fifteen students asked to be heard. They presented a petition signed by 400 students asking the board to give its reasons for what it had done. The students were flatly informed that their right to ask for this information was denied, and the board declared itself determined to adhere to its position should every student leave the school.

Last Thursday, June 29, the controversy between the board of trustees and the faculty on one side and the 1,000 students sustaining Professor Tompkins, the deposed professor, on the other was resumed. The excitement in the city was very great, pending the result.

At 4:30 P. M. the full board of trustees submitted a statement in the nature of an ultimatum to the entire graduating class of sixty-nine students, demanding that they return it signed before six o'clock that evening, disavowing, both individually and collectively, the recent attacks on the trustees and faculty in the matter of Professor Tompkins' removal. The entire class of men and women refused to sign the statement, and at once packed up their books and effects and left the building, not one of them remaining. The students who sympathize with the graduates did the same thing, and soon the building was emptied of all except the trustees and President Parsons. The greatest excitement prevailed. Many graduates and students crowded to the railroad offices and purchased tickets and started for their homes in various parts of the State on the first train. Eighty-four counties of Indiana are represented in the school.

In the evening there was an excited meeting of the alumni of the Normal School. The opponents of the trustees and faculty were out in force, determined to pass a resolution denouncing them and calling on the Governor to appoint a member of the alumni on the faculty. Such resolutions were, in fact, introduced, and fiery speeches were made. The graduating class was also present in force, which is unusual, but the alumni voted after a number of speeches that they should not be allowed to vote. Many of the alumni, while opposed to the school authorities, believed it unwise for the alumni to take a hand in the fight, and the resolutions were defeated. But immediately afterward the alumni showed its real sentiment and adopted a resolution appointing a committee to draft a law for submission at the next alumni meeting providing for one of the alumni to be appointed on the board of trustees by the Governor.

After consultation, the trustees, that evening, formally decided that there would be no commencement exercises on Friday, June 30, and issued the following declaration:

The trustees of the Indiana State Normal School have decided to have no public commencement exercises to-morrow. The law authorizes the board of trustees to grant from time to time certificates of proficiency and certificates of graduation to such students as shall have completed any of the prescribed courses of study, and whose moral character and discipline relations to the school shall be satisfactory. It is the duty of the trustees under the law to ascertain whether the disciplinary relations of the present senior class are such as to entitle them to be graduated. The Normal School is the State's training school for public school teachers, and no student should be permitted to leave with the highest indorsement of the institution who does not recognize fully by his or her words and conduct the lawful authority by which he or she is controlled. The board will spend such additional time to-morrow as may be necessary in investigating this subject. Any certificates or diplomas granted will be conferred without public exercises.

Later, the trustees re-elected the present faculty. Governor Matthews advised the members of the senior class to sign the statement prescribed by the board as a prerequisite to their receiving their certificates.

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON.

The baccalaureate sermon was preached before the graduating class and an audience that crowded the chapel last Sabbath morning. The discourse was by Rev. Prof. Curtis, of Chicago Theological Seminary, and was an able statement of the debt which the world owes to Christianity, together with an appeal to men to accept and proclaim it. The address to the class by the president followed the sermon.

In the evening a large audience gathered at the annual missionary meeting. Mr. Blackstone, of Oak Park, and Mr. Adams, of the Bible Institute, were expected, but Mr. Blackstone was detained by illness. Mr. Adams, being present, greatly interested his audience. He is one of the secretaries of the Volunteer Band movement.

On Tuesday evening the Conservatory of Music and the Art School gave their annual exhibition to a crowded house. The last year has been in these departments, as well as in others, one of unusual prosperity for the college, and the principals, Mrs. Nutting and Prof. Harris, must be well-satisfied with their work.

Wednesday morning the Board of Trustees met in the president's office. Mr. John T. Dale and Mr. J. L. Reber were re-elected, their terms having expired, and Mr. R. J. Bennett, of Ravenswood, and Mr. W. H. Holcomb, of Hinsdale, were elected to fill vacancies. Prof. D. C. Rice, of Sterling, was elected Professor of Instrumental Music and Director of the Conservatory. Prof. W. C. Coffin, of Chicago, was re-elected Professor of Vocal Music. Miss Maud Whipple was made stenographer and instructor in English, and the officers of the board were elected. The reports of the Executive Committee, of the Treasurer, Financial Agent and President were made, and showed a prosperous state of affairs in the institution. Members of the board from abroad were Messrs. C. H. Case, J. T. Dale, and E. A. Cook, of Chicago; Rev. Wm. Pinkney, of New Windsor; Rev. Albert Ethridge, of Marseilles; Mr. Roswell Dow, of Sycamore; Mr. Geo. B. Hopkins, of Peru, and Dr. L. N. Stratton, of Pecatonica.

In the afternoon twenty-eight students graduated from the preparatory school, eighteen of them presenting orations and essays. The chapel was again crowded and the exercises reflected great credit on Prof. Straw, the principal. These exercises over, the Alumni began to gather in the parlors, and about six o'clock they sat down to a bountiful repast in the college hall. The number present was greater than usual, and all seemed glad to gather in the old familiar places once more.

The literary exercises in the chapel, at eight o'clock, again called out a full house. The addresses were by Rev. E. R. Worrell, of Chicago, on "Anglo-Israelism;" Dr. Frances R. Carothers, of Des Moines, on "The Kingdom's Need;" Rev. W. L. Ferries, of Cherokee, Iowa, "A Welcome to '93," and Mr. Herbert Schriver, "A Response from '93." After the program, the business meeting was held by the Alumni Association in the college parlors.

On Thursday, at ten o'clock, the Commencement exercises of the college were held. Sixteen young men and women graduated, this being the largest class ever sent out by the college. Six of the ten young men hope to engage in Gospel work.

A SECRET SOCIETY REBUKED.

At Mount Airy, Pennsylvania, last month, Rev. G. P. Mueller, superintendent of the Lutheran Orphans' Home and Asylum, while attending the funeral of Jacob Fisher, an aged inmate of the Home and also a member of an Odd-fellows' lodge, created a remarkable sensation.

Representatives of the lodge were present at the services, in regalia, and were requested by Supt. Mueller to remove their insignia when they entered the Asylum grounds, because, as a secret order, their gewgaws were offensive. The men reluctantly complied with the demand, not wishing to create a scene. When the church services had been concluded at the grave in St. Michael's Lutheran cemetery, Main and Church streets, by Rev. Mr. Mueller, the chaplain of Liberty Lodge attempted to conduct the service, but was, it is said, interrupted by Rev. Mr. Mueller, who ordered him to discontinue, as it was against the doctrines of the church to allow secret societies to take part in the services.

Every lodge of the order in the country is interested in this case, as it will be taken to the Lutheran Synod, when it meets again, for final settlement. Other secret societies are also interested in the matter, and will watch with interest the outcome of the affair. So will others.

be used in exalting Christ and pulling down the strongholds of error and superstition.

Last Tuesday evening I spoke for over an hour to an audience of some seventy-five in the Free Swedish Mission Church, on Oak street, in this city. The closest attention was given. Several questions were asked which indicated a live interest. The collection showed a willingness to help.

As I much desire to visit Byron, Ill., with my father, Brother E. R. Worrell has kindly consented to fill an appointment made for me in the Lake View Swedish Mission Church.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Intellectual Bondage.—Some Lodge Items.—Smoking on the Electrics.—Other Matters.—Sunday Bicycling.

"Have you read the last new book?" "No." Then accusing looks fall on you like stripes on a slave's back; and you sneak away from your friends to get the last wretched book, and so atone for your insult to that inexorable monster, "the last new book."

The above is from Dr. Ecob's Commencement address, delivered before the young ladies of the Dana Hall School, a preparatory adjunct to Wellesley. It struck me as a very pertinent thrust at the sham culture which ignores all the old standbys in literature, and, like the Athenians, spends all its time, if not exactly hearing and telling some new thing, at least reading and talking over the last ephemeral production which has fallen from the press. Everybody remembers when "Robert Elsmere" was the one topic of talk in all circles with the smallest pretensions to be literary; and also, if his experience was at all like the writer's, what dreary rubbish had to be waded through before he could answer in the affirmative, and redeem himself from the charge of lagging hopelessly behind in the march of "culture." Let us deliver ourselves from this kind of intellectual bondage. The last new book will keep; and, if it is worth anything at all, if it contains the real wine of thought, be all the better for keeping. "Every object in this world must be to us a thought of God; every process in human life a purpose of the Heavenly Father," is another suggestive thought from the same address. How it would glorify all our lives could our spiritual eyesight be thus anointed to see the full grandeur involved in the very fact of our simple existence; in being not only ourselves a part of God's great plan, but allowed to have an intelligent interest therein. Let us, by all means, discern between true and false culture, between the genuine coin which bears his image and superscription and the counterfeit which has only man's.

The secret society papers report that "the new ritual of the Pilgrim Fathers went into effect June 1st." Imagine one of the real Pilgrim Fathers come back to earth to see what his degenerate descendants are doing, and pondering over such an item, "the new ritual," when they hated ritualism, and made their homes in a wilderness, foregoing every luxury and comfort, to get rid of everything that savored of it. Well for the peace of mind of our imaginary ghost if he seek not to probe the matter further, but gracefully "vanishes into thin air," and leaves the mystery unsolved! Mason and Odd-fellow "homes"—so called—by the restrictions they impose on those who would become inmates, are doing much to open the eyes of the public to the "charity" of such institutions. This is what one Masonic Orphans' Home, not far away, requires of one who would be admitted to its privileges: That she be "an orphan whose father was a member of a lodge in this jurisdiction, and in good standing at the time of his death, in destitute circumstances, and without relatives and friends willing and able to contribute towards his or her support, of good character and disposition, free from any chronic disease—either physical or mental." Verily the lodge strains its benevolence to such a degree that there is nothing left of it. There is not a Christian church in the length and breadth of the land, there is not a philanthropic association that would not be ashamed of charity so discriminating.

The campaign against the smoking nuisance on board the summer-electric cars has stirred up the smokers to a vigorous protest. As usual, they have much to say about their own "rights," but do not seem to consider that the non-smokers have rights also. Many invalids and tired workers take their only airing on the open cars. Why should they be poisoned and nauseated to suit the selfish convenience of the minority who want to smoke? The West End Company can provide the latter with special cars, as the railroads do, with the same privilege of making them too filthy for even a hog of respectable antecedents to enter.

Last Sabbath the parish rooms of St. Paul's Episcopal church witnessed a religious ceremony never before performed in Boston—the celebration of mass by a priest of the Greek orthodox church. It is said to be very similar to the "High Church" Episcopal service. At the same time, within sight of the gilded dome, the Czar's war-ships, Dimitri, Donshoi, and Lynda, are anchored in the harbor to do honor to the memory of Admiral Farragut. The former of these vessels, by the way, is the subject of a law-suit entered by his Imperial Majesty, the Czar of all the Russias, to recover $8,000 damage for injuries received thereto by some passing tug-boats while anchored in the North River. What would Ivan the Terrible, or even Peter the Great, have thought of settling such a thing in a court of law, and with two humble, private individuals? Certainly, if anybody has a right to sigh for the good old times, it is royalty, considering how democratic and republican ideas have changed the face of the world, since the time when crowned heads made and executed the law to suit their own notions of justice and fair-play.

The Boston Museum, fifty years ago, was an object of much awe and wonder to the rising generation, for within its portals huge stuffed birds and beasts, crocodiles and pythons held court together; and last, but not least, mummies from old Egypt impressed the childish mind with a sense of pleasing terror, as if they were so many poor, harmless ghosts from the shadowy Nile, the land of Moses and Pharaoh. People of adult years, who found it such a source of amusement and instruction, can hardly think of those dusty and venerable relics passing through the tribulation of "moving time," but it is even so. The wave of progress has struck the old Museum, and it is to be remodeled throughout, all its antiquarian treasures being transferred to the Natural History rooms. Speaking of mummies, reminds one that fashion is not superstitious. The mummy-cloth manufactured now, which looks so nice and cool, is imitated from the fabrics found in ancient Egyptian sepulchres. And so it goes on. The ideas of the past live again—even in the garments we wear; only when we come to think of it, it seems a little gruesome.

Rev. Dr. Plumb, in last Saturday's Transcript, has a very able article on the question of Sunday closing of the World's Fair. "When a company of young men," says the doctor in the course of his argument, "gather on Sunday morning in front of the Brunswick, to ride their bicycles to Newport, they are doing what they can to bring on the day when every merchant and clerk will have to go to business seven days in the week to earn six days' pay." Bicycling is being condemned in many quarters as giving an awkward and unnatural stoop to the rider. I have sometimes wondered if the abuse of this useful vehicle did not also tend to give a moral stoop that is far more objectionable. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG,

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, June 28, 1893.

The administration has the power to annul the objectionable features of the Geary Chinese Exclusion law, and many well-informed people are of the opinion that this power will soon be exercised. This can be done by the negotiation of a new treaty with China, which, when ratified by a two-thirds vote of the Senate, would have all the power of a statute of the United States and consequently would repeal such parts of the Geary and other acts as might conflict with the treaty. Nothing official has been said, or is likely to be said, about this matter at the Department of State, but it is known at the Chinese legation that the new Chinese minister is expected to arrive in Washington about the last of July, and there are reasonable grounds for the belief that he has been instructed to propose the negotiating of a new treaty. If he does, it is extremely probable that he will find the administration favorably disposed.

Impressive religious services are frequent in Washington, but few have been more so than the memorial service in honor of the late Senator Stanford, of California, held in the Metropolitan Church, Sunday. The pew occupied for many years by the Stanford family was heavily draped in black cloth, over which were scattered sprays of fern and honeysuckle. The service was opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Dalby, and the sermon was preached by Bishop Hurst from a double text—Proverbs 22: 29, and First Corinthians 12: 8-13. Space forbids a reproduction of the entire sermon, but the aptness and truthfulness of it were so apparent here, where Senator Stanford was so well-known and so highly appreciated as a man and a Christian, that I quote some of its most striking sentences that your readers who were unacquainted with Senator Stanford may know what manner of man the world has lost: "There was none more reverent than he, none more glad to hear the Gospel, or to whom the Word came with deeper sympathy, for he was fond of speaking at home of the Word he heard at church. Unlike many public men, when he left his constituency and the State he represented for his official sojourn at the capital he did not leave his religion behind him, but brought it to Washington, where it constituted the controlling influence of his domestic and public life. The deeply religious life of Senator Stanford was plain to all who came in contact with him. He made no effort to speak of religion, but spoke of it as though it was his usual thought. The two sole articles in his creed were God's goodness toward men and man's charity towards his brother. It was not simply a general providence that he considered God exercised towards his children, but a particular providence that guides the individual footsteps of the children of God. He used to speak of God's special interest in every child of God. There was no pessimism in Senator Stanford. He had always faith in the progress of the world towards lofty ideas and higher achievements. The calamities and disappointments happening to both individuals and nations he was accustomed to think of as incidents for disciplinary purposes. He considered himself as a steward, and so never thought that his giving was other than a pleasure and duty. He pronounced the day on which he transferred his great wealth to the trustees of the University that bears his name as the happiest of his life. When his only son died, he fell asleep by his side and dreamed that his boy was alive and well, talking over his plans, and that he said to him, 'Father, I wish you would do something for other boys.' He awoke, and afterward said that then, when he saw that his son was gone from him, had he had it in his power to have him back again in life by uttering a single prayer he would not have offered it, adding that what had happened could not have been without God's will, and to have asked for his return would have been to ask for what was not God's will." Who can doubt that in that dream God spoke to that man through the medium of his dead son. That dream was the first step towards the building of the Leland Stanford University, already one of the great educational institutions of the world. One feels that the singing of the hymn "He Giveth His Beloved Sleep" naturally followed a sermon on such a rare character, as it actually did. *

THE HOME.

A WORKER'S PRAYER.

Lord, speak to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of thy tone;
As thou hast sought, so let me seek Thy erring children, lost and lone.

O lead me, Lord, that I may lead
The wandering and the wavering feet;
O feed me, Lord, that I may feed
The hungering ones with manna sweet.

O strengthen me, that while I stand
Firm on the Rock and strong in thee,
I may stretch out a loving hand
To wrestlers with the troubled sea.

O teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious thing thou dost impart;
And wing my words, that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

O give thine own sweet rest to me,
That I may speak with soothing power
A word in season, as from thee,
To weary ones in needful hour.

O fill me with thy fullness, Lord,
Until my weary heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word,
Thy love to tell, thy praise to show.

O use me, Lord, use even me,
Just as thou wilt, and when, and where;
Until thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, thy joy, thy glory share.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

FREEMASONRY—WHAT IS IT?

(Concluded.)

Mother and I had kept house alone in ——— for eleven years; but just one year after the event above mentioned we broke up housekeeping. I went to live with an invalid sister; and my only brother, who, by the way, is an Odd-fellow, took my mother to live with him. She had been with him but a short time when I learned that they did not allow her to use any of those drugs to which she had been so long accustomed, and that her mind was failing rapidly.

That was three years ago, and her mind is almost entirely gone, and she is nearly as helpless as a little child. What were their feelings when they learned the truth? I do not know, for they have never mentioned the subject to me from that day to this. Perhaps I am mistaken; but I am convinced in my own mind that if mother had been allowed the use of this medicine her faculties would have remained good while she lived. She was a strong-minded woman, but very nervous and high-strung, and her mind, at the time this affair took place, was good, and all her faculties as clear as ever.

How fared it with my calumniators? "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." My brother-in-law failed in business and he moved back to his Southern home; more than this, nearly everybody blamed him, and he lost many friends. Did I lose friends? No. Why? Because the spirit they showed toward me was such that people knew that they were trying to injure me. "What a spirit they show towards that poor, unfortunate child!" people would say. "How bitter they are against her! but we will not believe them. She never harmed them, and why do they persecute her so?" People saw that they were trying to injure me; and I am now convinced that people believed in and sympathized with me the more because I remained silent. I knew the truth would be known at some distant day, and I could afford to be silent and let events shape themselves.

This, reader, is my story. As I look back upon those dreadful days and recall what I suffered, do you wonder that I abhor and despise secretism in every form? It is dangerous. It has the stamp of Satan. God never sanctified it or blessed it. It does its work in the dark. Like the Italian banditti, with deadly stiletto in hand, it creeps up behind its victim, deals its death-blow, and then steals away in the darkness, leaving its victim to die alone.

But the eternal years of God are ours, and right shall triumph over wrong. During those dreadful days when I knew that scandal was busy with my name, I felt that a higher Power was over me and that his everlasting arms were underneath and around me. "Fear not, for the Lord thy God shall hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not, I will help thee." He did not let me sink. To him be all the praise! Satan's power in this world is very strong; but the secret empire, though it bears the image and superscription of the beast, will be crushed and annihilated when God cometh in his glory to make up his jewels.

CONVERSION OF AN ATHEIST.

I remember a striking instance of the power of God in the conversion of an avowed atheist. He came to the meeting to hear me preach on atheism. In the course of my sermon I remarked that atheism was the little end of nothing whittled to a point. Since the atheist denied everything and admitted nothing, it was itself the little end of nothing. This remark arrested his attention and mortified his pride. He had regarded himself as specially intellectual and capable of refuting all the ministers in the land. He could not brook the thought that he, a free-thinker, should be represented as a fool, and his creed reduced to less than nothing. So, in order to be revenged, he requested a Christian neighbor to ask prayers for the little end of nothing. The request was complied with; nor was it overlooked amid the multiplicity of claims upon our prayers.

On the evening of the third day, as we repaired to the lecture room for the purpose of spending a season in prayer, who should rise up but this infidel? Pale and haggard, not having slept for three nights, and borne down by deep despair, he broke the silence of the spell-bound congregation by saying, "My fellow-citizens, you see before you the greatest sinner that God ever suffered to live. I have denied the existence of my Creator. I have ridiculed his Son, Jesus Christ, calling him a bastard. I have studied the Word of God in order to pick flaws and make out contradictions. I have cursed my Maker more times than there are hairs on my head; and as for you Christians, there has been nothing too bad for me to say about you; and all I ask in return is that you will not treat me as I have treated you." He took his seat. I said to him, "My dear sir, do you wish the prayers of God's people?" He answered, "No; prayers can do me no good; I must be lost." I told him, "God is merciful; Jesus died to save the chiefest of sinners." He replied, "I know that; and this knowledge will be the keenest part of my sufferings. I have sinned against infinite goodness and unparalleled mercy. I deserve to be damned, and I must be damned. All directions to Christ as a Saviour avail nothing. I have not made the first attempt at prayer, under the full conviction that prayer will do no good."

He passed another sleepless night, walking his floor and contemplating his fearful doom. To him it was a night of terrors. But just as the grey of the morning began to dawn, some mysterious agency whispered in his ear, "Whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely." For the first time in his life he dropped on his knees and pleaded for mercy through Jesus Christ. In a few moments his load was gone, and his soul felt the peace of believing, and unspeakable joy beamed in his face.—Jacob Knapp.

TERRIBLE WASTE OF TIME.

A daily paper lately published an account of a certain quartette of card players who had met regularly every Saturday evening for sixteen years, and in that time had played 19,650 games of euchre. The reporter, after the fashion of his kind, tried to spin the story out to half a column, but that was all there was to it. He could give the names and the ages of the players, but when he tried to form a biography of each he made poor work of it. In fact, men who could pursue steadily for sixteen years the most trivial and puerile of all games of chance, could not have capacity for much else. Straws, we are told, tickle a child; but they do not amuse a full-grown and well-developed man. It would be hard to invent a game which would have less for the mind to lay hold of, unless it be the rolling of dice out of a box to see what they will count. Intellectually it is about on a par with blowing soap bubbles, but as a trial of skill it does not compare with a boy's game of marbles. There is not a roustabout on the levee who cannot learn it, although he may have failed to master the alphabet. And yet it seems there are men who can make it a boast that for half of an ordinary lifetime they have given one-sixth of their week-nights to tossing out and in the cards which go to make up a game of euchre.

It was a sorrowful confession of Saul, as he thought of his loss of a crown, which he expressed in the bitter words, "I have played the fool." It may be bad enough for any rational creature to fool away the opportunities of a lifetime, but for a king to play the fool is the worst of all. What might be excusable in Robinson Crusoe, would hardly be forgivable in the Czar of Russia; and we could excuse in a cowboy, all day alone upon the prairie, what we could not overlook in a Senator. It would seem that a man must occupy a pretty low plane in this busy, work-a-day world of ours, to have time to play 19,650 games of euchre, and still keep at it. But perhaps those who habitually amuse themselves with the card-table may little realize how much of life is frittered away in an amusement that is as devoid of intellectual stimulus as a prisoner's "marking time."

I asked a bright young man who stood high as a court reporter, how long it had taken him to acquire the dexterity necessary for his lucrative employment, and it was far less than the number of hours required for 19,650 games of euchre. I reckoned up how long it would take to read the standard historians, best novelists and leading essayists in the English language, and I found it could be done in half the time idled away by these four men over a childish game. I tried to remember some church in which there were four leaders of whom it might be said that for sixteen years not one had missed an appointment at the prayer-meeting, except for serious illness, and I failed to recall the church. Yet what a tower of strength buttressing the labors of a pastor such a quartette would be. What a pity it seems that such fidelity and promptitude and assiduity should be given to what in the end is—nothing.

At the time of one's death and funeral the friends of the deceased are fond of relating all in a man's life that was worthy of remembrance, but I do not recall an instance in which the mourners have reminded the preacher of the number of games of cards the dead had played. Somehow after a man has got through with his life it does not appear to add much to his fame that he has played 19,650 games of euchre. Who ever saw a card used as decoration for a coffin, or a pack of them in bas-relief upon a tombstone? Apart from all uses for gambling and all abuses in low resorts, it is probable that the devil never invented a device so calculated to dwarf the intellectual development of the race as a game which is a substitute for, rather than a stimulus to, mental action.—A Pastor, in N. Y. Observer.

THE GIRL AT THE FOOT.

"Miss Grafton! Oh, Miss Grafton! Lou Williams has come back." This was the cry which greeted the teacher as she entered the class-room one bright morning.

Miss Grafton smiled at the eager faces, and stopped to kiss a little girl who was pushed forward by her young friends. The girl had shy brown eyes, wavy brown hair, which had been cut short during her long illness, and roguish dimples in her thin cheeks. She had been away from school for six weeks, and everybody was glad to see her again. All the girls were mourning over the loss of her pretty hair, except Kitty Lawrence, who said it was prettier than ever, and she was going to have her own cut short, just like Lou's. While they were talking the bell rang.

"Now, dear, you will have a new experience," said Miss Grafton kindly. "You have never tried the back row."

Lou smiled, but there was a queer lump in her throat as she took her seat at the foot of the class.

It was the first time she had ever been behind the first row. It seemed very lonely back there. All her former companions were quite out of reach; and though some of them looked back at her now and then at first, by-and-by they gave it up, and appeared to have forgotten her.

The girls near the foot were very different. They whispered, passed notes, and prompted each other constantly. They prompted Lou, too, much to her discomfort; and she found it difficult to pay attention to the recitations with such an uneasy rustling around her. Before the first hour was over poor Lou felt quite unhappy. When May Whitney asked her a question she blushed and shook her head, to signify that she would not break the rules by speaking, whereupon May tossed her curls and said spitefully, "Oh, you sweet little angel!" Then Lou had hard work to keep from crying.

She thought it was very hard to be good at the foot of the class. She wondered how long it would be before she could get away from these disorderly girls.

"If I have to stay here two or three weeks, or even longer," she said to herself, "how shall I ever bear it? I'm afraid I shall forget some time and do something wrong. I wish Miss Grafton would let me sit on a chair in the corner; but maybe that would look like favoritism. Perhaps mamma would say I ought to be strong enough to be good even among these girls, like the apostles and martyrs."

Just then the bell rang for recess, and Lou's friends came to take her down stairs; and twenty minutes was not long enough for them to tell her of all that had happened at school while she was away, and how they had missed her, and to explain why Dolly Brown's father had taken her to Europe.

After recess came an exercise which the girls called "going up and down". Miss Grafton had been reading ancient history to the class during the closing hours on Fridays, and she occasionally examined them on what she had read. These examinations were not recorded in the roll-book, but those who answered questions correctly "skipped" above those who failed; so that this exercise frequently caused important changes in the positions of the scholars. Lou usually enjoyed such examinations very much, and answered questions very readily; but as she had been so long absent, she had no hope of any success. A few attempts, partly happy guesses, partly dim recollections of something she had heard her father reading at home, helped her over three or four rounds, and brought her above half-a-dozen scholars, though she was still on the back row.

"Next! next!" said Miss Grafton. The question was passed rapidly down the line.

"How funny!" thought Lou; "surely they know who captured Babylon! Why, it's in the Bible!"

Two or three hands were raised.

"Well, Julia?"

"Nebuchadnezzar."

There was a laugh.

"No. Next! next!"

It was coming down the next line.

Lou's hand was up.

"Next! next! Well, Lou, who was it?"

"Cyrus of Persia."

"Correct! You may go up. Where did the question begin?"

More than half the class was moving down, and Lou took a seat beside Kitty Lawrence, who squeezed her hand delightedly.

"I knew she wouldn't stay down there long, Miss Grafton," said Lena Snow. She could not speak to Lou, so she said it to the teacher.

Then the questioning began again at the head.

"How did they enter the city?"

Marion, the head girl, started, flushed, hesitated, and, finally, sat down with tearful eyes. Mabel, the second, looked up in consternation, exclaimed, "Oh, Miss Grafton!" and gave up without an effort.

"Next! next!"

Lena Snow hazarded a guess.

"They broke open the gates."

"No; next!"

It ran down the first line—down the second—that relentless "Next! next! next!" Nobody was quite sure how far it had gone.

Minnie Venn sprang up after she had been passed, and gasped out: "Oh, I know!" and sank into her seat again. It was doubtful if even Miss Grafton knew who was "next".

Lou held up her hand, for fear she would be passed. Her heart beat very fast. At last her turn came.

"They turned the Euphrates into another bed, and passed over the old bed to the gates, and then a traitor inside opened the gates."

"Right! You may go up."

Lou rose, blushing very much, and took her place.

The girls clapped. They couldn't help it. The girl at the foot had become the girl at the head!—N. Y. Independent.

THE SIN-BEARER.

Thy works, not mine, O Christ,
Speak gladness to this heart;
They tell me all is done,
They bid my fear depart.

Thy wounds, not mine, O Christ,
Can heal my bruised soul;
Thy stripes, not mine, contain
The balm that makes me whole.

Thy cross, not mine, O Christ,
Has borne the awful load
Of sins that none in heaven
Or earth could bear but God.

Thy righteousness, O Christ,
Alone can cover me;
No righteousness avails
Save that which is of thee.

Thy righteousness alone
Can clothe and beautify;
I wrap it around my soul;
In this I'll live and die.

TEMPERANCE.

DRINK AND CRIME.

[Condensed for the Literary Digest from a paper in the Fortnightly Review, London, June.]

It is quite natural that brewers, gin-distillers, publicans, and all who have a direct pecuniary interest in the drink traffic are in a state of violent alarm at the proposal of the Local Veto bill. Nearly two thousand years ago the sellers of silver shrines of Diana, headed by Demetrius, the silversmith, seeing that their craft was in danger, assembled a meeting, and, becoming full of rage, rushed in a body into the theatre and unanimously joined for about two hours in the shout: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" Similarly Lord Burton and the publicans filled St. James' Hall for about the same time with their indignant cries of "Great is the liquor trade!"

I am expressly invited to make some remarks on Mr. Walker's paper in the last number of this Review; and as that gentleman is bold enough to challenge the entire temperance position, it is my duty not to refuse the proofs which the publicans seem so eager to obtain.

Supporters of the drink trade invariably speak with bitter anger of all temperance reformers. All the organs of the trade denounce this form of effort to ameliorate the condition of the people as never anything better than a fanaticism and a fad. To such newspapers and their supporters the old threadbare and silly epigram that "Temperance reformers use such intemperate language," is a perfect Godsend. At all banquets of licensed victuallers this very fresh and original remark, with a few others equally threadbare and irrelevant, together with the utterly immoral nonsense about preferring England free to England sober and "robbing the poor man of his beer," abundantly supply the lack both of thought and of argument. I shall not knock on the head once more these brainless puppets of empty phraseology. Granted that denunciations of the drink traffic are sometimes urged with warmth, by far the most overwhelming language has been used by men who were not total abstainers, and not, in the commonly-understood sense, temperance reformers at all. Sir Wilfrid Lawson has spoken plainly of the evils which result from the drink traffic, but he has never gone so far as to call it "devilish and destructive". Those were the words of Lord Randolph Churchill. Mr. Bright, in late years, was much lauded by the trade, yet he spoke of drink as "pernicious" and a "mischievous article of consumption"; as "the great obstacle in the path of progress"; as that which "darkens so many houses with sorrow and despair." "The moral force of the masses," said Cobden, "lies in the temperance movement. . . . We do not sufficiently estimate the amount of vice, crime, poverty, ignorance, and destitution which spring up from the drinking habits of the people." Mr. Chamberlain is at this moment at the zenith of popularity with the drink-sellers because of his speech at Birmingham, yet even Mr. Chamberlain has said:

"Drink is the curse of the country. It ruins the fortunes, it injures the health, it destroys the lives of one in twenty of our population, and anything which can be done to diminish this terrible sacrifice of human life and human happiness is well worthy of all the attention and study we can give it."

[The writer further strengthens this branch of his case by quotations from Mr. Gladstone, Lord Cairns, Charles Buxton (a brewer), who said "The struggle of the church, the school, and the library against the gin-palace and the beer-shop is but one development of the war between heaven and hell!" and that "Drunkenness is the most dreadful of all the manifold and frightful evils which afflict the British Isles"; and from Shakespeare, Lord Chesterfield, Dr. Chalmers, Ruskin, Carlyle, and Mr. James, president of the Plymouth and Davenport Liquor Protection Association.]

Now, though I quote these opinions, and though I endorse and agree with their contention that the liquor traffic as now existing among us is an immeasurable curse to the country and the world, I have never myself used one unkind or intentionally irritating word against the publicans. On the contrary, I pity them with a sincere pity. Their business saps their health to such an extent that scarcely an insurance office will take them at all. It is notorious from statistical tables that they are the shortest-lived of all classes, so that to each publican it may be said—

"The grave doth gape
For thee thrice wider than for other men."

They are liable to exceptional temptations, to which many of them succumb. Many of them and most of their employes detest their own trade. They cannot become quite callous to the brutal words they hear and the brutal sights they see. Mr. James describes "the large majority of them" as under "the slavish thralldom of the wholesale monopolists".

Publicans are not so utterly blind as to believe that there is nothing more than what Mr. Walker calls a "coincidental relationship between drink and crime". The fewer we have of a class so burdened, so tempted, and so oppressed, engaged in a trade so deleterious to health and to morals, the better, not only for England, but for themselves. The infinitely deplorable conditions of their business would make many men prefer to break stones or pick oakum than to live on money so often wet with the tears of women and red with the blood of men. To maintain that they have an abstract right to sell drink when the public votes by huge majorities to emancipate itself from the curses which follow the drink they sell, is to argue that the public only exists for the sake of the publicans; it is to "pity the plumage, and forget the dying bird".

Mr. Walker calls the preamble to Sir W. Lawson's Local Veto bill "a monstrously unjust declaration," and compares Sir W. Harcourt's method to the summary method of Judge Lynch; and he further declares that he can rebut any evidence brought to show the evils of the traffic, and prove a great deal of it to be perjured evidence.

Such assertions leave me breathless with astonishment. Do the publicans really think that all the world, from the highest to the lowest, is enlisted in one nefarious conspiracy to slander their trade?

[The writer here quotes the Synod of Roman Catholic bishops at Baltimore, 1891, who wrote to the Pope that intemperance is "a perpetual incentive to sin, and a fearful root of all evil, plunging the families of the intemperate into direct ruin, and dragging numberless souls down to everlasting perdition." He quotes Cardinal Manning's report to the Pope in 1878, to the effect that drunkenness "causes every year in England 60,000 deaths; that, according to the testimony of the magistrates, it is the source, directly or indirectly, of 75 per cent of the crimes committed." He also quotes the Earl of Shaftesbury, Chief-Justice Coleridge, Justices Fry, Donnan, Miller, Fitzgerald, Hayes, George, Hawkins, Lord-Justice Whiteside, Judge Pattison, Chief-Justice Bovill, Baron Martin, Baron Keating, Baron Douse, and Lord Bramwell, all to the effect that drink is the chief cause of suffering and crime. To this he adds specific evidence that the drink habit ruins the health, and is the cause of 48 per cent of the idiocy in England.]

Is all this awful evidence perjured? Are the records of every-day justice falsified to spite the publicans? And do these facts show only a "coincidental relationship" between drink and crime? Such a statement may deceive the ignorant. It seems absolute effrontery to those whose duties daily prove the truth, which judges have so often stated, that but for drink we might at once close half our jails.

Mr. Walker asks for "a scintilla of evidence" to prove the connection between drink and crime. I have given him not only a scintilla, but a lurid blaze of evidence, hot enough and frightful enough to make of the houses of the publicans a perfect Borgo del Incendio. And there is any amount more for them if they like to have it.—The Venerable Archdeacon Farrar.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Ignorant worship.—vs. 22, 23. Athens was not an objective point for missionary labor. It was only a stopping-place for Paul, where he waited for his companions to join him before proceeding on his journey. Yet we notice (1) that Paul improved his waiting time, and began at once to do missionary work. The busiest life has its waiting times which, rightly improved, might bring forth wonderful results. We may not be able to preach like Paul, but we can put literature in our pockets for distribution; we can speak a word in season; and in various ways the moments when we are waiting, perhaps for a train in some strange place, can be utilized. (2) His spirit was stirred within him to see the universal idolatry. If it does not now stir up Christian men and women to see our towns and cities given up to lodge idolatry, it is because they have not that spirit of holy jealousy for God's honor that was in Paul. The Athenians regarded him as a harmless fanatic, who was trying to establish a new religion; but we note that his address not only opened with the usual courteous form, "Ye men of Athens," but with a compliment, for the fact that they were very religious was in itself a tribute to their high intellectual superiority. We lose nothing, but we gain a great deal, when presenting a cause, by the use of wise tact. Men can be very religious, but have no Christianity. They may make a great deal of mere forms and creeds; and they may, like these Athenians, worship an unknown God. What the world needs now, and always has needed, is a fuller knowledge of its Creator. This is why Jesus Christ was sent into the world, that by knowing him we may learn to know the Father also.

2. The Fatherhood of God.—vs. 24-28. There can be no true worship without intelligent knowledge. The first point made by Paul is that God is a spiritual being who, as the Creator of all things, needs nothing at the hands of man. Many people attend church, and go through the forms of prayer as if they were in some way benefiting the Lord. It is true that he requires of us the performance of our religious duties, but it is for the sake of the influence on ourselves and others, and not because he is impoverished or enriched, whether we give or withhold. Men worship God ignorantly when they draw the color line, and forget what even an old heathen poet declared, that we are all his offspring. "Having determined their appointed seasons," which is the reading in the Revised Version, i. e., their times of national prosperity or adversity. "And the bounds of their habitation." Climate and natural environments largely determine a nation's position. God made the polished Greeks to differ from the barbarous Scythian, just as he now makes the Anglo-Saxon to differ from the Negro or the Indian. If we all "live, move and have our being" in him, how absurd and wicked to despise a man because of his color! Paul's third point is the folly of thinking that man's Creator can be imaged forth to the senses under a human form "graven by art and man's device". Even the more intelligent among the heathen saw the absurdity of idol worship. Anything which gives a base and degrading idea of God has in it the idolatrous principle. Men can worship a false god, yet not have idols, as in the case of the aborigines and some heathen tribes. The Masonic idea of God as the Great Architect of the Universe, thus presenting him under a mere human image, has in it the essence of idol worship. It gives him the creature's instead of the Creator's place.

3. God revealed in Christ.—vs. 30, 31. The times of this ignorance God winked at, or overlooked. The heathen could not believe in Christ before he came. They were in the semi-twilight of natural religion; but when the sun of revelation dawned they were without excuse. The very light itself was a call to repentance. If a traveler finds that in the dim, uncertain twilight he has taken a wrong turn, the first rays of the morning sun is a summons to change his course, and turn back, which is the original meaning of the word "repent". This is a wonderful gleam of promise, showing that God has depths of mercy even for the heathen world who have never heard of Christ. But it does not absolve us from earnest work in their behalf. Even if there is salvation for the heathen who follow the light of conscience, they must miss the abundant entrance, that prize of the high calling which is in Christ Jesus. Paul's sermon ends abruptly. The doctrine of repentance is not relished by the natural heart, and especially would it be spurned by these polished Athenians. Yet there were a few hearts that received the truth. God did not leave himself or his faithful servant without a witness. Let us not be discouraged even where there seems to be no ground to hope for great results. Let us labor on and leave results with him. Paul's last and crowning argument hinged on a coming judgment and a coming resurrection, assured to us by the risen Christ who will judge the world in righteousness. Then every false system will be overthrown, and they who stand firm for the truth amid the scorn of an unbelieving world will receive the reward of the faithful servant.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BIBLE WORK.

—The report of the Foreign and British Bible Society is published, showing that the issues for the past year had been 4,049,756, an increase over the circulation of the previous year of 60,541. The total issues since the formation of the society have been 135,894,552 copies. The sale of Scriptures had amounted to $499,165, an increase over the previous year of $14,805; the free contributions had reached the sum of $687,725. The deficits, which had amounted to $335,000, had been reduced to $200,000.

EVANGELISTIC.

—Mr. Moody's summer meetings in Chicago are proving remarkably successful, the results being proportionately as large as in his great tabernacle meetings many years ago. The meetings held by Rev. John McNeill and Rev. Thomas Spurgeon as well as those by Mr. Moody, held throughout the week, have been crowded and the conversions have been constant. Mr. Moody twice preached to thousands in the great Forepaugh circus tent. During the coming month Dr. Gordon of Boston and Dr. Brooks of St. Louis are to be added to the force.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Rev. Mr. Luke, who was recently appointed presiding elder by Bishop Thoburn, is a man of great influence among his people in India. His salary is about $15 per month; he has a fine family; is well educated, has a good knowledge of the English language, and is a most successful preacher of the Gospel.

—Bishop Merrill says: "The souvenir coins issued by the World's Fair bear the taint of a violated contract, and hence become a badge of broken faith with the American people."

—Rev. R. J. Cooke, D. D., of Athens, Tenn., the new president of U. S. Grant University, is a convert from Roman Catholicism. He is a popular teacher.

—The fifth General Conference District of the Epworth League, embracing the States of Ohio and Kentucky, met at Springfield, Ohio, recently. The convention represented 1,158 leagues, with a membership of 75,000 young people.

—Johnson street M. E. church, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been dissolved by action of the trustees. The property is valued at $20,000, and after the debts are paid the excess will go to the Brooklyn church society. The church was organized in 1839 as the "Centennial M. E. church."

—The Methodist Preachers' meeting has extended an invitation to the General Conference of 1896 to meet in Chicago.

PAGANISM AT HOME.

—Paganism was rampant on Midway Plaisance Sunday. The Mohammedans celebrated the birthday of "The Prophet" by offering sacrifices. Two lambs were killed, and the worshippers smeared the walls of the building with their blood, and performed horrible self-tortures by handling live coals of fire with their bare hands, even the women joining in the ceremony with apparent stolidity.

—The Census Bureau has issued a bulletin which shows that there are 47 Chinese temples in the United States valued at $62,000, claiming 100,000 worshippers. Forty of these temples are in California, four in New York, two in Idaho, and one in Oregon. Every Chinese temple is a house of prayer or worship, but no sermon is preached, no priest installed, no religious instruction given and no seating accommodations provided. There is always at least one shrine, the more frequented temples having several, so that a number of persons can perform the same ceremony, each for himself, without being obliged to take turns. The worshippers do not meet in a body, nor is any particular time set for devotions. The revenues are derived largely from the privilege, sold at auction to the highest bidder, of selling the articles of worship, which every worshiper must have.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Statistics published by the Independent of the Presbyterian church in England, show a membership of 66,971, an increase of 200. The number of congregations remain the same, 290. In the Sabbath-schools there are 7,334 teachers and 78,542 scholars. Nearly one-fourth of the membership are engaged in active Christian work in the Sabbath-school as district visitors, etc.

REFORMED CHURCH.

—A Chicago committee, under direction of the Commissioner General of the Netherlands, Geo. Birkhoff, Jr., 85 Washington street, Chicago, are preparing for the proper celebration of "Netherlands Day," August 31st, at the World's Columbian Fair. An appeal to all Netherlands in the United States appears in all the Dutch papers of this country,—about a dozen,—suggesting that local committees be appointed everywhere to secure a large attendance and a worthy program of exercises for the celebration of the birthday of the beloved little Queen Wilhelmina. Festival Hall will be at the service of the Hollanders that day, free of charge, and all the Sunday-schools of Holland churches in the vicinity of Chicago are kindly requested to celebrate their annual picnic at the Fair on that day, in connection with this festal program. It is confidently expected that many thousands from far and near will attend and grace this Orange day. A few reporters and visitors from the fatherland have already come, many more are looked for, who will enter into this arrangement with enthusiasm. Commissioner DeBruin of the Javanese exhibit and colony is heartily enlisted, and a "drawing card" of the day may be music by the Java band. All Dutch hands are to be invited; a few addresses, one in English, will be provided.

—The decision in favor of Sunday opening of the Exposition has obliged those interested in its success to abandon the project of Reformed headquarters in Chicago. It is with deep regret and keen disappointment that they came to this conclusion, but the very generous firm of Siegel, Cooper & Co. may assume all responsibility for some continuance of this office.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church appointed a committee to confer with the committee from our church in regard to a common version of the Psalms. The joint committee held a meeting in New Castle, Pa., June 5, and made plans for future work.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The First Synod of the West will hold another Chautauqua Synod this year at Conneaut Lake—a delightful place to spend a week or more. The time of the meeting this year will be August 8-15 inclusive.

—In the very deep interest that was manifested in the late Assembly at Monmouth in all the work of the church foreign missions had a warm place. The report of the foreign board showed that during the past year the total receipts amounted to $115,862.87, which with the balance in hand at the beginning of the year made a sum of $118,960.18 for the work. Nearly $10,000 of this was for the purchase of the new mission property in India.

—According to the estimate made by the missionaries in the fields, the Assembly appropriated $126,200 for this work during the ensuing year. Of this $20,000 are provided by individuals, churches, societies, and largely by the women's board, for the support of particular missionaries, male and female; and thus $106,500 are left to be raised.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—All sorts of reports have been prevalent in regard to Father Hyacinthe, some even affirming that he was intending to return to the Roman Catholic church; and, with that in view, was passing a preparatory retreat in the monastery of the Grande Chartreuse. As a matter of fact, Mr. Loyson is living quietly with his family at Neuilly. He frequently goes to the monastery as a tourist, but for no other purpose.—Independent.

—There are four Jewish American papers which favor holding synagogue services on Sunday. Upon this subject the Jewish Tidings says, "The other Jewish journals will soon fall into line, for they certainly cannot long oppose the inevitable. The sentiment of the majority of the Jews of America is unquestionably in favor of the introduction of Sunday services, and come they must."

—The Board of Foreign Missions reports 623 missionaries, and a total of 1,647 active agents of all grades, of whom 187 are ordained ministers. The conversions for the year were 3,452, an increase of 10 per cent over last year. The total receipts were $1,024,504, of which the women's societies contributed $329,889.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—"We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth."

Idem, 1886:—"The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous."

REV. MATTHEW L. R. PERRINE, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY:—"Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country."

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—"The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, 'Why did not they renounce it before?' For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding."

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesee M. E. Conference, 1860:—"This new element of discord (Odd-fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world."

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—"Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties."

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—"He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution."

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—"I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!"

HOME AND HEALTH.

ON TAKING FLUID WITH MEALS.

A great deal of misapprehension is often found to exist in the popular mind in regard to matters of eating and drinking; the cause of this, to some extent, is to be traced to old-time sayings which have come down to us in the form of a concentrated infusion of somebody's opinion upon a subject of which he or she was woefully ignorant. One of these misapprehensions to which we may refer is as to the injuriousness of taking fluid with meals. One frequently hears it laid down as a maxim that "it is bad to drink with your meals; it dilutes the gastric juice." By way of explanation, we may remark that it implies that the fluid taken is harmful. Whence this sagacious assumption originally came we cannot tell; it has quite the ring about it of an inconsequent deduction formed by a person whose presumption of knowledge was only exceeded by a lamentable ignorance of the subject. Medical men often find much difficulty in dealing with these museum specimens of antiquated science, for even educated persons are disposed to cling to the absurdities of their youth. Upon this matter Mr. Hutchinson remarks in the last number of his Archives:

"I observe with pleasure that the verdict of general experience and common sense has been confirmed by scientific experiment in the matter of taking fluid with meals. Dr. Tev. O. Stratievsky, of St. Petersburg, after elaborate trials, has found that fluids materially assist the assimilation of proteins, and announces the following conclusion, which is to be hoped no future experiments will controvert. On the whole, the widely-spread custom of taking fluids during or just before one's meals proves to be rational and fully justified on strict scientific grounds. To take fluids with the meals is almost as important an adjunct to digestion as is the mastication of solid food preparatory to swallowing it."

It is obvious, however, that there is a limit to the amount of fluid one can swallow with impunity—not to speak of comfort—just as much with meals as at other times. It would be dangerous to create a general impression that fluid is good with food irrespective of quantity. It is, moreover, a well-ascertained, clinical fact, that an excess of fluid at the table does retard digestion in certain people, and gives rise to discomfort in most. A little attention to one's sensations in such matters will far better fix the desirable limit than all the "data" in the world.—Medical Press.

PERFECT CREAM BISCUIT.

There have been several calls for recipes for food for invalids. For a long time a member of our family could not eat yeast-raised bread, and this biscuit invented then from necessity, has proved so palatable and wholesome, and so useful for the children, that it has come to be a stand-by. Four quarts of flour, one cup of white sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of soda, two tablespoonfuls of cream of tartar. Mix well and wet with pure cream, making only moist enough to roll; if too wet they will not be crisp. Roll rather thin, and cut in squares the size of soda crackers, and bake. We often use white flour and sifted graham, equal parts, and they closely resemble the graham wafers we buy. City folks can order them from their country friends, who have pure cream.—New York Recorder.

No fruit loses flavor from being carelessly handled more quickly than apples. Apples which have been well-stored retain their flavor throughout the winter, but those which have been allowed to lie about with decaying specimens or are stored loosely in barrels either lose their flavor or acquire a rank taste from the conditions around them.

Pillows, blankets and beds should hang in the sun all day, or for two days if possible, on frames which allow air to circulate freely under them. And they must be turned from time to time so that every part on the surface may get the sun. FARM NOTES.

YARDS FOR CHICKS.

When chicks are just placed in a brooder or under a hen some handy yard is wanted to confine them, and with this end in view I give a description of a panel used in our yards. This should be constructed of boards and pickets. Procure fence boards 6 inches wide and either 12 or 16 feet long, and saw lengthwise through the center; this will give two long strips 3 inches wide, to be used for the top and bottom frame. Next procure 3 pickets 4 feet long and nail one at each end and the other in the center, then attach braces at opposite corners. The pickets should be nailed so as to project 1 inch above the top of the frame and 11 inches below, these to be sharpened so as to be readily driven into the ground.

To complete the panel, the frame is covered with five-cent muslin stretched tightly over the frame and well tacked down with common tacks. A pen made from four of these will be 16 feet square and is room enough for 100 chicks for one or two weeks, when they can be allowed to roam where they please. We use these pens to place around the brooders, so as to prevent the young chicks straying too far from their home. These frames can be built for 25 cents, and will last several years with proper care.

The roost can be any desired length, neither too large nor small, suspended by staples and wired about ten inches above the floor of the pen, so arranged as not to swing. The roosts are easily kept free from lice, as there are no mortices to lay eggs in and thus escape fumigating. Also the roost can be easily detached, by unhooking, and removed from the building and cleaned. Kerosene oil should be applied to the roosts once every week; also they should be taken out and saturated with oil, and then set fire to; this will destroy all vermin.—Ohio Farmer.

BLOATING IN CATTLE.

When detected in the beginning, give every half hour half an ounce of aqua ammonia in a quart of cold water. When bloating has lasted over twelve hours, a different kind of gas is generated, and different remedies must be used, such as two drachms of chlorinated lime dissolved in a pint of cold water and repeated every hour. After a severe attack of bloating, always give a laxative dose of medicine, such as a pound and a half of Epsom salts dissolved in a quart of hot water, and to which solution add a pint of molasses and an ounce of ground ginger.

In urgent cases when medicine cannot soon be had, plunge a trocar into the left flank inward, downward and forward, in the direction of the right elbow, inserting it midway between the last rib and the hipbone, and about eight inches from the bones of the loin. When away out in the field and no trocar is obtainable, a long-bladed penknife may be used, putting it in to the handle, and holding it in this position so long as gas escapes. But the knife is not a safe instrument, as particles of food are apt to pass into the abdominal cavity, where it may cause fatal inflammation.—Prairie Farmer.

TO PREVENT GRUBS IN SHEEP.

The means of prevention of the grub in the head is to provide a shade for the flock of sheep during the visitation of the fly which deposits the eggs in the nostrils that hatch into the grub which, when it crawls to the upper recesses of the inner parts of the nasal cavity, causes so much grief to the afflicted. The fly makes its appearance in the months of July and August, and if the sheep have a dark place in which to retreat during the day, when the fly is most active, they will escape; the noses of sheep are sometimes tarred to repel the attacks of the fly. To dislodge the grub, syringe into the nostrils a mixture of equal parts of turpentine and linseed oil, injecting about a tablespoonful of the mixture at one time.—Colman's Rural World.

Do NOT make the mistake of pampering your breeding animals with fat-producing foods. Too many of our colts, calves, lambs and pigs are weak and diseased because the dams were not fed so as to develop bone and muscle.

It is often the case that the animals upon the farm which deserve the best care—we mean the work horses—have the least of it. They are usually well-fed but there their care stops. Grooming is of almost as much importance to them as their diet, but they too often get very little of it.

Rev. J. K. Glassford, one of our well-known co-workers, reports the delivery by him, in June, of lectures as follows: Idaville, Binney's Creek, and Monticello, all in Indiana, and also at Goodwin, Illinois.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union, last Sabbath, began at Lake Bluff a week's conference and a school of method for the training of workers. The sessions will close next Sabbath evening.

Latest accounts show that the students who were so unmercifully hazed at Delaware College, in Delaware, Co., Ohio, last April, were permanently disfigured by the caustic substances with which their faces were tattooed, and that suits for damages have been instituted against the offenders in the local courts. The foolishness or malice that prompted these outrages deserves to be severely punished.

At a meeting of members of trades-unions of Chicago, on Sunday last, representing fifteen organizations, it was decided to ask for a Saturday half-holiday from employers, to enable wage-workers to visit the World's Fair on that day instead of Sunday. There were no religious scruples against Sunday opening manifested, but a desire to see the entire exhibition as it is exposed on week-days.

Rev. G. C. Fait writes to us from Monong, No. Dakota, under date of July 4: "We are likely to have the most severe drouth ever experienced in this State. We have had no general rain sufficiently copious to wet the ground down to the roots of the grain since April, or since the grain was sown. The result is, the grain is now dying for want of moisture. The prospect is that there will be no harvest of any consequence, at least in the southeastern part of the State. Hundreds will flee from the State, to avoid worse results. Some are already preparing to leave, while some who would like to go away for a time, will be unable to do so. I will report again, a little later on." This is unpleasant news, but we hope for better reports when our brother writes again.

The International Convention of members of Christian Endeavor Societies, in session at Montreal, Can., is an immense and influential gathering of Christian workers. The State of Illinois alone sends delegates representing its 433 societies. The attendance at the sessions may be estimated at from 16,000 to 20,000 persons. The opportunities for moral and religious advancement presented by this convention, if properly cultivated, are incalculable.

Among notable events in Chicago during the past week were the arrivals of the models of the three "caravels," or small vessels—the Pinta, the Ste. Marie and the Nina—in which Columbus made his first voyage of discovery to America. As far as possible, they are exact reproductions of those vessels. They were built in Spain, and will not fail to form a prominent feature in the Columbian Exposition during the remainder of the season. All along their passage up the Great Lakes they have been hailed with enthusiasm, and their reception here was a sparkling ovation. Following these vessels came the model of the Viking ship, such as, it is believed, the Norseman used in visiting North America centuries before Columbus' day. As a curiosity she attracts much attention.

In a private note, Rev. W. C. Paden, our esteemed co-laborer in the Western District, makes this suggestive statement: "I see continually the ill effects of secretism, such as the enthusiasm of young men for these nauseating institutions, and in the ignorance of many who are startled by a word spoken against secret societies—ignorant because they are not taught. 'My people perish for lack of knowledge.' I expect to give addresses on this subject from time to time. I have learned something as to methods of handling audiences and presenting this difficult question—with much more to learn. My sympathies are always with you, and my co-operation shall be, as far, as fully, and as effectively as possible." Bro. Paden has the best wishes and prayers of those who know his growing power and earnestness in this reform.

In the Cynosures for June 29 and July 6, were published the following: The proceedings of the Annual Meeting and the Conference of Churches on secret societies; the annual reports of the Corresponding Secretary, the Directors, the Treasurer, the Auditors, the Eastern Agent, the New Hampshire Secretary and the Field Secretary. From these reports our readers have been able to form their own opinions as to the work in which the N. C. A. and its helpers are engaged, and the amount and character of the labor performed by each and all during the year. Last week, also, we printed the report of the Directors' meeting, held after all the reports were in, and in which they state, when summing up their deliberations: "Great cheer and hopefulness was felt by the Board, in view of the outlook for the new year."

Rev. J. A. Collins, Chicago editor of the Christian Instructor (Philadelphia), devotes nearly two columns of his paper to the recent Conference of Churches in Carpenter Hall, the true value of the oath, and the recent action of the General Assembly of the United Presbyterians at Monmouth, Ill., in opposition to church members joining the minor secret orders, whether oath-bound or not. "The fundamental idea (secrecy) in all of them," he says, "is opposed to the fundamental idea of the Gospel, which is light, openness, candor, public testimony on all things. The universal characteristic of sin is darkness, concealment. Let any man reconcile these, if he can. Then he may prove that day is night and night is day. Let the whole brood alone is the counsel of the Assembly, and give them no countenance or support. The Assembly was right."

The subject of paying pensions to fraudulent and undeserving claimants has not been agitated in vain. Investigation shows that the amounts expended upon this class have been large, and the government is now engaged in sifting out the abuses which have so long prevailed in that department. Recent enactments relating to pensions which the former deputy commissioner liberally construed in favor of veterans unable to earn a living, are now undergoing a modification of his construction. Pensions under this law are now refused unless actual inability to gain a livelihood by labor is proved. Under this construction, 125 pensioners in Pennsylvania were dropped from the rolls; and this is the experience of other pensioners, throughout the Union, who were not disabled in war, and were not subsequently disabled so that they cannot earn a living. The G. A. R. will contest the new ruling.

TESTIMONY OF A CONVERTED MASON OF THE THIRTY-THIRD DEGREE.

BY E. T. MINTIRE.

I have been asked to relate my experience. In the hope that it may strengthen the faith of some one, or lead some one out of darkness into the light, I have consented to do so.

For a quarter of a century I was related to secret societies, and as Paul said that he was a Pharisee of the Pharisees, so I was a lodgeite of the lodgeites. I joined the Masons at Plymouth, Maine; was a member of Putnam Lodge of Cambridge, Mass.; was made a life member of the Cambridge Royal Arch Chapter of Cambridge, Knights Templar, and became a member of De Molay Commandery of Boston Lodge of Perfection. I was a thirty-third degree Mason, and stood high in the Odd-fellows' order. I purchased more than five thousand dollars' worth of diamonds and Masonic jewelry. I was sent on Masonic pilgrimages to New York, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Va., New Orleans, and elsewhere. I was introduced to Gen. Garfield by the man who made him a Knight Templar in the Columbia Commandery.

You ask, how could an uneducated man rise so high and so fast? I answer, money paved the way.

And now let me tell you of my manner of life. I was a breeder and trainer of trotting horses, and, of course, I belonged to the military National Lancers. I had a farm in Maine, where I raised horses and had stallions in every New England State. I kept Medford rum and the best Kentucky whisky in my home, and gave Sunday dinners, smoked the finest cigars, attended horse races, balls, theaters and frequented gambling dens, to help on my business. And it prospered beyond my most sanguine expectations. The Masonic and Odd-fellows' banquets were my special delight. But I noticed that when a member became dissipated and was not able to pay his quarterly dues, they expelled him. I did not wish to be deprived of these banquets, and so I inquired how I could make myself secure for the future. They told me I could pay in so much money that the interest would pay my quarterly dues. This I did, and made myself a fixture, as I supposed.

My family physician was a brother Mason. I am fully persuaded that he destroyed the life of my unborn children. He led my wife astray. But my Masonic oath prevented me from informing on him. At last I was divorced from her and he married her. I found there was poison in the cup of pleasure.

Six years ago I found the Lord Jesus Christ. When he came into my heart, the world went out. When I surrendered my soul to Christ as Saviour and Lord, I found that an entire separation from my former ways was necessary. I sold my diamonds and jewelry, gelded my stallions, put up my horses at auction, emptied my wine and whisky bottles, stopped smoking and chewing tobacco, and turned my back upon theaters, balls, gambling dens and saloons. When my former companions visited me on Sabbath, I told them that I was not the same man I was before; that I never visited or invited my friends to visit me on the Lord's day; and then I told them of the Saviour I had found. That disposed of the Sabbath visiting question very quickly. I settled here in Boston, and joined the Congregational church, and am educating my children, and testifying as to what the Lord has done for me wherever I have the opportunity.

But the question was still unanswered: What shall I do about my lodges? I attended two meetings after my conversion. But I felt out of place. It seemed to me that all my old friends had changed. Their conversation was shocking to my renewed nature. Their smoking and drinking was abominable. They asked me to attend their reunion. I told them that I thought it was wrong to dance. They said that I could go and witness the performance and not take part. But I told them that I could not even seem to approve by looking on, for that would be giving encouragement to men and women who are just as vile as I was before my conversion. So I became convinced that the lodge was not the place for a Christian. I consulted not with flesh and blood, but parted company with them at once. They told me I could not get free from my Masonic oath. Well, I considered that matter and reasoned this way: A private individual may go through with the form of marrying a couple, but it is not a real marriage. It is only a mock marriage. So the lodge officers go through with the form of swearing the members. But they have no authority to administer the oath. It is only a mock performance, and no more binding than a mock wedding ceremony. More than that, a man has no right to swear to do wrong. The forty men who bound themselves by a great oath that they would not eat bread until they had killed Paul, had no right to bind themselves to commit murder. Their oath was not binding. It was wrong for them to take it, and it would have been a shocking crime to have carried it out. But a Mason swears to do wrong. In the first three degrees he swears to protect a Mason in preference to all others (murder and treason excepted, and they left to your own discretion). After the Royal Arch degree the oath is amended thus: "Murder and treason not excepted." A Mason may be as black as Satan in vice and crime; still my Masonic oath binds me to protect him, his wife, mother, daughters and sisters, in preference to the purest Christian and his wife, daughters, mother and sisters. This a great wrong. I had no right to take such an obligation; and I learned from Leviticus 5:4, 5, that an oath taken to do what one did not understand is not binding.

Another thing led me to repudiate the lodge. Two men are Masons. One is a minister, and his life is pure and holy. Another is a distiller, a gambler, a dancer, a frequenter of the house of ill-fame. Both die, and both are buried with Masonic honors, and both are sent to the Mason's heaven. Can an institution be good that makes no distinction between vice and virtue, morality and immorality, right and wrong?

Still more, they make a great display of their benevolence; but they will not admit those who need assistance. Only the able and well-to-do are wanted. If any one gets poor and cannot pay he is expelled. It costs from $10 to $125 to get into the Masonic lodge. And for every $2,000,000 distributed, they spend $3,000,000. The fact is, it takes $3 to disburse $2. What missionary society would be tolerated in such use of funds? A missionary society that spends more than $5,000 in disbursing $100,000 is extravagant. The money of Masons is spent largely in grand temples, glittering regalia, banquets, balls and social vices. And more still. The lodge takes the time and money of Christians that belong to God and the church. Last summer the G. A. R. had a reunion in Washington, D. C. The Boston Post left here for Washington Sabbath morning. Several prominent men in different city congregations were absent from God's house that day, riding on the cars, listening to foul stories, and breathing tobacco smoke and inhaling the fumes of whisky. A member of our congregation told me he was utterly disgusted with himself and that day's dissipation. The lodge makes this a common occurrence. This expense lessens the church's income.

Furthermore, their religion was from beneath, not from above. They had the Bible, but many verses and passages were left out. There are Mohammedans, pagans, Jews, and Christians in the lodge; and it is not good Masonry to mention the name of Christ in the lodge. Our chaplain, who read the mutilated Scriptures and our prayers, and repeated the burial service over the dead Masons, was a profligate, who made sport of the Scriptures when out of the lodge, and drank and gambled and visited fast women. How could I attend a mock religious service conducted by such a man? And what kind of a religious service is it when Christ is left out? It is not the worship of God. It is the worship of Satan. "They sacrifice to devils, and not to God."

These facts stirred my soul and awakened my conscience. And I heard the voice of God saying to me: "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you."

Last, and worst of all, the lodge shields criminals. I know a man in this city who is worth $6,000,000. He lives in a house costing $200,000, finished inside and out with olive-wood from the Mount of Olives in Palestine. He drives a span of horses costing $3,000. He is a member of the church and contributes to its work. But he is a distiller and lives on intimate relations with another man's wife and daughter. Why is he allowed to do this with impunity? He is a Mason of high degree, and the matter is hushed up. Why is justice defeated in the trial of Dr. Greaves now in Denver, Colo.? He is a high-degree Mason.

The Masons murdered Morgan in 1826. Then 45 out of every 50 of the Masons left the order. In the words of John Quincy Adams, "Hundreds were proved to have been accessories to the Morgan murder-crime, before and after the fact." The number of breaches of the sixth and seventh commandments that are hidden from public view by the dark mantle of the lodge only the day of judgment will reveal. The lodge is the way to hell. The rule for the Christian is, "Touch not, taste not, handle not."

JUDGING OTHERS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The Saviour said: "Judge not, that ye be not judged." To judge signifies to pronounce judgment as to whether a person or act is conformable or not conformable to the law. This may be done in three ways:

I. There is the judicial decision of a divinely constituted court. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church at Washington resolved itself into a judicial court and tried Dr. Briggs and suspended him from the Gospel ministry. A civil court at New Bedford, Mass., tried Miss Lizzie A. Borden, charged with murdering her father and step-mother, and acquitted her. These courts were under obligation to give decisions. This is not what the Saviour forbids.

II. There is an unwarranted individual judgment, where a man presumes to speak for God and declare that a certain one is guilty before God. Here it is obvious to remark: (1). That it is right for us to declare the judgment recorded in the Word. It is right to say that the man who declares that Jesus has not come in the flesh, or that Christ is not the Son of God, or that Jesus is accursed, is not of God, for God has said it. It is right to say that no unclean person or unjust or adulterer or drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God, for the Scriptures say so. (2). We have no right to speak for God beyond what is written. (a). We have no right to pronounce that to be sinful which the Bible does not condemn. The priests tell the deluded children of Rome that it is wrong to eat meat on Friday; that Jesus is displeased when they neglect to pray to the Virgin Mary, and that their friends will perish in hell if they do not pay liberally to deliver them from purgatory. These are Satanic delusions, invented to deceive the simple. They are falsehoods, manufactured by the father of lies. (b). We have no right to sit in judgment upon the motives. Paul would not allow the Corinthians to judge his motives. There are obvious reasons why men should not pass sentence of condemnation on the state of the heart. (c). We are not competent. It is beyond our sphere. The motive that we know may depend on a motive of which we are entirely ignorant. In the Borden trial several motives were suggested that might have prompted Lizzie to commit the deeds. One was that she hated her step-mother, and after killing her she slew her father to hide her guilt. Another was that a desire to get possession of her father's property prompted the double murder. The contradictory theories indicate that men cannot intelligently judge motives. The defence in that trial insisted that the prosecution had not established a motive, and the prosecution contended that they were not under obligation to prove a motive. And so said the judge in instructing the jury. (d). This is not the time for condemning motives. There is a day appointed when the secrets of men's hearts will be brought to light. But until that day comes we may not attempt to uncover what God has left hidden. (e). It does not belong to us. Christ is the judge of the heart. He alone is able to read the motives with unerring accuracy. It is usurpation for us to assume the exercise of his prerogatives. Those who do it are not innocent.

III. There is the expression of our individual opinion as to whether a person or act is praiseworthy or censurable. This is right. (1). When we have adequate knowledge. The judge in the Borden trial charged the jury to take all the evidence against the defendant and place it in one scale and place all the evidence for her in the other scale, and with a calm and judicial mind consider which preponderates. The same rule applies in individual judgment. Until we have all the facts and with unbiassed mind calmly weigh the evidence, our judgment is unsafe, and we have no right to express it. (2). When there is proper occasion for expressing our judgment. In 1885 several red-handed criminals were acquitted in the court in Cincinnati. An indignation meeting was held in Music Hall. Several prominent men made addresses, condemning the miscarriage of justice. When the meeting adjourned a rush was made for the jail. The mob was resisted by the officers. The militia was called out. The soldiers fired upon the mob, and 153 were shot down. Those addresses were truthful, but they were the bomb-shell with lighted fuse thrown into the powder magazine. There are occasions when silence is golden and speech is incendiary. (3). When we express our opinions from proper motives and design. An overwhelming desire to glorify God and promote peace and good will among men is essential to justify us in speaking. The members of the National Christian Association condemn the "secret empire" in all its departments, because they are persuaded that it is a department of the kingdom of Satan, that its destruction is essential to the safety and upbuilding of society, and that separation from it is the immediate and imperative duty of every follower of Jesus Christ. (4). When we express our opinions with proper mildness. Laboring men have in many cases just cause of complaint. But who does not know that the intemperate speech of their unwise leaders made the riot of Homestead a possibility?

But the expression of individual opinion is wrong under certain conditions, and this is the very thing the Saviour condemns. It is wrong: (1). When we speak with undue severity. We think there was severity in Christ when condemning the hypocrisy of the scribes and Pharisees. But he was speaking with the authority of the King of kings. We think of the apostle Paul denouncing the sorcerer: "Thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness." But he was speaking as the representative of the Church's Head. We think of the stern language used by District Attorney Knowlton in his arraignment of Lizzie Borden before the jury. But he was speaking as an officer of the State. Neither you nor I would be justified in using his severe language in speaking of her. Our individual judgments are wrong when not expressed in the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus. Christ forbids us to judge with undue severity. (2). When we are prompted by a disposition to condemn. How natural for a man who has a fault-finding disposition to magnify the evidence against another and minimize the evidence in his favor! As it is natural for the hornet to sting, and the rattlesnake to strike with its fangs, so it is natural for the man whose disposition is soured to censure when he is not called on to do it. The Saviour forbids such judgment. (3). When we are not in a position to know. Some men, after hearing one side of a case, hasten to express their judgment. Some men's prejudices make them incapable of hearing any but one side. One hundred facts against their opinion weigh less than one uncertain fact upon which they based their biased judgment. I have lately talked with men who expressed their opinion in the most vehement terms that Lizzie Borden was guilty; and when we ventured to suggest facts in evidence which were inconsistent with her guilt, they immediately proceeded to get angry. The Saviour forbids the expression of a prejudiced or uninformed judgment. (4). When our motive is bad. It is a law among animals that when one is wounded the others attack it and trample its life out. That law prevails in depraved human nature. The fact that a man is suspected or is under arrest by the civil authorities, or is under process before a church court, is sufficient ground for the unthinking to take up the cry of guilty; and so the innocent often suffer wrongfully. To express our opinions with the purpose of wounding others from sheer wantonness is an evil. There are those who whet their tongues with malice, making them cut like swords; "In whose bent bows are arrows set, even sharp and bitter words." There are those who, like the infidel lecturer, Ingersoll, hold up sacred things and good people to ridicule. The expression of our opinion with such a purpose is wrong. "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

Boston, Mass.

CHRISTIAN MANLINESS.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The Watchman (Boston) of June 22d, in reply to the Secretary of the American Peace Society, and in advocacy of the Boys' Brigade, thus discourses on true manliness: "If the Boys' Brigade emphasizes the heroic element in Christianity, we confess that we think even better of it than we have done. The feminine type of Christianity has too largely superseded the masculine; and one result is, the alienation of men from the churches."

While we do not believe that this is the reason why men are alienated from the churches, we quite agree that the great need of our times is a more heroic and manly type of Christian character. The truth is, that there is nothing in donning a uniform and parading with gun and bayonet that is at all calculated to promote true moral heroism. It requires no self-sacrifice, and no moral courage, but is wholly in line with those forms of amusement in which even the worst boys delight to indulge.

The present century has produced a great number of heroic men and women. The best examples have not been found on the battle-field.

Dr. Adoniram Judson and Bishop Wm. Taylor, among missionaries, and Garrison, Phillips, and Sumner, among civilians, are those who dared to do and to suffer for depressed humanity. To our mind, Dr. David Livingstone was a greater hero than the Duke of Wellington or the first Emperor Napoleon. Moral courage is incomparably scarcer and nobler than that which faces the cannon's mouth. Immeasurably the grandest example of the heroic is that of our Lord Jesus Christ. His is a type of the most perfect manliness. He who, "when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." (1 Pet. 2:23.) His courage, his forbearance and long-suffering—the very opposite of the spirit of war—are set forth as our example. Such as follow it have the highest type of moral heroism.

What the editor means by "the feminine type of Christianity" it is hard to say. Some women delight in military parades and are greatly enamored of the heroes of war; but those women whom the world has learned to honor are those who have been strong for the right, and have endured hardness as good soldiers in the great moral conflict. Never, in the history of the church, were there so many, and such splendid specimens of womanly heroism. If this is feminine Christianity, we need more of it. It was not weakness and effeminacy that led the W. C. T. U. to establish a "department of peace and arbitration." It took faith, courage and self-denial, and is one of the crowning glories of their work.

People often differ in their conception of manliness. In some parts of our country it is regarded as manly for every man to carry a revolver in his hip-pocket, and if he thinks himself insulted to shoot the aggressor. In such sections homicides are of frequent occurrence. We do not suppose that the editor of the Watchman wants to promote such manliness. Then, too, there is "the manly art of self-defence," of which John L. Sullivan has been the most distinguished teacher. This is, to-day, vastly more popular than the Boys' Brigades, draws far greater crowds, and provides vastly larger sums for its support.

We do not suppose our brother favors this kind of manliness. But, supposing a "sparring school" should be established on Boston Common, and the young men, clad in uniform, should meet there every Sunday afternoon for an exhibition of skill, with the understanding, however, that at its close, they should have a Bible lesson, would not all decent people see the inconsistency? And yet about everything that can be said in favor of the discipline and physical training of the military drill, could be said in favor of the severer training for the prize-ring.

Playing at war with guns and bayonets, is just as truly brutal and debasing in its tendency, as playing with boxing-gloves in the so-called "art of self-defence."

What the world needs is moral heroes—such true manliness as will make men strong and bold to reprove wrong-doing, and which will not let men cower before the slave-power where it is popular, nor the lodge-power when it seeks to muzzle the press and the university. We commend such heroism to our brother of the Watchman.

Oberlin, O.

THE UNION OF CHRISTIANS.

That Christians of all denominations are inclined toward a more intimate fellowship and a practical union in endeavors to evangelize the unbelieving and unconverted everywhere, is one of the evident facts of the day. Denominational attachments are strong, and preferences for particular forms of worship are decided, but a great multitude is looking for a way by which large liberty in these matters may be secured under some form of union or federation which shall make the Church of Christ one body of many members, animated by one spirit in the great endeavor to establish in every community the world over the kingdom which is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit. Christian men are more and more impatient with that which holds them apart; are more and more unwilling to be separated by differences of inferior importance; are more and more indisposed to have a part in rivalries within the pale of evangelical belief.

Various causes have combined to produce this tendency. Non-denominational journals have been influential. By both necessity and choice they have given prominence to the vital truths accepted by all Christian denominations, and differences have been kept out of sight. Inevitably, under such an influence, minor distinctions become comparatively unimportant. The Evangelical Alliance has formed an actual union, on a doctrinal basis, including the great truths which distinguish Christianity from all other religious systems, and brought together the leaders of Israel in hearty, spirited, and successful common action. This harmonious compact, and actual union of Christians of all names, has made a lasting impression upon the world as well as upon the Church. Christian men also have been more and more associated in philanthropic and educational schemes which have required a union of believers to obtain and retain success. By these affiliations they have learned how much they hold in common, on how little they differ, and acquired admiration and respect for the piety and devotion of men of various denominations. There has, besides, been a constant intermingling of Christians of all connections in traveling about the country and in visiting various summer and winter resorts. The facilities for travel have invited to these excursions, and friendships mutually profitable have been formed. Walls of separation go down in such unavoidable companionship. Rough and sharp edges are worn down to smoothness in the inevitable jostling together.

Customs, as we may call them, are bringing and holding together for longer or shorter periods Christian people of many minds. And the qualities of a man are brought out and tested in traveling. Genuine goodness is radiant under the discomfort, or disappointment, or general worry, and it has been found that genuine goodness does not belong to Calvinists or Armenians, to Presbyterians, or Episcopalians, or Congregationalists, or Baptists, or Methodists, but that there are really good hearts and sanctified natures under these badges.

These influences are to-day in vigorous action, and are more likely to increase than to decrease. The result is too manifest to require statement.

Perhaps God is preparing his children for a mighty, irresistible, united movement upon the enormous and threatening evils existing and increasing in every nominally Christian land.

The tendency to union does not arise from religious indifference. Religious problems to-day occupy men as much, if not more, than ever before. When they are discussed the galleries, as well as the ground floor, are filled.—Christian Intelligencer.

AGGRIEVED REBEKAHS.

"The Rebekahs of Pennsylvania," says the Baltimore Telegram, "feel very much aggrieved at the action of the board of the Odd-fellows' Home refusing, under any circumstances, to allow the wives of the old men to be admitted as inmates, especially after what the Rebekahs have done to make the home a success. The Rebekahs now propose to establish a home for aged couples, and committees on site, finance, etc., have been appointed."

But do not the Rebekahs understand that Odd-fellowship has no room for "superannuated" members,—no; not if they have paid their last dollars into its treasury? If not, it seems as if a few instances like the above might open their eyes. Ladies, be reasonable. The back-stairs degree to which you are so graciously admitted is not, according to Grosh, Donaldson, and other standard lodge authorities, any part of true Odd-fellowship, and you have in consequence not learned all the beauties of this most benevolent order, which allows none over sixty years of age to become members, and admits only those exempt from all bodily infirmities which may prevent their gaining a livelihood, and then through one of its chief authorities (Donaldson's Text Book, p. 98) says that "universal love to all mankind, and a mutual sympathy with the wants of our fraternal brethren, are the two great pillars that support the laudable capital of Odd-fellowship."—The Independent Christian.

THE KIND OF VOTERS WE IMPORT.

During the election on Tuesday, in the 17th ward, a voter came to vote about 5 o'clock, p. m. Fr. Schiffer, of St. Nicholas Parish, hailed him, and asked him if he had voted. He replied, "No."

"Well, I told you to vote last Sunday."

"But I cannot vote the ticket straight."

Whereupon the priest slapped him in the face, and said, "Go vote as I told you."

The poor Irish slave went at once and voted. And as he returned the reverend (?) father asked him, "Did you vote as I told you?"

"Yis, yer riverince."

The priest made the sign of the cross, and placing his hand upon his head, blessed the unfortunate slave, saying "Go home now."

The above is well authenticated by competent witnesses.—St. Louis True American.

A PARROT'S MEMORY.

The Globe-Democrat, St. Louis, is responsible for the following record, which, from the remarkable attainments of our own bird, we are fully prepared to believe.

Ten years ago a young married lady, Mrs. Robbins, from New Orleans, made quite a visit at our house. She brought with her a parrot named Pedro, and it was a sight the way it made himself at home. Our children were all at home then—the youngest eight years old and the oldest sixteen. Three of them are married now and one is dead. It was poor little Quita that the parrot took such a fancy for on that visit, and before the first day was out he was calling, "Quita! Oh, Quita!" till you couldn't have told him from one of the family. He began calling me "papa" right away in the most affectionate manner; and he had a funny way of going downstairs holding on with his beak at every step and letting himself down, shouting at every breath, "Oh, Keziah! Keziah! Don't you hear? Pedro wants his dinner!" Keziah was our servant then, you see.

Well, the other day Mrs. Robbins came again and brought Pedro. He was taken upstairs to the hall, and then at Mrs. Robbins' request I uncovered the cage myself. I wasn't expecting anything of the kind, and I tell you I came mighty near fainting when that bird stretched his head up, turned it to one side, looked at me critically a minute and exclaimed: "Howdy, papa!" Mrs. Robbins has had no children, understand. No, that parrot remembered me! I felt so curious to know what he would do that I turned him out and followed him. He made straight for the children's old room, and when I opened it he went in and walked all about, evidently looking for something. I thought I knew what was coming, and pretty soon it came. "Quita!" he called, "where is Quita?" May be you think that didn't break my heart, almost. He is there yet and he calls her every day. But the way he tumbles down that staircase, calling for Keziah! That would make you laugh. He doesn't take kindly to our new servant girl, and evidently considers her an interloper. I tell you that parrot remembers.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A saying of the Autocrat.—Honors to William Lloyd Garrison.—The advantage of true "culture".—An order with a blasphemous name.—Other lodge matters.—Sabbath desecration.—Harvard punches.

To say that no one but ourselves knows all the evil that we have done, is as trite as it is self-evident; but it remains for our genial Autocrat, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, to show that there is a reverse side to the shield, by saying, as he did recently, when referring to a half-forgotten poem, written in his earlier years, "Nobody knows but himself how many good things he has done." This is a pleasant and a true thought, however it may seem to savor of self-righteousness. What does a king traveling incognito care for the slights of people who see in him only a beggar? and what care the royal souls who have all their lives worn the kingly purple, if others do not discern their spiritual anointing? This is pre-eminently true of New England's early reformers, who were as immovable in their own calm sense of right—nay! more so than the statues which the unthinking multitude would rear in after-days to their memory.

Nearly a century ago there was born, in a plain little wooden house just back of the Whitefield church commemorated by Whitefield, where

"Walled about by its basement stones Lie the marvelous preacher's bones," one who was to be the prophet of liberty to the colored race; who, amid the misunderstanding of friends, the hootings and jeers of mobs, and in prison cells, should continue to give his message freely, fearlessly, till he saw the end of the giant wrong slavery. In the first number of his famous Liberator, began at the age of twenty-five William Lloyd Garrison uttered these grand words, the first of many that were to be like Martin Luther's, "half-battle for the free." "I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice. I will not equivocate—I will not excuse—I will not retreat a single inch—I will be heard." And yesterday, on the Fourth (a most appropriate day), Newburyport honored him, but honored herself more, by unveiling a statue of heroic size, cast in bronze, of the man who sixty years ago was dragged through the streets of Boston by a mob thirsting for his blood.

The prevailing financial depression, which is severely felt in our manufacturing centers—five thousand unemployed workmen in Bridgeport, Conn., during the past six weeks, suggests this thought in connection with the thousands of graduates that our schools and colleges have turned out this summer, that the real test of an educated mind comes with just such periods. For the great advantage of superior "culture"—using the word in its true sense—is the wider range of environment which it gives us, precisely as highly organized animals have an advantage over those of a lower grade in their ability to adjust themselves to the most widely differing conditions, and gather their food from the greatest variety of sources. So the really cultured person can extract happiness from surroundings in which another would be miserable, and obtain and assimilate nutriment for mind and soul from materials on which a less highly complex nature would starve. The popular idea of a liberal education as fitting its fortunate possessor for high positions in life is a narrow one, for if it does not fit us for any position which we may be called to fill, and help us to do the humblest task better than the uncultured person, it is not education in the true sense.

"Thank heaven!" says the Transcript, speaking of the endowment orders; "we have seen the last of them. We have the Solid Rock that has crumbled into dust; an order of Safety that is safe in the hands of the receiver; a Royal Ark which foundered long before Ararat was in sight; an Iron Hall which turned out a haul of steal; a Helping Hand, which helped only the officers; a Mystic Seven which cut but a sorry figure; a Golden Grail with sorrow in the cup; an order of the Rainbow which proved an iridescent dream; an Animal Friend which did not prove a friend in need or in deed!" The same paper adds: "One order went at least to the verge of blasphemy in asking to be incorporated as the 'Prince of Heaven's Order.' This was truly Masonic in its heaven-daring impiety, and shows at once the Satanic source."

The late episode of Somerville people with Rev. J. F. Lovering, the Masonic pastor who got so intoxicated at a Masonic banquet as to be unable to conduct a marriage service, has opened the eyes of many to the fact that places which a minister cannot frequent with safety must be doubly dangerous for those who have not the strong restraints of a sacred profession to keep them in the bounds of sobriety where all the associations tend to free indulgence of the appetite. Another illustration of the spirit of the lodge, displayed in a different direction, is the recent action of the Boston Central Labor Union commending Gov. Altgeld for his pardon of the Chicago Anarchists. The resolutions were not adopted without discussion, and the best thing the minority who did not approve of them can do is to quit forever an organization which will thus publicly identify itself with the dynamiters and bomb-throwers with which society including all sensible workingmen have so little sympathy.

A lodge-writer in one of the New England papers complains that in many of the Rebekah, and even the subordinate I. O. O. F. lodges, the office of the outside guardian is considered a mere sinecure, for, even if duly appointed, he is seldom in his place and thus a rare opportunity is afforded to eaves-droppers. Does this mean that the more intelligent members are beginning to see for themselves the folly and uselessness of trying to keep any longer secrets that any one can buy for fifty cents?

One hundred and ninety-three trains are running both ways on Sunday, on all the roads centering in Boston, but it has taken thirty years for this tide of Sabbath desecration to fairly set in, and, as Mrs. James H. Earle very truly says in her lately published pamphlet: "We are not to be discouraged if it takes more time to stem this tide than it did to set the wheels of trains and steamers in motion on Sunday, though they were started so stealthily, cautiously and slowly." Here is a thought for reformers which may strike some of us—it certainly did the writer—as a very good answer to the gratuitous sneers so freely thrown out about the slowness with which reforms, especially the anti-secret reform, moves. How slowly, and with what panther-like stealthiness, Masonry crept into power after the Morgan excitement seemed to have annihilated it. Evil takes plenty of time as a rule, and it is inconsistent to taunt reformers because they are obliged, in the nature of things, to do the same.

"Harvard punches on Commencement-day," is the subject of an article in one of our city dailies. A nice punch, "made of Medford, Santa Cruz and Jamaica rum, with a little dash of brandy added," served the class of '77, from which Gov. Russell graduated. It cannot be pleasant reading for careful parents who are thinking of sending their boys to Harvard.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 5, 1893.

Is the line between church and state drawn with sufficient distinctness in the United States? The question was suggested by a sermon preached last Sunday in this city by Rev. Dr. T. S. Hamlin, which is being much talked about. The subject of the sermon was "A plea for the National League for the Protection of American Institutions," and it was opened with a statement of the organization of the Christian church within a state, and the quotation of "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and to God the things that are God's," as proof that Christ recognized the necessity of a division between church and state. The following quotations from the sermon are of interest of every American: "Gladstone says that the Constitution of the United States is the most remarkable work ever struck out by man at one time, and among its great features none is more interesting than its full provision for complete separation between church and state. Article VI. provides that all officers of the United States and of the several States shall be bound by an oath or affirmation to support this Constitution, thus recognizing responsibility to a higher power, since an oath or affirmation is invalid unless there is accountability to God; and it says: 'But no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.' The Constitution closes with this provision; but the first amendment, which was soon felt to be necessary to the carrying out of the principle, goes further, and provides that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

"Is this sufficient? No; for it has been, and is, constantly evaded. This is especially true in the matter of education, and of all forms of public charity. New York State, since 1869, has given in money or land over $25,000,000 under sectarian control. Congress within the last seven years has appropriated more than $3,300,000 for Indian education under sectarian control.

"Every year Congress appropriates large sums for charities in this District that are directly or indirectly under the control of churches. . . . The question of separation between church and state, as relating to education, at present, shows many hopeful signs. The Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, Protestant Episcopal, and Presbyterian denominations have formally declined to receive any further funds from the United States Treasury for their work among the Indians. These denominations represent a population of fourteen and three quarter millions. . . . There are two things that seem essential to the full and symmetrical carrying out of the principle of separation between church and state. First, no appropriations for sectarian uses, whether in education or in charities. . . . This principle requires also the withdrawal of public moneys from all asylums, hospitals, homes, and charities of every sort that are under sectarian control. . . . Secondly, there should be added to the Constitution of the United States the sixteenth amendment proposed by the National League, which reads as follows: No State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use its property or credit, or any money raised by taxation, or authorized either to be used, for the purposes of founding, maintaining, or aiding, by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church, religious denomination, or religious society, or any institution, society or undertaking which is wholly, or in part, under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

"Only twenty-one of our forty-four States have any provision in their constitutions forbidding the sectarian use of public funds, and the matter can be fully met only by incorporating this principle in unmistakable language in the fundamental law of the land."

A special train of five cars left Washington on Monday evening, carrying the local delegates and visitors to the twelfth International Christian Endeavor Convention, to be held at Montreal, Canada.

Patriotic religious services were held in two of our churches yesterday; in one, under the auspices of the Sons and Daughters of the Revolution and the Sons of the American Revolution, the societies and entire congregation forming a procession which, after the church services, marched to the foot of the Washington monument, where patriotic addresses were delivered and songs sung. The services in the other church were those prescribed by the Episcopal church in 1785. It has often occurred to me that all of our churches should take part in the celebration of our national holidays; it would certainly be beneficial.

The Capitol building is full of workmen engaged in making the interior of the structure presentable when Congress assembles on August 7. The early date was so entirely unexpected that all the usual summer work around the building was caught in an unfinished condition, and now everything has to be hurried up. *

REFORM NEWS.

GERMAN BAPTISTS ARE WITH US.

[This letter was crowded out of last week's issue.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.]

WHEATON, Ill., July 1, 1893.

A meeting of the Chicago Association of Baptist churches was held in Wheaton, June 20 to 22, and it was my pleasure to attend several sessions, and find among the pastors and delegates from the seventy-one churches a number of friends of the reform.

In the reports of mission work in Chicago, to which an evening was given, it was a remarkable fact that the First German Baptist church, Rev. J. Meier, pastor, located at the corner of Superior and Paulina streets, has been accomplishing more for city evangelization than any other single Baptist church in Chicago. Every year it has started a new mission, and has nourished several of these into independent, self-supporting churches. This church is one of the most pronounced also against the evil of the secret orders. Last fall it was my privilege to speak briefly at a union meeting at the invitation of Pastor Meier, and also to address the General Conference meeting the week following in the same church.

Last week a district conference of German Baptist churches was held at Oak Park. Churches were represented from Peoria to the northern part of the State and from 50 to 75 were present, Rev. J. Meier being moderator. On Tuesday I attended the conference and by vote was requested to address the body on the lodge issue, a very cordial vote of thanks following the half hour's remarks. In his response Bro. Meier gave the assurance that the churches of this connection do not receive members of secret societies, and earnestly desire the whole church to be of the same faith.

This is an encouraging word for the reform. The whole Baptist denomination may yet be reached and be brought to the same high level of conviction.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN INDIANA AND ILLINOIS.

PERU, Indiana, July 7, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am down here, in the midst of as magnificent a farming community as it has been my privilege to look upon for some time. Listening to the click of the sickle as it falls the ripened grain, I am reminded of God's promise that "springtime and harvest, summer and winter, shall not fail." In reform work there are the sowing and reaping times. Seed sown in weakness and tears will, with the divine blessing, bring forth fruit in the glorious harvest time. Those who would rejoice with the Reaper must also labor with him.

Isaac Crane, in whose care I am, is one of the old settlers. In an early day he came to the "Western Reserve," cut a road through the woods, and built a house. He became an Anti-mason before the Masons murdered Morgan. Eighty-two years of experience and observation have convinced him that he made no mistake in taking the Anti-masonic side.

Yesterday we drove nine miles to call on Levi Miller. This brother is a member of the German Baptist church, and is no stranger to our work, having read the Cynosure for ten years. His six sons, who are now strong young men, have all kept out of the lodge. In speaking of the Cynosure, they frequently spoke of it as "the eye-opener". Brother Miller, being prospered in this world's goods, did not hoard his money as some. After seeing his children well situated in life, he built an orphan's and aged people's home, that those less fortunate might receive care. It is his hope to arrange for me to lecture in his section.

I plan to arrange for Sabbath services to-day. Last Sabbath evening it was my privilege to preach in the church at Byron, Ill., of which my father was pastor thirty years ago. At the conclusion of the service I shook hands, among others, with a gentleman giving his name as Scoville. He remarked: "I suppose you do not remember me." I replied: "I do not." He then said that he had heard me preach in Byron thirty years ago. He did not think I looked any older than I did then. This was undoubtedly a case of mistaken identity.

Rev. H. A. Fischer, representing Wheaton College, filled the pulpit of the Congregational church in Byron last Sabbath morning. His theme was Christian Education. Many will doubtless take a greater interest in higher education after listening to his clear, forceful presentation of the facts. Friends interested will do well to get him to speak in their neighborhoods. Christian education means death to superstition and its folly. More anon.

PROGRESS OF THE WORK ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, Ore., July 4, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since writing before, I have held meetings and spoken on questions of moral reform as follows:

Shady Brook, near Glencoe, Ore., Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night. Here I had a crowded house at each appointment. All the voters signed our anti-secrecy constitution, save two. One declared himself in favor of our work, but, by a prejudice against signing anything, he was held back. He must have been "taken in," some time, by "Bohemian oats" swindlers.

At Mountain Dale, I spoke twice, and secured twenty signers. Here I had very fair congregations, notwithstanding the busy season.

Next night I spoke at Gaston, on the West Side branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad. At this place we had a good congregation; the large church was nearly filled, and it was predicted that if we returned, the house would not hold the people.

The next night we were at McMinnville, the county seat of Yamhill county. Here we had not been announced, and had to speak to a prayer-meeting crowd, which, in these days of worldliness, is not large.

At Bellevue I spoke three times, and had good audiences and good interest.

At Wheatland we spoke twice, and on the last night we had a number of Masons out to hear us. They were well-disposed; but after I had dismissed the congregation, they gathered about some young men and tried to deny it. I challenged either of them to go and make oath that it was not true and I would prosecute them for perjury; or I would furnish a man who would make oath that it was true and they might prosecute him for perjury. They were confounded.

During the month of June I have held meetings at thirteen points. I spoke twenty-three times, secured about one hundred signatures to our anti-secrecy constitution, elected seventeen delegates to our convention, and distributed about five hundred tracts.

I have labored hard, but enjoyed it very much. I feel that God blesses me in the work as much as ever before. I ask the prayers of all Christians for our success.

We also ask friends of our cause to send such sums as they can spare to assist in making the convention at Canby, August 15, the success it ought to be.

We desire to extend our work into Eastern and Southern Oregon, the Sound country, and Eastern Washington. All funds to assist the convention should be forwarded to Samuel Terry, Canby, Ore. Anything designed to assist in defraying our traveling expenses may be sent to P. B. Williams, Portland, Ore. P. B. WILLIAMS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REV. M. A. GAULT IN HIS NEW HOME.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., July 5, '93.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was a keen disappointment for us not to be able to attend the annual meeting of the N. C. A., which for months we had been planning to do.

After our Synod meeting at New Castle, Pa., Mrs. Gault and I arrived here the same day, she coming from Chicago, where she had spent several weeks with a brother and sister. Then followed the busiest week of our lives, for into it were crowded the services of my installation as pastor, by a commission of Presbytery; also, our four days' communion service, in which Rev. D. S. Faris officiated; a public reception given us by the congregation, and the Commencement exercises of the Indiana State University. All this, added to the labor of unpacking our things, in order to get settled down in our new home, was too great a strain on our tired nerves, and when it was all over, and we had time to catch our breath and think about the annual meeting, we found we were too much exhausted to go.

The trial of severing our relations at Blanchard was greater than we anticipated. When we came to turn the key for the last time and turn our backs on the dear home where I had enjoyed such sweet rest after many a weary campaign, and when our train moved away from the depot; and the forms of our dear friends faded away from sight, and the familiar town passed out of view, it was then that we fully realized the strength of the ties we had formed there during the past fifteen years.

But the kindness of the people here is rapidly healing the pain of this separation. At the public reception our congregation gave us, the pulpit was handsomely decorated with flowers, and in the form of a beautiful wreath of flowers there was the word "welcome" on the wall above the pulpit. Prof. Z. A. McCaughan and T. N. Faris, in behalf of the congregation, and two of the city pastors made kind addresses of welcome; after which an interesting literary program was carried out by the young people, concluding with a sumptuous repast of cake, strawberries and cream.

Such a welcome was almost too much for us, accustomed as we had been, for ten years, to breasting all the opposition and abuse in the field of unpopular reform work. But we feel that God put it into the hearts of the people here, and we do appreciate the inspiration that comes from a united, devoted, loving congregation.

We are living on College Avenue, three doors from the old State University building, where chapel exercises are still held. At the recent Commencement sixty-eight of Indiana's brightest young men and women graduated. The university has over 600 students.

M. A. GAULT.

A BIBLE DISTRIBUTOR IN MEXICO.

EAGLE PASS, Texas, June 25, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In my last I promised to write to you as I went down the Rio Grande; so I take this time, with pleasure, to fill my agreement.

We arrived here June 13, after a trip of twenty hours over a vast dry plain, or sand-hills, with almost no vegetation. It is a lonely ride, there being no settlement, except the stations, and those are small, dirty, poor towns.

We canvassed this place, and put into circulation about seventy-five Bibles and Testaments among the Mexicans. Although there has been a Bible depository here for fifteen or more years, it needs systematic work. The Mexicans are anxious for the Word, when it is put before them in the right light. One woman parted with her cross and image to get the Bible, as she had no money. Some gave their saints; others their prayer-beads etc., and some who could hardly get enough to eat gave their last cent for the Word. One woman said that they eat only once a day, and at times not that.

If we believe that God cares for his creatures, we must admit that his hand is in the distribution of the Bible. To be sure, he uses human means. Do you prize God's Word as you ought?

From here we crossed over the river into Mexico, where we had the great privilege of putting 119 Bibles in circulation among the Mexicans. One woman took off her earrings and gave them to me for a Bible; she had no money, but she earnestly desired to have the Word. Another gave her finger-ring. Others gave up their saints for the Bible. The longing of these people for the Scriptures is very great.

In some houses where we entered and sat down to read from the Bible, the women, men and children were all attention; and often their neighbors would come and listen. Some would not have fifty cents with which to buy a Bible, so would send a child to borrow what was lacking. At other times two women would put their all together, and then have only thirty or forty cents; but we let them have the Word, and oh, how delighted they were!

Times here are very hard. There has been no rain in sufficient quantities to make a good corn crop for four or five years, and corn is shipped into Mexico by train-loads. Farther on, in the interior, it is much worse for the very poor.

Ah, the drunkenness and vice that here exists! I saw a sight, last night, that was awful, but I must relate it.

[NOTE.—The details are unfit for publication; but the incident indicates the early training of children in vice in a Roman Catholic country, where neither the practice nor the consequences receive the parental rebuke.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.]

The girl's father was sitting by me, and saw it all, yet seemed to think it of no consequence. This is a specimen of some of the children; what can we expect of the men and women where these things are tolerated? In the eyes of the Romish priests in Mexico, it is a greater crime to buy and study the Bible than to commit murder! This is no rash statement, but a fact which I can prove, and have had it verified over and over again in my three years' work. The Catholics, or infidels, in these parts object to the Protestant religion, on the ground that it is too moral and exacting! As to a pure life, they prefer to obtain license from the priests to sin! Their delusion is so great that they really believe that the priests can forgive them, and that they will be saved.

I am convinced that the conflict is coming, wherein the "man of sin" will be revealed; if the Pope should declare war on heretics, here is Mexico ready to step over into the United States and help exterminate Protestants. To be sure, the priests are losing power in Mexico, but they are not dead yet, by any means.

With best wishes to all God's people, I am yours in the work, B. B. BLACHLY.

FREEMASONRY.

THE CHRISTLESS DEGREES AND THOSE THAT BURLESQUE CHRISTIANITY.

IX.—GRAND MASTER ARCHITECT.

No prayer in opening ceremonies. In the obligation the initiate says: "I further promise to adore my God," without designating his individuality or character, and confirms his oath by adding: "So God and his holy evangelists keep me."

Further on reference is made to the "celestial throne of the Great Architect of the Universe," and, (singularly enough) to "the promise which God made to Enoch, Noah, Moses and David, that if through ardor they penetrated into the bowels of the earth, it would not avail unless divine providence permitted it;" all of which is unscriptural and a burlesque. The initiate is also told that Solomon "desired to reward his faithful and meritorious, so that by perfection in art they might be better prepared to approach the throne of God." Reference is also made, "that in the fullness of time God would dwell in a fixed temple"; but nowhere is there an intimation that there is a Christ

X.—ROYAL ARCH DEGREE.

As in the foregoing degree, there are allusions to God and Old Testament characters, the Ark, etc. God is addressed as the "Great Architect of the Universe, adorable God in all"; there is the cube-stone bearing the "ineffable name" of Jehovah; and the entire drama is a religious burlesque. The initiate is told of "the vault of nine arches....beneath the temple, immediately under the Holy of Holies, where the Ark of Alliance was preserved!" In the obligation, the initiate "promises before the Great Architect of the Universe," and finishes by saying: "So God help me in righteousness and equity."

The "Discourse by Grand Orator" is a monstrous perversion of Scriptural history—really a fabulous burlesque of Bible revelation. The man or woman who would waste time in reading the ritual of this degree will find neither Christ nor profit.

XI.—GRAND ELECT, PERFECT AND SUBLIME MASON.

In the opening ceremonies prayer is offered to "Almighty and Sovereign Architect of heaven and earth," to "Jehovah, our Adonai," and "Lord." Old Testament allusions and quotations abound (including the Decalogue) in the initiation. In the prayer (to the G. A. O. T. U.), there are many pious wishes expressed, but no mention of a Redeemer, Advocate, Mediator, or Christ. As in the previous degree, the "Discourse by Grand Orator" is principally a fable, manufactured to glorify Masons and Masonry.

This degree scorns and scoffs at the God of the Bible, and makes a false use of the Decalogue and a profane use of the elements of the Lord's supper. Its legend says that the real name of God was lost until it was found by Masons, engraved on a three-cornered gold plate in the ruins of Enoch! It is surmised that Joe Smith (who was a Mason) may have founded his gold-plate "Book of Mormon" on this degree. Christ has no friends in the actors of this drama.

XII.—KNIGHTS OF THE EAST OR SWORD.

This degree is a "council" affair—not a lodge or a "college". In the opening the "knights" clap their hands five times, then twice, and the "Sovereign Master" exclaims: "Glory to God and our Sovereign!" This sounds a little like egotism. Old Testament Scriptures and characters, including Cyrus, appear numerous in the make-up of this drama. The fable is dreary twaddle. It is a Jewish degree, which completely ignores Christ.

XIII.—PRINCES OF JERUSALEM.

Oriental—Babylonish; Cyrus re-appears, as does Darius, and other Old Testament worthies. Its ritual is religious, but un-Christian, and consequently acceptable to Masons. Christ is not in it, and Christians ought not to be.

XIV.—KNIGHTS OF THE EAST AND WEST.

This degree is said to have "originated in Palestine, in the year 1118," when eleven Knights "took the vows of secrecy, friendship and discretion between the hands of Garinus, Prince and Patriarch of Jerusalem". Like the preceding degrees, it abounds with Old Testament texts and worship (in a minor key), burlesques the Revelation of St. John, and is otherwise blasphemous, as well as sorcerous and sacrilegious. That any Christian can consent to confer it upon any man surpasses belief.

XV.—SOVEREIGN PRINCE OF ROSE CROIX.

This degree is also blasphemous. One of its "signs" is that of "the Good Shepherd," made by crossing the arms on the breast, with hands extended, and eyes raised to heaven. Its "sacred word" is "I. N. R. I.," the initials of the Latin sentence which Pilate had nailed upon the cross of Jesus, meaning, "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews". It seems to have no religious significance in this degree. The full title of the candidate, when he gets through this ritual, is: "Sovereign Prince of Rose Croix de Herodem and Knight of the Eagle and Pelican." He ought to be proud of it!

This degree of "the blood-red cross," we are told, "was founded by the Jesuits, for the purpose of counteracting the insidious attacks of free-thinkers upon the Romish faith". One of its scenes represents a caricature of the hell of the Bible, showing the torments of the damned. Those who have analyzed this degree say that "it clearly proves and shows the identity and oneness of Popery and Masonry".

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Arena for July presents several articles that will find interested readers and awaken various thoughts and emotions. Among these we reckon, first, the initial installment of "the verdict" in the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy over the authorship of the latter's plays. Alfred Russell Wallace, D. C. L., the Marquis of Lorne, Rev. C. A. Bartol, Appleton Morgan, Henry George, and Franklin H. Head decide that Shakespeare wrote his own plays, while O. B. Frothingham and Miss Frances E. Willard accord their authorship to a composite source, and Mr. G. Kruell deems Lord Bacon entitled to the honor. Our Foreign Policy is discussed by W. D. McCracken, A. M.; Bi-metallic Parity, by C. Vincent; The World's (coming) Congress of Religions, by Rev. E. T. Allen; Women Wage-Earners, by Helen Campbell; Innocence at the Price of Ignorance, by Rabbi Schindler; The Money Question, by C. J. Buell; Christ and the Liquor Problem—a plea for wine-bibbing—by George G. Brown, and The Realistic Trend of Modern German Literature. The editor, Mr. Flower, reviews the People's Party and kindred associations, from a political standpoint, under the title of "Pure Democracy vs. Vicious Governmental Favoritism". His plea is a defence of that party and its sentiments. Three stories, by Coulson Kernahan, A. R. Carman and Will Allan Dromgoole, with book reviews, complete the repertory. Boston: Arena Publishing Co.

The Century opens with a freely illustrated paper on July in the Court of Honor at the (World's) Fair, by Royal Cortissoz, and a full-page portrait of a by-gone first-rate actress, Mrs. Sarah Siddons. The Memory of Dean Swift is pleasantly revived in the illustrated sketch of The Author of "Gulliver," by M. O. W. Oliphant. There is, also, a full-page portrait and sketch of Thos. Hardy, the English novelist, by Harriet W. Preston. A White Islander, by Mary H. Catherwood; Salvini's Autobiography (both illustrated), and Others Forgotten, by Wolcott Balestier, are continued. Other illustrated papers are as follows: The Most Picturesque Place in the World (name suppressed), by J. and E. R. Pennell; Balcony Stories, by Grace King; Sarah Siddons, by Edmund Gosse; Old Portsmouth Profiles, by Thos. Bayly Aldrich; Mental Medicine—Treatment of Disease by Suggestion, by Dr. Allan M. Hamilton; Famous Indians—Portraits of Indian chiefs, by C. E. S. Wood; The Russian System of Persecution reviewed by Joseph Jacobs and George Kennan; with several poems and minor articles, and the usual well-filled departments. New York: The Century Co., 33 East 17th St.

No one can take up the Cosmopolitan for July without being at once struck with its numerous attractions in letterpress and pencil. Three full-page frontispieces illustrate Camille Flammarion's Omega, The Last Days of the World, which has also other characteristic engravings. An illustrated epic poem, by H. H. Boyesen, is entitled The Parley of the Kings. The other illustrated papers are as follows: Pere Vulcan's Confession, by Francois Coppee. The Cliff-Dwellers of New York City, by E. N. Blake; The Pilot of Belle Amour, by Gilbert Parker; Engineering With a Camera in the Canons of the Colorado, by Robert B. Stanton; The Great Railway Systems of the Central and Southern Pacific Companies, by F. S. Stratton, and A Turning Point in the Arts, by Chas. DeKay. There are also poems and miscellaneous papers in good variety, with literary and science notes, by several able contributors. * * * The Cosmopolitan is now furnished by newsdealers for 12½ cents per monthly number, making it the cheapest of the literary monthlies.

First of the strong and attractive table of contents of the July number of the Social Economist is the article, Our National Object Lesson, showing the editor's idea of the cause that has so suddenly converted speculative prosperity into depression and alarm, which he attributes to Mr. Cleveland's administration. There are other papers on topics of national interest, as follows: The Economic Value of Altruism, by Lewis G. Janes; Restriction of Immigration Opposed, by Ellen B. Dietrick; The End of War—How to be Accomplished, by Wm. H. Jeffrey; Economic Direction of Thrift, by Wilbur Aldrich; A Missing Link in Political Reform, by Joel Benton; Protection and the Empire, from the London, Eng., Nineteenth Century; Among the Magazines, by Free Lance; in the editorial crucible live questions of the day are tersely treated, and the number closes with the customary Book Reviews. Published at 34 Union Square, East, New York City.

The Cottage Hearth for July is replete with light literature for home reading, in the form of the following illustrated stories and sketches and the usual household departments. For a frontispiece we have a full-page illustration, showing the old-time night-watchman on duty. The Story of Sante, by Will E. Beard; At Goettingen, by Margaret J. Preston; Mr. Pennington's Wine, by E. D. Barry; An Opportune Eavesdropper, by Georgia A. Peck; Harper's Deliverance, by Birch Hardwick; Tom Starbuck's Adventure, by Capt. J. H. B. Robinson; The Old Watchman, by H. Martin Beal; Miss Penn's Daughter, by Maria L. Pool; The Goldfinch Girl and the Bandits, by Chas. E. Brimblecom. Boston: W. A. Wilde & Co., 25 Bromfield St.

OBITUARY.

REV. DR. E. P. THWING, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y., A VALUED CORRESPONDENT OF THE "CYNOSURE".

(From the San Francisco, Cal., Pacific, June 28, 1893.)

It is with a sad heart that I take up my pen to write a few words concerning the death of Rev. E. P. Thwing, Ph.D. M.D. It seems almost impossible that he is no longer with us. It was but a short time since that his name appeared in the Pacific as a regular contributor. But he is dead, now; the pen that was so facile and which was wielded with so much grace will no longer write the thoughts of the noble heart that has passed away. His last sad end is narrated to me in a letter just received from his attending physician, in these words:

"CANTON, China, May 17, 1893.

"A week ago last evening, May 9th, I was called hastily by Dr. Beattie in consultation over the case of Dr. Thwing on Shameen (Chinese concession to foreigners). He had been suffering from typhoid fever, and at 5 P. M. perforation of the bowels took place, throwing Dr. Thwing into collapse, from which he did not rally. Dr. Beattie being unwell, I asked him to go home, and with only Miss Gertrude Thwing, watched by the bedside until 10 P. M., when the spirit of this godly man passed to the other world calmly, as one falling to sleep. Though unconscious, his noble and expressive face showed he was at peace. It seemed to say, 'All is well,' as in silent prayer we commended his spirit to God. We would gladly have sung a verse of his favorite hymn, 'Jesus, lover of my soul,' but in the adjoining room, Mrs. Thwing, his wife, lay prostrated with the same disease, and in a very weak condition, unable to move. Her sweet submission was but characteristic of her lovely Christian life."

In these words has Dr. Swan described his last hours on earth. A year ago, in company with his wife, son, daughter and daughter-in-law, he went to China, to do what he could in aiding the work of missions, and many of us have read his letters with profit and delight; but he has sent his last letter to the Pacific, and he sleeps now on the shores of that continent which his pen has so often described. Three of his children are on the mission fields, toiling to uplift the down-trodden and the degraded. He is dead, but I seem still to hear him sing one of my favorite hymns, "Anywhere with Jesus I can safely go." Yes, it was just as near to heaven from China as from America, and though he did not toil long in the foreign field, he did what he could. Others will write of his work and achievements, but I shall never forget how he put his arms around me two years ago in Brooklyn, and bade me welcome to his home and his fireside. And now he waits for us in yonder palaces of glory, where his tongue will sing still sweeter and holier songs

IN BRIEF.

GREAT NATURAL ICE HOUSE.

In the north side of Stone Mountain, six miles from the mouth of Stony Creek, in Scott county, Virginia, has been discovered a natural ice-house, on a grand scale. One of the old settlers first discovered it about 1880, but owing to the fact that the land on which it is situated could not be bought he refused to tell its whereabouts, and would only take ice from it in case of sickness.

He died without revealing the secret to even his own family, and but for a party of "seng" diggers entering the region it might have remained a secret for generations, as it is situated on an unfrequented part of the mountain.

The ice was only protected from the rays of the sun by a thick growth of moss resembling a texture, and like the moss that can be seen dangling from the oaks of Louisiana and Texas. Its formation was after the fashion of a coal vein, being a few inches thick in some places, while several feet in others. The formation indicates that it had been spread over the surface in a liquid state and then congealed. By what process it freezes or was frozen is a matter of conjecture at this stage of investigation. Some think it was formed in the winter, and had been protected since by the dense growth of moss which covers it, while the more plausible theory is that beneath the bed is situated a great natural laboratory whose function is a formation of ether, and the process of freezing goes steadily on through the heat as well as the cold. The growth of moss resembles the hanging moss around Hudson Bay and indicates a frigid temperature. The bed covers one acre, and if it proves inexhaustible it will be valuable, since it is located near the Three C's railroad.—St. Louis Republic.

The Christian Cynosure.

HENRY M. HUGUNIN - - - - Editor.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1893.

BOYS' BRIGADES AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

The London Christian of June 8th says:

The Boys' Brigade, which has just had its second May meeting, is an institution which, on account of its methods, its associations, and its tendencies, is not accepted by many as a Christian agency; nay, they distinctly, though sorrowfully, declare it to be anti-Christian. They do not judge the spirit and aim of its founders; and they do not deny that the honest purpose of many who support it is to make good Christians of the boys. They maintain, however, and we think they are right in maintaining, that the necessity of such a quasi-military organization has never been proved.

One very serious objection to the prevalent craze for Boys' Brigades is, that it not only tends to glorify war and familiarize the minds of our youth with its vain pageantry, but it serves as a training school for the secret orders.

Secret societies were modeled after the military system. In common they teach and demand both secrecy and obedience. Every military encampment has its "word" and countersign. No one can pass the lines who does not give it. The "signs, grips and passwords" of the secret orders are only an elaboration of the military system. Jesuitism, one of the oldest and most pernicious of the secret societies, is essentially military in all its details. Loyola, its founder, owed his great success to the fact that he so carefully followed the military system.

On a recent morning we read the following from a large bill posted by the wayside:

The Boys' Brigade will meet for parade at "Camp Russell," east of the Second church. None will be admitted except such as can give the countersign.

We had heard of no emergency that called for a military encampment, and did not consider a foreign invasion was imminent. But we were confident that if these boys learned a secret countersign which they must inviolably keep, they had taken their first step in the secret lodge system, and would, ere long, be likely to graduate as Freemasons.

The so-called minor secret societies all claim that they have no secrets, except the "signs of recognition." On this ground many good people excuse them, and yet they are manifestly the stepping-stones to the more objectionable orders.

Do we want to initiate our boys in a similar system of secrecy?

THE TRUE LIGHT SHINING ON HIM.

A gentleman in Massachusetts, who is legitimately familiar with the secret work of the Masons and Odd-fellows, writes: "In talking with a brother Odd-fellow, who has been through the Encampment and wants to take the P. M. degree, he says that he has no respect or confidence in any one who would take an oath and then deliberately break it. He says that if a Mason or Odd-fellow wants to get out, let him, and let him keep his mouth shut about it, as he has given his pledge of honor that he would do, even though he was expelled from the order. He asks: 'How can an honorable man expose an order that he has been a member of, after having taken obligations to secrecy that all members must take?'"

The answer is this:

It is true that no real Christian, having seen the true character of the order, can innocently remain a member; nor, having seen its anti-Christian character, can he innocently refuse to lift a warning voice against the institution, notwithstanding the fact that former lodge brethren will denounce him and endeavor to injure his character for so doing. While good men differ as to the duty of disclosing the so-called secret work or ritual of the order, the Word of God seems plain. It is doubtless safe to assume that no Christian knowing the obligations and teachings of the order would ever join, and, therefore, such ignorantly fall into sin. Indeed, it is clear from Leviticus 5: 4, 5, that even if the lodge obligation proved to be only a promise to do good, guilt would be incurred and confession must follow. He must help fulfill the declaration of Christ, "There is nothing hidden that shall not be revealed." He must show others the character of the order, and he cannot do this fully without forever renouncing his lodge allegiance and revealing the secrets of the institution—Pres. J. Blanchard, in Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated, pp. 36, 37.

"We all read the Cynosure with much interest," resumes our Massachusetts friend. "While I am not prepared to renounce the lodge at present, I will say that since reading the Cynosure I feel very different toward it than I did before. I see many things in a different light. I have not attended a Masonic meeting since you were in —, and I don't intend to go any more.... If I ever left the lodge, I do not think I should ever attempt to expose it. The most I would ever do would be to circulate the National Christian Association's literature, and that is about enough, as I look at it—or it would be for me."

We have emphasized our friend's last sentence, for it contains a most important fact. With his present light, we could hardly expect that he would utterly renounce his lodge affiliations, or give utterance to the secret work. Nor is it necessary that he should, for it has been made public so widely and so often that it is no longer a novelty. If he circulates the N. C. A. literature, as he premises that he may, he will have an opportunity, to be repeated continually, of convincing men that the secret system is Christless, un-American, and damaging to the best interests of the state, the church and the home; and when he is thoroughly converted from the errors of the lodge, as we earnestly pray that he may be, he will care little for the sanctity of the murderous oaths which he has taken.

THE NEW "ARMY OF LIBERTY."

Reference was made in last week's Cynosure to a new secret society—the "Army of Liberty"—originating in Kansas, for the purpose of removing the prohibition law from the statute books of the State, by voting at all elections for whisky-men only, regardless of party affiliations.

The following is the obligation of this disreputable society, which has a military organization, and is capable of doing an immense amount of mischief unless opposed with overwhelming force:

"I (each candidate will pronounce his name), of my own free will and accord, do most solemnly promise, declare, and swear that I will support and maintain the Constitution of the United States and that of the State of Kansas, and the constitution and by-laws of the A. of L. That I will obey all the orders issued and commands given by the general commanding the Department of Kansas, and render obedience to all superior officers. That I will ever conceal and never reveal any of the secret work of the A. of L., or any of its pass-words, signs, tokens, or grips, or divulge to any person whomsoever the name of any of its members, except to those who first prove themselves to be worthy members of the A. of L. I do further solemnly swear that, regardless of party affiliations, I will not support any person as a candidate for office or at the polls, who is not a member of the A. of L., or in full sympathy with its principles and pledged to support the same.

"I do furthermore solemnly swear that I will use all lawful means in my power to secure the repeal of all sumptuary laws now in force in this State, and to secure the resubmission of any sumptuary amendment of the constitution of the State, and particularly that known as the Prohibitory amendment, to the people for their decision through the ballot-box.

"All of which I do most solemnly swear without hesitation, equivocation, mental reservation or evasion on my part, under no less a penalty than that of having my name published officially to the A. of L. as being void of principle, destitute of honor, unworthy of trust or confidence, and of being branded as a traitor and a spy and not entitled to respect or fellowship; to the faithful performance of which I pledge my sacred word of honor. So help me God and keep me steadfast."

WORLD'S FAIR SUNDAY OPENING.

There seems to be a healthy revulsion of feeling in reference to the opening of the World's Fair on Sabbath. Even the Inter Ocean, which has no scruples as to issuing a flaring Sunday edition, in its issue of last Saturday, put in an earnest plea for closing the gates of the Fair on Sabbath. The arguments advanced are: That "every director who voted for Sunday opening has been greatly disappointed in the result."

These men "voted to open the gates because they thought that open gates on Sunday would greatly accommodate the working people and others who would find it difficult to attend on other days of the week. They now know they were all mistaken in that expectation. The working people do not go on Sundays nor many others." "The Sunday attendance has steadily decreased, until last Sunday, July 2, there were only a little over 47,000 to pass through the gates. The failure is apparent to everybody, and the directors will deceive no one but themselves by closing their eyes to the facts."

"As practical business men," continues the Inter Ocean, "they must see that while Sunday opening does not pay per se, it is a great loser in another way. The hundreds of thousands who conscientiously believe in Sunday observance, shut out of the Fair by their action in endeavoring to accommodate the people, are an important factor in the Fair's success. They certainly miscalculated the strength of the hold the American Sabbath had on the country at large. That hold is not confined to church members or to those who are regular attendants upon church. Thinking men from all classes are to be found speaking out against making all days of the week alike.

"This great Fair is a national institution, and if, as such, it sets the pace for seven days per week of labor, what is to become of the one day in seven for rest that the poets and philosophers have told us was a necessity? As one man writing the Inter Ocean, 'from a working man's point of view,' says: 'If this great national enterprise gives us this precedent, how long will it be before our great firms and corporations will require thirty days for a month's work?' The question is farther reaching than the directors seem to think. They are not simply contending against religious people and inherited ideas, but are arousing opposition where they have tried most to please. The workingmen may yet prove the most energetic opponents of Sunday opening."

Thus, aside from any religious consideration, people begin to see where habitual desecration of the Sabbath is likely to lead them—into the slavery of despotic labor affiliations, from which it will be difficult to deliver themselves. It is a well established fact, that wherever an infraction of God's laws has been made by any community, the religious freedom thus sought by disobedience has generally proved disastrous in one form or another.

REMINISCENT.

On Monday week, June 26, was the sixtieth anniversary of the organization of the First Presbyterian church in Chicago, now situated at the corner of Indiana avenue and Twenty-first street. In honor of the occasion, Rev. J. H. Barrows, D.D., the present pastor, on the previous day, held special services, the house being crowded with an attentive congregation. After appropriate prayer and songs of praise, Dr. Barrows preached from Isaiah 35: 1, and John 8: 32.

This was the first Christian church organized in this city, which, at that day, including Fort Dearborn, where the first services were held, had 300 inhabitants. The number of original members was twenty-six, sixteen of whom belonged in the Fort. The founder and first pastor was Rev. Jeremiah Porter, who has survived all his successors in that pulpit except the present incumbent. Dr. Barrows referred to these facts in his sermon, and added: "When Mr. Porter came to Chicago he met here a few Christians—among them Philo Carpenter, who had begun a Sunday-school, and John Wright, whom he had known in Massachusetts."

Philo Carpenter arrived in Chicago in July, 1832; he was the first druggist in the city, and imported the first dray. He was also the secretary and treasurer of the first temperance society organized here—about the time that the First church was formed.

"Of the Sunday-school, we have been told by one of the parties in the enterprise," says Hurlbut's "Chicago Antiquities," "that it was on a fine summer Sunday, the 19th of August, 1832, when a few individuals, including Luther Childs, Mrs. Capt. Seth Johnson, Mrs. Chas. Taylor, the Misses Noble (daughters of Mark Noble), and Philo Carpenter, organized the first Sunday-school in Chicago." This Sunday-school met in several locations before the first $600 frame church of the society was ready for use. It was built at the southwest corner of Lake and Clark streets, a little back of the Sherman House. "Mr. Carpenter was the superintendent, and John Wright carried its library in a silk handkerchief."

The First church now registers more than 1,100 members, and has, since its organization, enrolled more than 4,000 communicants. "What," asked Dr. Barrows, "what would Jeremiah Porter and Philo Carpenter have said, had the angelic announcement been made to them that within sixty years their town of 300 inhabitants was to become a metropolitan city, ranking only a little below the brilliant capital of France, with thirty languages spoken on its streets; that the one pioneer church would be girdled by 300 other churches and five theological seminaries, and that after successive removals southward the church would find its stately home in a region so remote as this, in the vicinity of splendid avenues and palatial houses?"

Mr. Carpenter has left behind him many memories of his Christian beneficence and the name of a worthy reformer, whose works yet remain to bless his fellow-men.

CATHOLIC RIOT AT MONTREAL.

Religious persecution cropped out, last Saturday and Sabbath, at Montreal, Can., where the International Christian Endeavor Convention, composed of 16,000 delegates, is in session.

Members of the convention had gathered in the big tent, and were listening to Anthony Comstock's lecture, on Saturday, entitled "Foes to Society, Church and State". It was during its delivery that the rabble first appeared. It consisted of about 300 quarrymen—French-Canadian Catholics, fanatical in the extreme, regarding their religion as sacred above all other things, and intolerant of any criticism. They remained comparatively quiet while Mr. Comstock was speaking; but when Mr. Comstock was followed by Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, the founder of the Young Women's Christian Association, her appearance on the platform was the signal for an outbreak on the part of the mob, and it was not until the police had charged on the disturbers and arrested two of the ring-leaders that she could be heard.

On Sunday a mob of French-Canadian Catholics, about 500 strong, formed on the Champ de Mars. Fears of a serious onslaught induced the chief of police to summon his forces. In the meantime Protestant volunteers (local militia) organized to resist the Catholics, to the number of about 1,000. Evening services by the members of the convention had been announced in seven up-town churches, and attempts were made by the rioters to break up these gatherings, but these proved unsuccessful, and some offenders were arrested and locked up.

Under the protection and escort of the Protestant soldiers, members of the convention were preserved from harm.

ASSERTING THEIR RIGHTS.

The Colored Men's National Protective Association held a convention in this city recently. Geo. E. Taylor presided, and delivered his annual address, in the course of which he spoke of the objects of the association. He said that these mean the social, moral, and educational uplifting of the Negro, and touched briefly on the questions affecting the welfare of the race. He said a scheme of Negro colonization was perhaps the most feasible plan of bettering the condition of the colored people.

Hon. Frederick Douglass was introduced to the audience as "the sage of the colored race, and the peer of any orator of the nineteenth century." In addressing the convention, he said:

Truth is from everlasting to everlasting. It is eternal, and can never pass away. Such a truth is man's right to liberty, and all that is necessary to develop him into perfect manhood. Anything beneath the sky that interferes with the relation of this right of men and women to develop every organ and every faculty with which we are possessed and that impedes our progress is wrong, and must be moved out of the way. [Applause.]

I don't think we are wise in assuming that we constitute a problem before the minds of the people of the United States. The question is whether the people are willing and able to make the Constitution of this land, which they have sworn to support, the law of the land. The problem of Negro slavery was solved nearly thirty years ago, when Abraham Lincoln issued his proclamation of freedom, and the problem of Negro citizenship was settled by the amendment to the Constitution conferring citizenship upon the men of the colored race. What's the matter with the Negro? He's all right. [Applause.]

Other addresses were given by Pres. Krevan, of Fisk University, at Nashville, Tenn., and Mrs. M. R. M. Wallace, of Chicago.

At the evening session, "Aunt Laura" Haviland (our venerable and esteemed co-worker in the anti-secrecy cause) was presented to the audience by Mrs. Thurman, of Michigan. Says the Inter-Ocean: "The lady is 84 years of age, and at one time she was station-keeper at the underground railway for freeing the slaves. She has written a book giving an account of her services in the cause of the oppressed. She was given a great reception, and in a feeling address she said it was the proudest moment of her life. She was given a standing vote of thanks and had a golden badge pinned on her breast, making her an honorary member of the association."

Papers were read, on "Emigration" and "What of the Negro?"

When the report of the Committee on Resolutions was read, the following section relating to the World's Fair caused a lively debate:

WHEREAS, It has been published that the 25th day of August has been set apart as colored folks' or jubilee day at the World's Fair,

Resolved, That such resolution meets our most emphatic disapproval, and we earnestly recommend to the colored people throughout the country that no attention be paid by them to the setting apart of that day, and that they refrain from making any demonstration on Aug. 25, but that, on the contrary, they do all they can to discourage it.

Mrs. Thurman made a plea against the resolution, while J. H. Porter and Miss Wells stoutly defended it, as did the majority of the other speakers. It was carried by an overwhelming majority. Other sections of the report condemned lynch law, the "jim crow" car system of the South, and the proposed annexation of Hawaii by the United States.

In the evening a banquet and reception were tendered the visiting delegates by the colored people of Chicago at Central Hall.

THE POPE AND AMERICAN SCHOOLS.

The New York Witness thinks that in his recent encyclical to Cardinal Gibbons, "Pope Leo XIII. has proved himself an acrobat of great ability; he has achieved the feat of riding two horses galloping in opposite directions, and that without exhibiting the slightest sign of nervousness or discomfort."

The following is the Witness' version of that encyclical:

Our dear brothers Satolli and Gibbons and Ireland have decided that Roman Catholics may send their children to the public schools, and they are quite right; I agree with them heartily. But, then, there is dear brother Corrigan of New York, and some others, who insist that Roman Catholic children should be compelled to attend the parish schools, and he is right, too, because that is what the church has always taught, and of course that is what Satolli meant and what I meant all along. Bless you, my children, bless you! you all mean the same thing, of course; now get together and be happy.

In the meantime, as another contemporary expresses it, "thinking Catholics are finding out that the American public school is an institution they can well afford to patronize by making their children partakers of its acknowledged benefits and incalculable advantages of thorough education. They and their Protestant friends accord in the opinion that the public school system can get along and should get along without church domination or church interference of any sort."

KNOWING THE TRUTH YET FEARING TO TELL IT.

[From a letter to Rev. J. P. Stoddard.]

DEAR BRO.:—I am glad to hear that you can come, for no one could fill your place, as the enemy would say you could not prove your statements. I have fought some battles on a small scale. Two of our trustees invited a Masonic minister to —, and he accepted for three years. I protested against his coming, and said that I would leave the church if he came. Coming to me, he said he had not been in a Masonic lodge for twenty years, and that he never left a prayer meeting to attend the lodge. I asked him if he was willing to renounce it. He said: "You would not have me hurt people's feelings? I replied: Do you not hurt people's feelings when you denounce liquor and gambling? I got him sent to another station, and we have a very fine man in his place; at least he has a good report. I will be prepared to receive you—only let me know a few days before you come."

Men who love their secret orders, yet find in them much that is contrary to the practice of a true Christian life, often make this compromise with their consciences. They forsake the lodge, so far as attendance goes, but they have not the heart to separate themselves from it; yet separation from evil is a Bible requirement, when one's heart is given to the Lord.

"NOBLES OF THE MYSTIC SHRINE."

Among the expositions of important secret societies for sale at this office, yet not advertised in our catalogues, is that of the "Mystic Shrine Illustrated;" the full ritual in use in the "temples" of the "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine" in New York and other localities.

That this order exists and is made up entirely of Freemasons who have taken the highest degrees in the fraternity, is well known; yet the more zealous of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masons deem it an un-Masonic annex to Freemasonry. Ostensibly it is convivial in its character, but the exposition shows that it was "primarily instituted for the purpose of promoting the organization and perfection of an Arabian and Egyptian Inquisition, or vigilance committee, to dispense justice and execute punishments upon criminals whom the tardy law did not reach to the measure of their crime."

One portion of the initiation ceremonies represents the hanging of a culprit upon a gallows; another, a headsman, with axe and block, and a severed human head, showing that another culprit has been executed by decapitation. Another culprit is also threatened with trial and execution. Indeed, it would be difficult to conceive, amid the horrors of the initiation, any semblance of the conviviality for which the order, among the uninitiated, is so esteemed.

"MODERN WOODMEN."

L. E. Cole, of Coleridge, Neb., contributes to the Christian Conservator (Dayton, Ohio), the following touching this new secret society, about which we have recently received inquiries:

Wrapped around a parcel of goods purchased of one of our merchants I found a copy of an organ of the above named order, containing an address of a prominent member and official of said order in eulogy of the same. The writer indulges in a visionary portrait of the name of the order, especially exulting over the term modern, and shows the mildness of its initiatory service compared with the initiation into the ancient mysteries. He sets forth the object of the order and declares it to be a teacher of friendship and morality, and of charity that extends beyond the grave. He declares its foundation stone to be practical fraternity, and that it enables its members, while living, to make preparation for the contingency of death. He enumerates several other virtues belonging to this modern order, and then takes up the question of its practicability and says:

"Wood craft bears the stamp of age. It is practical because it is popular, progressive, equitable; because it is confined to the States of Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Michigan, the two Dakotas, Colorado and Missouri, except the cities of Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and St. Louis, a garden spot that is the healthiest on earth; a territory across which no epidemic has ever been able to sweep. Practical, because it does not include the great cities within its territory; because it excludes from membership the vicious and depraved; because those engaged in hazardous occupations cannot become members. Practical, because its membership is made up of young and progressive men. And practical, because the only warfare it wages is for the relief of its members, living, and the widows and orphans of its members, dead."

These are but a few of the strange and contradictory statements contained in the address.

Readers of the Cynosure will readily discover the points of difference between the doctrines of charity and brotherly love as interpreted by this new man-trapping device and those which distinguish the Christian religion. Call the "Woodmen" only a lot of self-insurers—and they are practically nothing else—they surround themselves with the silly arcana of the lodge and bind themselves with an obligation to help each other, and no one else. If the church of Christ, which bears the reputation among the world's people of being bigoted and exclusive, had no broader basis of charity than this society, it would be unworthy of its glorious Founder, who sent forth his command to DO GOOD TO ALL MEN, and permits WHOSOEVER WILL to come and partake of its benefits and blessings.

A NEW FRIEND.

In ordering anti-secrecy literature, a brother writes to me: "I am in full sympathy with you in your work towards extirpating these enemies of Christ's church and civilization."

Thus God is raising up witnesses in all parts of our land, and lengthening the roll of those who are willing to be counted on the Lord's side in this contest with the anti-Christ of to-day. Who will add another name to the list? J. P. S.

THE HOME.

THE SECRET OF THE SAINTS.

To play through life a perfect part
Unnoticed and unknown,
To seek no rest in any heart,
Save in God's heart alone;
In little things to own no will,
To have no share in great,
To find the labor ready still,
And for the crown to wait;

Upon the brow to bear no trace
Of more than common care,
To write no secret in the face
For men to read it there:
The daily cross to clasp and bless
With such familiar zeal
As hides from all, that not the less
The daily weight you feel;

In toils that praise will never pay
To see your life go past,
To meet in every coming day
Twin sister of the last;
To hear of high, heroic things,
And yield them reverence due,
But feel life's daily offerings
Are far more fit for you;

To woo no secret, soft disguise
To which self-love is prone,
Unnoticed by all other eyes,
Unworthy in your own;
To yield with such a happy art
That no one thinks you care,
And say to your poor, bleeding heart,
"How little canst thou bear!"

Oh! 'tis a pathway hard to choose,
A struggle hard to share,
For human pride would still refuse
The nameless trials there;
But since we know the gate is low
That leads to heavenly bliss,
What higher grace could God bestow
Than such a life as this!

—Words of Faith.

BLACK LAKE.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

You have, no doubt, heard of Iceland, reader. Then you know that it contains a great many hot springs, or geysers. One especially near the eastern coast was formerly called Black Lake, because, on the eastern side, where the boiling waters fell it had formed a lake, which was a mile long by half a mile wide. The waters, as black as ink, seethed and bubbled, while the steam rose night and day, like vapor from a boiling cauldron.

At the time when my story opens, Capt. Campbell, an American sea-captain, had anchored his ship, a fast-sailing frigate, off the eastern coast of Iceland, and was spending a few days on the island, where his brother, the Rev. Mr. Campbell, lived. Capt. Campbell was accompanied by his son, a bright lad of seventeen. The boy was intensely interested with the novelty of the island and accompanied his father in all his walks and rambles. But the lad's interest and excitement was brought to a sudden close by a tragic event which occurred about three days before they left the island. It was a tragic event which the boy will never forget while he lives.

Capt. Campbell and his brother, together with the boy Robert, had strolled out, one pleasant afternoon, and, as Black Lake was only half a mile from the Rev. Mr. Campbell's residence, they visited it. As they wandered along its banks, which, owing to its intense heat, were bare of vegetation, Robert, who had lagged behind, was surprised to see a sturdy-looking boy, about his own age, standing before him.

"Why," where did you come from?" he said in astonishment.

"Mads Jagel," the boy said, pointing to himself. "I guide you; I show you the way."

"We know the way," Robert said; "my uncle lives here; but you can walk with me if you wish;" and so they walked along the margin of the lake, following the men, who were some distance in advance. A very disreputable-looking dog trotted behind them. "Skal," said the boy to Robert, pointing at the dog; "him my dog; him very good dog." Robert thought him the most ill-looking cur that he had ever seen.

They walked along, the boy Mads Jagel talking in his broken English, and finding in Robert an interested listener, when suddenly the dog ran between Robert's feet, and the boy, startled at the suddenness of the shock, nearly lost his balance, and narrowly escaped falling into the lake. But the dog stumbled as Robert sprang away from him, lost his foothold and, rolling down the steep bank, disappeared beneath the boiling water of the lake.

Robert stood transfixed for a moment, watching the spot where the dog disappeared. But he was suddenly awakened to a sense of his situation by a grip like iron upon his shoulder, and to see the dark eyes of Mads Jagel glaring like coals of fire into his own. It was marvelous what strength existed in those boyish hands that gripped his shoulders, and to his amazement he felt himself drawn towards the brink of the boiling lake.

"What are you doing?" said Robert.

"You kill Skal; I kill you," he said.

Robert struggled with the energy of despair, but in vain; he was slowly, but surely, being forced into the lake.

"Oh, Mads," he cried, "you know I did not kill your Skal. He stumbled and fell. Oh, don't kill me, Mads," he cried. "I will buy you two, four dogs with ears as soft as silk."

"There is no more Skal," said Mads briefly; and again the boyish hands gripped him and he was being forced into the lake. "Oh, God! God of my fathers!" Robert cried, "help me; don't let him kill me!" The hands of Mads Jagel dropped from Robert's shoulder and he gazed at him with awe and terror depicted upon his countenance.

"You call upon God? Your fathers' God?"

"Yes," said Robert, "and he will be angry with you if you kill me."

Mads Jagel drew close to Robert Campbell's side and said: "Listen to me. Your fathers' God, my fathers' God, too;" pointing upward. "Go home now; come here to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock."

Robert promised; and only too glad to escape from the clutches of Mads Jagel, walked slowly and wearily home.

That night a fearful storm arose. The sea roared, and the house shook to its very foundations. Robert Campbell, lying in his little attic, could not sleep, but lay awake, listening to the storm and thinking of his strange adventure. Why did Mads Jagel wish to see him; he dreaded to meet him, but he must keep his promise.

The morning dawned bright and beautiful, but the wind blew fiercely. Robert sat by the window and watched the stunted birches in the yard as they bent to the fury of the gale. As the hands of the clock neared the hour of ten he left the house and ran down the footpath to the Black Lake.

No one was there. He sat down upon a rock and watched the dark turbid waters as they seethed and bubbled, and said to himself: "God alone prevented that awful place from being my grave last night." The sight made him nervous, and, turning his back to it, he sat waiting.

Soon he heard a footstep, and looking around, he saw Mads Jagel standing by his side, holding by a dog-chain the most beautiful dog, Robert thought, he had ever seen. He was snow-white, with long, silken ears, soft curling hair, and great brown eyes that beamed with almost human intelligence. "Why, Mads Jagel," said Robert, "what a beautiful dog! What are you going to do with him?"

Mads quietly placed the chain in Robert's hand, saying, "Him my dog; him your dog now." Then, drawing close to Robert, he said: "Listen! my Skal die; I try to kill you, but my fathers' God would be angry, and so I let you go."

"But, Mads," said Robert, "why don't you keep the dog yourself, now that you have no dog in Skal's place?"

Mads shook his head slowly. "There is no more Skal," he said. "Listen! When you go to your home in America, take the dog with you and call him Mads Jagel, and you will think of me sometimes."

"Think of you?" Robert cried, embracing him impulsively; "I shall never forget you."

"Then I go," he said; and started to run. Looking back, he waved his cap above his head crying, Himegang, Auf wiedersehen. "Auf wiedersehen!" cried Robert; "We'll meet again."

But Mads Jagel was mistaken. Robert Campbell never saw his little German friend again; but, years afterwards, while living in his beautiful prairie home in Illinois, strangers observed that he was followed wherever he went by a beautiful white dog. And many times in the soft summer twilight, and during the long winter evenings, he related the above story to his friends who wished to know why he called the beautiful creature by the singular name of Mads Jagel.

A STREET ANGEL.

Winifred Dawson stood on the doorsteps of her own house, at the end of a busy day, feeling tired but very happy. She had been helping down at the Parish Mission Room. There was a good deal of pressing work on hand there, and her offer of giving, if able, increased help every day during the coming busy season had been received with warm gratitude. She was clever at cutting out charity clothes, clever at book-keeping, willing to carry any amount of messages to the homes in the poor districts, as well as able to take her own part in the constant meetings and classes. Her ready help and promise to consult her mother about undertaking an important daily share for the future had been appreciated by the workers, whose hands were full. One of them, more gushing than the rest, had called her their "Angel of Help". Even without the expression of appreciation, Winifred would have found happiness in helping others, and her heart this evening was aglow.

On entering her home she turned into the dining-room; the supper things were still on the table, but every one had apparently finished supper.

"How late you are!" said her mother.

"I stayed for the prayer meeting; and afterward there was so much to arrange for next week."

"I don't like you coming back alone so late."

"Miss Benson walked with me as far as the corner."

"Well, make haste now and take your supper; it puts the servants out to keep it as late as this."

"I am sorry," murmured Winifred, feeling as though she had received a dash of cold water.

"You couldn't help it, I suppose," said her mother, bringing some work she was busy finishing to the light on the supper table, with the observation that she had let the drawing-room fire go out, as it was not worth while keeping up two fires and two lamps.

"Are you very tired?" asked Winifred, noticing her mother's fagged looks as she sat at work.

"Very tired. There has been no end to the things to be done and thought of all day. And then it has been so worrying because your grandmother has begun to say that she cannot put up with Mary any longer, and that she must look out for another maid. She told her so this evening, and I see that it has quite unsettled Mary. She was really just getting into all the ways nicely, and your grandmother was only saying so herself the other day. The truth is, being so much alone all day has a depressing effect on her spirits; it makes her thoughts go back to old times, and then from being sad she grows irritable, and thinks Mary can do nothing right. I reproach myself for not staying more with her and amusing her, but there are always so many calls in other directions that it is not easy to manage."

She was an indulgent mother, and not one to complain; she was not thinking of reproaching Winifred by her words, but they smote like sharp swords.

As by one sudden flash she saw it all—how she had been half promising to undertake fresh work outside, when her presence and time were wanted more instead of less than usual in her own home.

Her resolution was quickly taken. She would do all she could to help the outside work, but not more than she could consistently with her home claims.

A street angel! Was that what she had been? she asked herself with startled horror—a "street angel," as the Germans call those who are very sweet and pleasant outside their homes, but not so sweet and pleasant at home! With her whole heart she shrank back in horror from the charge which as yet no one had put into words. Her thoughts ran rapidly from Bible words to words she once heard Mr. Spurgeon say: "Let them first show piety at home, and to requite their parents; for that is good and acceptable before God."

"Drawing-room saints—every-day saints," had been the theme on which at a drawing-room gathering she had heard the well-known speaker say words like these: "Saints! Somebody says, 'Oh, yes, I could be a saint if I had not got to stay at home and nurse my grandmother. If I could go and nurse somebody else's grandmother I think I could be a saint.'"

She also remembered reading a paragraph: "Now that my father is blind, and my mother is bedridden, there is nothing for me to do at home, so I think I shall go out as a hospital nurse!"

The next day and the day after Winifred's grandmother had a delightful time.

It is Winifred's mother and all those in her home that have the best reason to think her "an angel of help," but the outside workers know it, too, and feel that, as far as the possibilities of her life allow, they may reckon on all the help she can give; for she strives earnestly to fulfill both branches of service to the glory of God her Master, and no one ever dreams of calling her a "street angel."—British Evangelist.

HOW THE S. P. C. C. ORIGINATED.

On a thriving farm up in central New York a happy young wife goes singing about her household work to-day who once, as a helpless, wretched waif in the great city, through her very helplessness and misery, stirred up a social revolution whose waves beat literally upon the farthest shores. The story of little Mary Ellen moved New York eighteen years ago as it had scarce ever been stirred by news of disaster or distress before. In the simple but eloquent language of the public record it is thus told:

In the summer of 1874 a poor woman lay dying in the last stages of consumption in a miserable little room on the top floor of a big tenement in this city. A Methodist missionary, visiting among the poor, found her there and asked what he could do to soothe her sufferings. "My time is short," said the sick woman, "but I cannot die in peace while the miserable little girl whom they call Mary Ellen is being beaten day and night by her step-mother next door to my room." She told how the screams of the child were heard at all hours. She was locked in the room, she understood. It had been so for months, while she had been lying ill there. Prompted by the natural instincts of humanity, the missionary sought the aid of the police, but she was told that it was necessary to furnish evidence before an arrest could be made. "Unless you can prove that an offence has been committed we can not interfere, and all you know is hearsay." She next went to several benevolent societies in the city whose object is to care for children, and asked their interference in behalf of the child. The reply was: "If the child is legally brought to us, and is a proper subject, we will take it; otherwise we can not act in the matter." In turn then she consulted several excellent, charitable citizens as to what she should do. They replied: "It is a dangerous thing to interfere between parent and child, and you might get yourself into trouble if you did so, as parents are proverbially the best guardians of their own children." Finally in despair, with the piteous appeals of the dying woman ringing in her ears, she said: "I will make one more effort to save the child. There is one man in this city who has never turned a deaf ear to the cry of the helpless, and who has spent his life in just this work for the benefit of unoffending animals. I will go to Henry Bergh."

She went, and the great friend of the dumb brute found a way. "The child is an animal," he said, "if there is no justice for it as a human being, it shall at least have the rights of the stray cur in the streets. It shall not be abused." And thus was written the first bill of rights for the friendless waif the world over. The appearance of the starved, half-naked, and bruised child when it was brought into court in a horse-blanket caused a sensation that stirred the public conscience to its very depths. Complaints poured in upon Mr. Bergh; so many cases of child-beating and fiendish cruelty came to light in a little while, so many little savages were hauled forth from their dens of misery, that the community stood aghast. A meeting of citizens was called, and an association for the defence of outraged childhood was formed, out of which grew the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children that was formally incorporated in the following year. By that time Mary Ellen was safe in a good home. She never saw her tormentor again. —Our Dumb Animals.

A LITTLE BROWN PENNY.

A little brown penny, worn and old,
Dropped in the box by a dimpled hand,
A little brown penny, a childish prayer,
Sent far away to a heathen land.

A little brown penny, a generous thought,
A little less candy just for one day,
A young heart awakened for life, mayhap,
To the needs of the heathen far away.

The penny flew off with the prayer's swift wings;
It carried the message by Jesus sent,
And the gloom was pierced by a radiant light
Wherever the prayer and the message went.

And who can tell of the joy it brought
To the souls of the heathen far away,
When the darkness fled like wavering mists
From the beautiful dawn of the Gospel day?

And who can tell of the blessings that came
To the little child when Christ looked down;
Or how the penny, worn and old,
In heaven will change to a golden crown?

TEMPERANCE.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S NEW LIQUOR LAW.

(Condensed from the Voice.)

COLUMBIA, S. C., June 24.—The most extensive preparations are being made by the dispensary authorities to have everything in readiness for the opening of the new business on the first of the month. For the past two weeks the establishment has been bottling from 8,000 to 12,000 flasks of whisky varying from half-pints to quarts in size.

It is estimated by those in charge of the dispensary that on the first of July about $300,000 will be the amount invested in the plant and stock with which to operate the dispensary. The greater part of this amount will represent the cheaper grades of whisky, i. e., such as cost say $1.50 per gallon. Some idea of the profits to be made by the dispensary may be had by the schedule of figures on what will be known as single star palmetto whisky, which is said to cost $1.40 to $1.50 per gallon. The price will be per gallon, $3; per quart, 75 cents; per pint, 40 cents; per half pint, 25 cents. The profits are to be equally divided between the State and county, and out of the latter's portion 25 per cent. goes to the municipality which has to support the police.

There is the greatest diversity of opinion regarding the financial outcome of the undertaking. Some say that with the political and orthodox Prohibition to the law that it cannot be made to pay, and that the "blind tigers" will get the bulk of the profit. Governor Tillman and those who are responsible for the passage of the law argue in this way. "Blind tigers" will be hanged by the ear as soon as they show themselves; with this opposition removed the way to financial success is clear. Governor Tillman says that from the best information he can get that the annual sale of whisky alone is about 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 gallons; that the regulation of the trade will cut the sale down to 1,000,000 gallons, and that the minimum net profit will be $1 per gallon, and that the State cannot help making $500,000 this year after paying $150,000 for the distribution of whisky and $50,000 for the enforcement of the law. While Prohibitionists went into the dispensary scheme as something better than the present promiscuous license system, it is quite safe to say that the party in control in this State intends to operate it as revenue-making law.

There has been some delay in organizing dispensaries throughout the State. In the first place the State Board of Control experienced considerable trouble in getting county boards; then the applicants experienced some trouble in getting up the requisite petitions signed by a majority of the free-holders. It appeared that the ultra-Prohibitionists opposed the establishment of dispensaries on general principles, and the rabid conservative faction combined with the saloon element to try and secure the failure of the scheme and thought that the best way to accomplish that end would be by preventing the State from making profits out of the dispensary. It was a curious combination of saloon men and Prohibitionists; the one working for practical Prohibition and the other to secure the repeal of the law.

Just at this time it would be somewhat difficult to state exactly how many dispensaries will be opened for business July 1. While a great many counties have already settled the problem and ordered the stocks from the State dispensary a number of the boards will not meet until June 29 or 30. This is caused by the fact that the applicant has to have his petition for appointment on file ten days before final action and the difficulty of securing the necessary signatures. At this time the situation in the counties with regard to dispensaries is:

Will have one: Abbeville, Aiken, Barnwell, Beaufort, Chester, Darlington, Edgefield, Fairfield, Florence, Georgetown, Kershaw, Lancaster, Lexington, Newberry, Orangeberg, Sumter, and York.

Not yet decided: Anderson, Chesterfield, Clarendon, Colleton, Hampton, Richland, Spartanburg, Union, Greenville.

Cannot secure majority signatures: Berkeley, Charleston.

Cannot establish under law, as they have prohibitory laws at present: Williamsburg, Horry, Marion, Marlboro, Pickens, Oconee.

In some counties there will be more than one dispensary, so that it is a safe estimate that on July 1 there will be 35 dispensaries in the State. After that they will be established as needed, the expense of operation and net income being the chief considerations. The following was the number of bar-rooms in the several counties of the State on the 31st of last December:

Abbeville, 5; Aiken, 16; Anderson, 7; Barnwell, 22; Beaufort, 38; Berkeley, 30; Charleston, 285; Chester, 5; Chesterfield, 3; Clarendon, 3; Colleton, 31; Darlington, 10; Edgefield, 4; Fairfield, 7; Florence, 8; Georgetown, 6; Greenville, 16; Hampton, 7; Kershaw, 6; Lancaster, 9; Laurens, 4; Lexington, 3; Newberry, 8; Orangeburg, 26; Richland, 38; Spartanburg, 11; Sumter, 13; Union, 2; total, 613.

The question now is, what will the bar-keepers do after July 1? The wholesale dealers will, in many instances, leave the State and others will enter the grocery business. The retail men are looking around for other jobs; many will remain here in the restaurant and tobacco business, others will leave the State, and a few have arranged to engage in other business. Under the law none of those now engaged in the liquor business can be employed in the State or county dispensaries.

The position of the Prohibitionists has been considerably misunderstood, and on that account an address has been issued by Chairman L. D. Childs at the suggestion of the non-partisan State Prohibition Executive Committee which met in Columbia, June 8. The address declares that Prohibitionists will aid in enforcing the dispensary law to make its good features effective, while at the same time continuing to work for absolute Prohibition. The address closes by calling for the active co-operation of "all who value the right and would preserve our homes from the curse of this destroyer," to continue the fight for ultimate Prohibition.

Germany is one of the greatest beer using countries in the world, and is famous for making the best beer of any country. Some people still maintain that beer using is a good preventative to drunkenness. Not long since it was asserted in the German Reichstag, or Parliament, that there are eleven thousand persons in the hospitals of Germany who are suffering from delirium tremens. May Canada be saved from such a "temperance drink!"

The N. Y. Evening Post is one of the most ably conducted and carefully worded papers in the States. It has just been saying: "There never has been, in fact, in any age or country, a trade so distinctly marked out for reprobation and discouragement as liquor dealing in the United States in our time. Whatever be the merits or demerits of alcoholic drinks, the man who sells them seems always prone to become a social nuisance, and his shop a fountain of evil."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The dignity of honest labor.—vs. 1-3. We find Paul next in Corinth, one of the richest and most luxurious of ancient cities, given to business and pleasure, a Paris and London combined. There he found a pious Jewish couple, converts to Christianity, who had been exiled from Rome—Priscilla and Aquilla. Priscilla is always mentioned first, as if the most energetic of the two, and was doubtless not unlike many noble Christian women of the present day: bright, full of zeal, and quick to seize upon every opportunity for usefulness. The purest homes may exist in the midst of the most corrupt surroundings; and here, with these congenial spirits, Paul took up his residence and labored, working with his hands. He did not want the infant church to be taxed with his support, nor to give occasion to the enemies of the Gospel to say that he preached for gain. He thus made himself "an example to the flock," for his epistle to the Corinthians shows that they were peculiarly tempted to be idlers, busy-bodies, seeking to live by dishonest methods. One practical lesson may here be noted. It was doubtless a hardship to Priscilla and Aquilla to be driven from their home and be exiles in a strange city, but it was through this act of persecution that they became the associates of Paul, and the teachers of Apollos. It is hard to bear oppression and injustice, but God may use them as his instruments to drive us into a larger place, and a higher sphere of honor and usefulness.

2. Opposition to the Gospel.—vs. 4-6. (1) It is to be noted that Paul went to the synagogues, and not to heathen temples or academic groves, to preach Christ. So when we have a new light on the Word of God, or fresh revelations in regard to duty, we are not to go first to the unbelieving world with it, but to our brethren in the church. It is there we are to give our testimony, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear. (2) Paul made the most of his Sabbath opportunities. In the week-day whirl of business and pleasure his message might not have been heeded. (3) We are greatly helped by being associated with earnest Christian workers. It was when Silas and Timotheus joined him that he was, as the revised version reads, constrained by or "pressed with the Word," which, dictated by the divine Spirit, strove for utterance within him. (4) When the church to which we belong will not receive our testimony, when it opposes the truth and seeks to silence our utterance, our duty then is to go outside the church and speak it wherever we can find hearers. "They opposed themselves." This is what every one does who rejects the truth. They are their own worst enemies.

3. Encouragement.—vs. 7, 8. All the Jews were not impervious to the truth. God had among them a chosen seed. Justus, with whom Paul made his home, was evidently a Jewish proselyte; and another distinguished convert was Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, who "believed with all his house." Through the efforts of this Christian family many of their Corinthian neighbors were converted. If we have the light in our own hearts, we shall not be content until it shines on our neighbor's pathway. That is no genuine work of grace in which the converts show no desire to bring others to the Lord.

4. The midnight vision.—vs. 9-11. We must put ourselves in Paul's place to fully realize his discouraging position in the midst of the great heathen city of Corinth, where his enemies could in a short time raise a mob to destroy him as they did at Philippi; and with all the refinement and learning of Grecian civilization arrayed against what seemed to them "the foolishness" of his preaching. The Lord knew he needed a fresh inspiration, and so he appeared to him in a night vision with words of cheer. Our hour of deepest discouragement is the time God chooses to cheer us with the gladdest tokens of his presence. "Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace." That is the reason why the truth about secret societies and other popular evils is not more boldly spoken from our pulpits and in the columns of the press. Men are afraid. They have never felt conscious in their own case of the fulfillment of the divine promise: "For I am with thee." The boldness of a Luther or a Knox was not because they were braver in themselves than other men, but because of their continual sense of God's presence. If he be with us who can be against us? This is the reformer's anchor, his shield, his strong tower; the thought that he is on God's side in the battle, fighting under the banner of one who never loses. "For I have much people in this city." Note the present tense. Paul was depressed over the fewness of the converts, yet his words had been shafts of truth which had flown far and hit more hearts than he thought. Christian workers and reformers are often discouraged because they cannot see the full result. We are to work on, knowing that God sees all, and is on our side to protect us from all harm, from Satan or evil men.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

—At the meeting of the board of officers and managers of the American Sunday-school Union held in Philadelphia, June 20, the following action was taken: WHEREAS, The Directory of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago has decided in favor of opening their gates on the Lord's day, thus wounding the conscience of Christians who have protested against this desecration of the day of rest: Therefore, Resolved, That we rescind our action authorizing a meeting of the officers and missionaries of the American Sunday-school Union to be held in Chicago during the Exposition; and that in all proper ways the Union, through its workers, express disapprobation of this violation of the Lord's day, and of all influences tending to secularize it.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

—"The whole cause of the Reformation is going by default; and if the alienated laity, who have been driven into indifference by the Romish innovations and Romish doctrines forced upon them without any voice of theirs in the matter, do not awake in time and assert their rights as sharers in the common and sole priesthood of all Christians, they will awake too late, to find themselves nominal members of a church which has become widely popish in all but a name—a church in which Catholicity is every day being made more and more synonymous with stark Romanism, and in which the once-honoured name of Protestantism is overwhelmed with calumny and insult."—English Archdeacon Farrar.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. Chauncey M. Cady, professor of English language and literature in Doshisha University, Kyoto, Japan, is in this country for a year's vacation, and will make his home in Oberlin.

—The proposed union between the First church of Michigan City, Ind., and a sister denomination, which has agitated religious circles of that city for the last six months, has finally been abandoned, and Rev. W. C. Gordon has been called to the pastorate with a salary of $1,600 and parsonage. This is a historic church, as the first National Council was held in Michigan City in 1846.

—The Boys' Brigade of Pilgrim church, Milwaukee, in connection with the King's Daughters, will have charge of the Sunday evening services during the summer months.

—The new trustee of Beloit College in Chicago is Mr. F. G. Logan, of Plymouth church.

—The Congregationalists of Pennsylvania have begun the issue of a little paper, entitled the Congregational Messenger, published at Pittsburgh, but under the special care of Rev. A. H. Claflin, of Allegheny. The intention is to make it the medium of communication between the churches of the State, and thus bind them in a closer fellowship.

—Colorado has fifty seven Congregational churches, with four thousand members. Sixteen of these churches are self-supporting, and forty-one are home missionary.

FRIENDS' CHURCH.

—The will of a wealthy man, Mark Davis, has just been probated at Indianapolis, and the bulk of his estate is left to Earlham College at Richmond, Ind. Sixty-eight thousand dollars was given to individuals and various benevolent organizations. The flower mission, $3,000; free kindergarten, $3,000; home of friendless women, $3,000; Orphan Asylum, $3,000; Friends' church on Delaware street, $5,000.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Rev. J. C. Hartzell writes: "It has been the policy of the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society to give place in its work to educated, talented young colored men and women. A large number of our successful lady teachers are from among our colored graduates. In arranging the faculties for next year we have made a number of appointments in harmony with this policy. The appointments are made, not because the incumbents are colored, but because of character and qualifications."

—Rev. Wm. Butler writes: "Revivals, genuine revivals and marvelous outpourings of the Holy Spirit are blessing every section of the [India] conference. Never in the history of our India mission have we seen such a general exhibition of divine power."

—The Chicago and North Chicago districts' camp meeting will be held on the Des Plaines camp ground, July 21 to Aug. 2. Among the well-known preachers and speakers will be Bishop Merrill, Bishop Wm. Taylor, Presiding Elders W. H. Burns, D.D., H. G. Jackson, D.D., F. A. Harding, D.D., Rev. John McNeill, "the Spurgeon of Scotland," Rev. Thos. Harrison, Mrs. Amanda Smith, and Mr. D. W. Potter. Prof. J. R. Sweney will have charge of the music.

—Mr. Josiah Nix is the most widely known and efficient lay evangelist in the British Wesleyan church. As organizing secretary of the West London "forward movement" he has impressed the force of his character, not only upon the mission work in the great city, but upon the work in nearly every city in England. Mr. Nix was converted when about twenty-one, and, under the preaching of Mr. Hugh Price Hughes of Oxford, entered into a deeper religious experience. Mr. Nix is about to organize a "race-course mission," the object of which is the conversion of people on the race course. He expects to have a branch of that mission in every racing town in England, and also in places in America and Australia.

—Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, the well-known Wesleyan ministers of London, Eng., have decided to withdraw from the ministry. Mr. Hughes, it is stated, intends to enter political life and Mr. Pearse will return to private life.

—The First international conference of the Epworth League of this country began its sessions at Music Hall, Cleveland, on June 29. The attendance of delegates was large, and about 6,000 were expected to be present, from all parts of the United States and Canada. The conference was formally opened in the afternoon with addresses of welcome by Governor William McKinley and Mayor Robert Blee. The motto of the League is, "Look up, lift up," and its growth since its foundation at Cleveland on May 15, 1889, reaches now a membership of over 700,000 and 11,000 chapters. Felicitous responses were made by Bishop Wilson of the Methodist Episcopal church South; Rev. W. H. Wilburn, of Toronto, for the Methodist church of Canada, and Bishop J. M. Fitzgerald.

MOHAMMEDISM.

—It would seem that the Mohammedans are actually in earnest about converting us to their faith. They will shortly commence the publishing of a weekly paper to be known as the Moslem World, and have also arranged to locate a Moslem colony in Georgia, where they are negotiating for a large tract of land.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. Dr. Charles A. Hay, professor of Greek at the theological seminary at Gettysburg, is dead, aged seventy-nine.

—As a result of the Presbyterian troubles, the famous old Lane Seminary at Cincinnati, Ohio, may be abandoned entirely.

—Rev. G. F. Pentecost, D.D., having been formally admitted to the Presbyterian ministry, has entered on the pastorate at Marylebone (London, Eng.) church. A crowded and enthusiastic meeting was recently held in the church to welcome the new minister.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—In the special Episcopal convention for the election of a bishop of the diocese of Vermont, held June 22, at Burlington, Rev. Samuel Hart, D.D., of Hartford, Conn., was chosen. The bishop-elect was for several years a professor in Trinity College. He is secretary of the House of Bishops, has been for several years a member of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church, and has taken a prominent part in the revision of the prayer book.

REFORMED CHURCH IN AMERICA.

—The General Synod of the Reformed Church in America declines to have anything to do with the Parliament of Religions. So we are federally united on that point, at all events. Our Synod all passed a similar action, and we believe it is right and proper to withdraw. The idea of such a congress of religions is by no means a bright one, even though conceived and born in the brain of a very learned and popular doctor of divinity. There is nothing to be gained, but much to be lost, by Christianity from the conglomerate mass of religions as represented in that congress.—Christian World, Dayton, Ohio.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

PASTOR FISCH, of Paris, 1873:—The church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed.

REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D., a renouncing Mason:—Its (Freemasonry's) religion is anti-Christian. Its prayers are blasphemous. Its use of the Bible is sacrilegious. The whole is a compound of Judaism and paganism.

MOSES STUART, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, Mass., 1834:—For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to some things contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress.

JOHN WESLEY, June, 1773:—I went to Ballymena and read a strange tract that professes to discover "the inmost recesses of Freemasonry," said to be "translated from the French original lately published at Berlin." I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry.—N. Y. Christian Advocate, February, 1884.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL:—I know no Temperance, Odd-fellow or Freemason fraternity that does not recognize a brotherhood with the world. "They are of the world, they speak of the world and the world heareth them." Christians, though in the world, are not of it. Any union, then, for moral purposes with the world that brings us to commune religiously with it, by the laws and usages of the institution itself, is opposed to the law and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

CHARLES G. FINNEY:—God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.

NATHANIEL COLVER, former pastor Tremont Temple, Boston:—I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice.

DWIGHT L. MOODY:—Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

HENRY TATEM, an eminent Baptist pastor, Providence, R. I., 1832:—It was about fourteen years ago that I was first initiated into the lodge. Within a few months after, I advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and sometime after I took the degrees of Knighthood, as they are called. I well remember the horror of my feelings when the bandage was taken from my eyes and I found myself partly naked, with men standing around me pointing at me the implements of death, and a human skull was handed me to drink from, and I was required to repeat words, awful in themselves, and which I cannot distinctly recollect, but which I believe to have been the same I find given in the explanation of that ceremony in Bernard's Light on Masonry. From that time I absented myself from the lodge and chapter. My mind was afterwards led by degrees to an examination into Masonry, which I am now satisfied is repugnant to the spirit of the religion of Christ.

HOME AND HEALTH.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

HYGIENIC NOTES.

If you want to keep cool during the heated term avoid flesh foods, also sugar and all carbonaceous foods. Vegetables, cooked simply, good, home-made graham or whole wheat bread, and plenty of fruit, will keep the system cool, clean and healthy.

Remember that fluids of any kind uncovered in a room containing any impurity will soon become contaminated. Thus milk frequently is a vehicle for the conveyance of disease germs. If fluids must remain in inhabited rooms, they should be covered carefully.

To preserve unfermented wine it should be heated and sealed up hot in self-sealing jars. Another way is to put the grape juice into long-necked bottles and pour a spoonful or so of pure olive oil into the top of each bottle. Sop up the oil with cotton before pouring out the wine. Of course the bottles must be corked.

God says, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick." Why not believe the promise? Why theorize and explain that prayer for healing must be some peculiar kind of prayer different from ordinary believing faith? What kind of a prayer is a faithless one? Let us take God at his word for bodily healing just the same as for anything else.

Some fry potatoes in lard as they would cakes. This makes them very indigestible, besides the bad effects of lard in the system. Potatoes boiled or baked are good, if well cooked. If warmed over, use milk or cream instead of grease for seasoning. Some cook beefsteak in lard; suet or butter should be used instead. Steak is sweet and tender to cook it quickly in a hot spider, without any grease, giving it a taste like broiled meat.

It is said that cancer has increased from thirty to forty per cent in the last twelve years. There is a cause for this. When we consider that all physicians who attempt to treat this formidable disease recommend thorough hygienic living, we have a clew to the cause of this increase. Tobacco, tea and coffee, lard, spices, condiments and salt foods are doubtless causes of cancers and other similar diseases. Would it not be better for all to live so as to avoid such terrible diseases? Prevention is always better, as well as easier, than cure.

Many poor working women in our cities starve on tea or coffee and baker's bread. The stimulus of the tea or coffee makes the poor victims feel for a short time as though they had taken some nourishment. It is a pity the poor and hard-working are so ignorant of what is the best and cheapest diet. It would be a great boon if some benevolent person would start a hygienic bakery in every town and a number in every city. At first they might not be appreciated, but a little practical experimenting would soon convince the intelligent of the advantages of hygienic living.

And now the "ice-cream peddler" is enjoying his harvest in the cities, and makes the air resound with his cry, Sunday as well as week days. As we look at the swarthy Italian faces of these vendors of supposed cream, we wonder at the credulity of the people! What enters into the compound they sell we know not, but have no doubt that many sudden deaths in the summer might be traced back to the excessive use of the deleterious stuff sold for ice-cream. The genuine article should be eaten very moderately, if at all.

FARM NOTES.

ABOUT DOMESTIC STOCK.

The New England Farmer furnishes the following:

The State of New York now has a lawyer for its dairy commissioner, who will no doubt milk the office for all it is worth to his party and himself. The salary is $3,000, and the commissioner controls the expenditure of about $100,000. The incumbent rotated out was a practical dairyman, and had held the office since its establishment in 1884. When farmers learn to be independent of parties, their wishes in such matters will be consulted, and not left to party bosses.

The average number of sheep to the square mile in the United States is (or was in 1880) just twelve, while England had four hundred and twenty. This hardly looks as if we were overdoing the sheep business! But why are not more kept? The chief reason, in one word, is dogs. We must have dogs, and we can get along without sheep!

England not only keeps four hundred and twenty sheep to the square mile, but imports vast quantities of mutton and wool. The United States also imports great quantities of wool, while there is land enough for hundreds of millions of sheep, and which would no doubt be utilized but for the dog industry.

Tasmania, Queensland, New Zealand, Spain and Norway all keep more sheep, in proportion to their area, than the United States. But we beat them on dogs.

A Tennessee farmer lately cured a cow of milk fever by sweating her in ensilage. She was down sick, and he had little hopes of saving her, when the thought occurred to try ensilage instead of warm manure from the compost heap—as had once been recommended to him. He first covered the cow with blankets dipped in hot water, then piled bags of ensilage about her, and next filled all the interstices with loose ensilage, until only her head could be seen. In three hours she "dug out" of the pile and went to eating the ensilage about her. He also physicked her; but he attributes her recovery to sweating by ensilage.

EXPERIMENTS IN CHEESE-MAKING.

The summary given by the bulletin of the New York Agricultural Experiment Station, of the results of the experiments in cheese-making during 1892, contains the following statements: Fifty experiments were made at five different cheese factories, beside fifty-six experiments at the station. In these, 214,684 pounds of milk were used. The temperature of the milk when the rennet was added was 84 degrees Fah. Time required to coagulate varied from eleven to forty minutes. The temperature to which the curd was heated after cutting was between 28 and 100 degrees. The whey was drawn in from one to four hours; and the whole operation in the cheese-making varied from three to nine hours. In the composition of normal milk, the milk solids in a hundred pounds averaged 12.66 pounds; the fat averaged 3.70 pounds; the casein and albumen, 3.14; the whey averaged 6.92.

WINNOWINGS.

Manure can be applied to the orchard at any time with benefit, whether the application is made in the spring or fall.

Always free the udder entirely from milk, as one pint of that last drawn is worth for butter at least one quart of that obtained at the commencement of milking, and leaving these "strippings" will naturally dry up the cow in a very short time.

Every farmer should own a few carpenter's tools, not necessarily an expensive outfit, but at least a common hand saw and possibly a rip saw, a brace and a full set of bits, a one-inch and a two-inch auger, one smoothing plane, one jack plane, a jointer plane, a good steel square, a drawing knife and a claw hammer. There should be a work bench and a substantial iron vise. With these any farmer can save the cost every year.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune says that she evolves from memories of her father's note-book (who for years drove a market wagon into Boston) the following on the horse:

"Up hill spare me,
Down hill guide me,
On a level let me trot;
In the stable
Don't forget me,
But never feed me when I'm hot."

An exhibit of fruit has been received from a place from which it was thought impossible to receive such articles. Sixty days ago a farmer in New South Wales, Australia, picked several barrels of his finest apples, a bushel of pears and a crate of grapes. On Saturday afternoon the fruit arrived at Jackson Park and was placed in the pomological section of the Horticulture building. The consignment was barely fifty-five days in making its long journey, and was as sound apparently when unpacked as when it left Australia.—Evening Post, May 15.

Secretary Phillips is in Indiana this week, co-operating with Bro. W. B. Stoddard, the Eastern Secretary.

Now that the question of Sunday closing is permanently settled for the remainder of the season, readers of the Cynosure will feel more free to visit the World's Fair; and they may be assured that no finer exhibition of the works of human skill and ingenuity has ever been seen in any collection since the world was made.

There were eight young men graduated at the Oakland, Cal., Theological Seminary, this year, and only one was a Freemason. It is worthy of remark that the other seven are opponents of the secret society system. The influence they can carry with them into their respective fields of labor may have a wholesome effect in combating the hosts of sin in the pagan lodges.

Although last Sabbath was set apart by the Directory of the World's Fair as a "benefit" day for the widows and orphans of the firemen who perished in the destruction of the cold-storage building, the attendance on the grounds was meager. During the day only 49,401 persons paid for admission; of the tickets 2,403 were children's; yet the benevolent fund received an addition of over $24,000. Anticipation had placed the number of visitors at the Fair at 200,000 for the day. Sunday opening, now happily at an end, has not been, at any time, a profitable movement.

The passage of the Army bill by the German parliament, increasing the national armament in accordance with the wishes of the Emperor, is of course received with enthusiasm by the imperial party. It was represented that without the passage of this measure, the security of the empire would be jeopardized, inasmuch as her sister nations would soon excel her in military strength. To the German people it means enlarged taxation, and the withdrawal from civil pursuits of many of her laboring men to swell the ranks of the army; but all these new burdens laid upon the people are deemed necessary to maintain the honor of the nation. National jealousy in Europe is not favorable to universal disarmament and the victories of peace.

We give considerable space, on another page, to the revival of the Roman Catholic Inquisition, our information concerning it being gathered from the authorized publications of the hierarchy. That it is a veritable statement may be inferred from the following, clipped from the Boston Pilot, one of the most influential of Romish papers in the United States: "No good government can exist without religion, and there can be no religion without an INQUISITION, which is wisely designed for the protection and promotion of the true church." President James Madison, in his day, gave us this prophetic warning: "Foreign influence to America is like the Grecian horse to Troy; it conceals an enemy in its heart. We cannot be too careful to exclude its entrance;" and the last prayer of Andrew Jackson was: "Lord, preserve our country from ALL foreign influence!"

The work of anti-secrecy reform on the Pacific coast is worthy of careful consideration. Rev. P. B. Williams, from whom we published an interesting report last week, is well and favorably known East and West, and in all sections where he has made acquaintances there is manifestly a thankful and prayerful spirit in his behalf. We trust that his work in Oregon and Washington may be owned of God, in the deliverance from the bondage of oath-bound sin of many of God's children on the coast. Should any of our readers feel disposed to extend to him a helping hand, with their prayers for his success in this work, they can write to him at Portland, Ore., concerning the state of affairs in their vicinity, and inquiring how they can best assist him in this great work. It is said that "reforms never go backward". If that is so it is every Christian's duty to "share in the glory of the harvest-home."

Rev. Mr. Nickle, assistant pastor of the First M. E. Church in this city, and who, it may be remembered, led the singing at the National Christian Association's Conference of Christians in 1890, has recently taken a brief vacation, which was spent at the country home of his boyhood. On the eve of his starting out in the labor of life, he and seven other young men, three of whom bore his own family name, consecrated themselves to Christian work. At the same time they also planned to enjoy their annual vacations together. This year two were prevented from meeting the others by sickness in their families. The remaining six assembled according to custom, and decided to pass their vacation in the grove, telling their neighbors about Jesus their Saviour. Five days were spent in this manner, and every-day witnessed new conversions to Christ. What a blessed memory will this vacation be to these men of God in the coming years!

The National Commission and the Board of Directors of the World's Fair have each been in consultation. In the meeting of the former, President T. W. Palmer said: "We have put ourselves in an attitude of antagonism to the Congress that created this body. We are in a false position. I am sick and tired of the petty evasion that pretends that the opening of the gates was in accordance with law. You know, as I know, that the report of the Sunday-closing rule has never been in the courts. The only final decision hinged on the jurisdiction, and not on the repeal of the rule. No matter as to that; the opening of the gates was in violation of faith, was done without sanction of law, and has injured the good name of the Commission." The directory, under the pressure of the small attendance on Sunday, since the Fair was opened on that day, the indifference with which the Sunday privilege has been met by the wage-workers, for whose benefit the gates were thrown open on the Sabbath, and the fact that 1,100 exhibits were covered and hidden from the public on Sunday before last, decided, by a vote of 24 to 4, to close the Fair on the Lord's day, from this time on. It is well.

It is announced, upon what we consider competent authority, that the secret order of the A. P. A. (American Protective Association) is exerting a superior influence upon kindred secret organizations known as "patriotic orders," and is about to make a formidable movement in the interests of its principles. There are, it is stated, "seventy-eight societies in this country affiliated in principle with the A. P. Association. These societies number a million and a half active members and millions of sympathizers and secret adherents. There is talk of a great convention and a federation to be followed by a new political party. All of them are advocates of a non-sectarian public school system, and are opponents of any religio-political organization. They have been formed to overcome those evils which the immigrant imports from Europe." Already it is known that some of these societies habitually refuse to vote for Romish candidates for public offices, and in this spirit all are "one and indivisible." The necessity for a new party, they claim, arises from the laxity of public vigilance, the arrogant and clannish spirit of the imported citizen, and his voracity to rule or ruin the country of his adoption. It is evident that we are to have another "dark lantern" party in future campaigns.

TWO HORNS LIKE A LAMB—REV. 13: 11.

BY C. A. S. TEMPLE.

In prophetic language "a beast" is a great kingdom, government, or power. (Dan. 7: 3, 17, 23.) So, too, is "a horn". (Id. vs. 7, 8, 24.) In the same language, "a horn," or "horns" upon the head of a beast, represents a power, subordinate to or a sharer in the dominion of that beast. (See Dan. 8: 7, 20, R. V., the ram with two horns upon his head, which, thus arranged, represented the unified kingdoms of Media and Persia. See also verses 3, 5, 8, 9, 20-24, same chapter.)

The two-horned beast, now before us, has been the subject of a great number and variety of interpretations. Some learned expositors have thought that he might have represented the Exarchate of Ravenna, or perhaps the Duke, or Grand-Duke, of Lombardy, or somebody else; while a professor in one of our American universities is confident that he represented the Roman Emperor, Nero. Another writer insists that this mysterious nondescript is fully represented in and by "the Church of England and the Lutheran church". But the climax of random guessing would seem to have been reached by certain other expositors, who very gravely insist that this two-horned beast "represents these United States of America"! But none of them have shown how that beast, as they represent him, has filled out, in any particular, that inspired description of him, in verses 11-13. All seem to have overlooked certain essential fundamental facts, in his relations to the Roman government (as he—the beast—represents it), and to that great, ten-horned monster, described in Dan. 7 and Rev. 12, 13 and 17. By these omissions all such expositors have most signally failed of a right solution of the identity of this great two-horned beast.

The following facts will show, in a light strong and clear, that this beast represents Rome, and that, in a light at once peculiar and very significant. They show, too, that he is nothing more nor less than that same old ten-horned "beast" and "dragon," in a cunningly-arranged disguise.

HIS RELATIONS TO THE ROMAN GOVERNMENT.

From the time of Numa Pompilius, the second king of Rome, Rome has constantly maintained (in one form or another) a complete, two-fold individuality, in her internal or domestic relations, and in her method of governmental administration. From that beginning, her government, through all its mutations, has been made up of two distinct, yet co-ordinate elements—the civil and hierarchal—two horns upon one head. Whatever was the name, or form, of the government (the civil horn), its authority extended only to civil affairs, while the powers of the hierarchy (the other horn) were confined, with equal strictness, to sacerdotal or religious affairs. Over everything pertaining to religion the hierarchy was, as now, supreme; in that respect, co-equal with the civil power.

Such is, and always has been, the status, though varying from time to time, in their relations, of the "two horns" in Rome.

The head of the hierarchy was always called "Pontifex Maximus". He was the same to the hierarchy as the Pope of Rome is now.

2. Under the emperors the government was a duality in unity. The emperor was always "Pont. Max.," Sovereign Pontiff; head of both the Roman religion and the Roman state. Yet under him the two departments (the civil and the hieratic "horns") though co-ordinate, were still distinct branches of one and the same system. Neither branch could interfere with the affairs or duties of the other. As under all the previous forms of administration, therefore, these two departments (thus united and arranged) were fitly represented in that vision, by those two horns upon the beast. (See Adams' Roman Antiquity, pp. 150, 247-252.)

In A. D. 378 the Bishop of Rome, without resigning his bishopric, accepted the Pagan office and title of "Pontifex Maximus"—Sovereign Pontiff, with all its functions, prerogatives and powers. (Hislop, Two Babylons, p. 410.) Meantime, in the church the work of concession and compromise with Paganism (inaugurated long before) went on. In A. D. 606 the Bishop—now "Pont. Max." as well—was proclaimed and acknowledged "Universal Bishop," or "Bishop of the Universal Church". (Dowling, History of Romanism, p. 55.)

In A. D. 756 the temporal power was conferred upon the Pope. (Dowling, pp. 171-4.) Then in him and his hierarchy those two elements in the Roman government—the civil and the hieratic (the two horns) were blended (but in reversed conditions and relations) in one vast hieratic civil organism, but in which the original Roman duality was strictly and faithfully maintained.

The difference, in this respect, between the empire and the papacy, was this: in the empire, as a rule, no priest could hold a civil office; nor could a layman, a mere civilian, hold or execute any public sacerdotal office or duty; while under the papacy, although the hierarchal and civil branches—"horns"—were ostensibly distinct from each other, yet every civil office was filled and manipulated by an ecclesiastic. (Rome and the Papacy, Preface, p. 10.)

The change, in this case, was simply that the priority was shifted from the imperial, or civil, department, to the hieratic or sacerdotal. In other words, the hieratic "horn" became the superior of the civil or secular "horn". It was simply the uplifting of the till-then lower end of the scale, and the depression of the other end. The "two horns" remained, intact. Except in their relations to each other, their connection with "the beast" (the government—Rome and "the church") was unchanged.

"LIKE A LAMB."

From the culmination of the great apostacy in the early Christian ages, till the change of regime in Rome, under Victor Emanuel, in 1872, Rome exhibited this feature of "the beast with two horns," viz: "like a lamb"—in its perfection. That culmination was the adoption by the Bishop of Rome, of the office and title of Pontifex Maximus, or Pope, and his subsequent obtainment of the title and distinction of "Universal Bishop"! After that, by his assumption of the temporal power, he, of course, became also a secular sovereign, as one of the "kings of the earth".

That was the crisis, the finishing touch, in that long series of defections and concessions and compromises, in the church, and of the arrogant, overbearing pretensions and claims, by her Pontiff and hierarchy, for the blending and assimilation of those great, mutual antagonisms—Christianity and Paganism.

Each and every element in her whole Pagan system was now, as it were, baptized with some Christian designation. Her whole Pagan hierarchy, in which there was not a single "order" or office, even analogous to those of the church of Christ, was adopted, bodily, with only some such changes of designation as would give them a seeming adaptation to her Christian professions.

So, too, her whole catalogue of Pagan observances, if, perhaps, we except her bloody sacrifices, was adopted, consecrated and set up as "Christian ordinances"!

"The present people of Rome worship in the same temples, at the same altars, sometimes the same images, and always with the same ceremonies, as the ancient Romans."—Middleton.

This vast, this loathsome jumble of alien and incongruous elements (Christianity, with the ancient, hieratic Paganism) is now that hideous monstrosity known to the world as the Roman Catholic church. Rome calls it "The infallible and only true church: the spouse of Christ"!

Our conclusion, from such facts, is inevitable—viz.: that "the beast" in that vision was simply Rome. That his two horns represent the two departments of the Roman government, from the time of Numa till the present, and that the conformation of those horns ("like a lamb") represents that pretended metamorphosis of character, in the whole Roman system, from a Pagan to a Christian commonwealth. In other words, her present claim of the Christian name for that system was represented in the lamb-like contour of those two horns. Those horns, therefore, as thus exhibited, were prophetic of the Roman church—papal Rome, the Rome of the last 1300 years!

More anon. A short statement, showing by divine authority (verses 11 and 12 of this same chapter): "He spake as a dragon," and "he exerciseth all the power" and "the moral identity" of this beast and "the beast," and "the beast and dragon" of Daniel, 7th chapter, and Revelation, chapters 12, 13 and 17.

(To be concluded.)

THE SECRET CLANS OF THE REBELLION.

The leading Democratic politicians all over the North [just previous to the beginning of the War of the Rebellion] became the staunch advocates of slavery; and we all know with what blind confidence and fierce determination the masses follow their political leaders. The culmination of the contest over this question, resulting in the election of Abraham Lincoln to the presidency by a party openly opposed to slavery, caused its friends to take their appeal from the ballot-box to the sword; and this appeal found those who were the friends of the institution (slavery) from political party considerations scattered all over the North in quite formidable numbers, constituting an enemy in the rear of our armies that gave to the administration of President Lincoln no little anxiety and embarrassment, making it necessary for him, as early as September, 1862, to proclaim martial law and suspend the writ of habeas corpus in respect to all persons in the United States who were arrested and found to have been actively disloyal and engaged in efforts to aid the rebellion.

By permission of the publishers, the American Citizen Company, of No. 7 Bromfield street, Boston, we are enabled to copy the following interesting particulars of these secret enemies of the Union from General T. M. Harris' recent work, "The Assassination of Lincoln: A History of the Great Conspiracy," which includes, also, the trial of the conspirators by a military commission, and a review of the trial of John H. Surratt. Gen. Harris was a member of this military commission.

This disloyal element was rendered much more formidable by the fact of its perfect combination, through secret, oath-bound organizations under the names of Knights of the Golden Circle and Order of American Knights. These secret orders no doubt had their origin in the South, preparatory to secession and war; but after the war had been commenced it was chiefly in the North that they were useful to the rebel cause, and it was through these that the assassination of the President-elect was to have been accomplished at Baltimore, when on his way to the capital in 1861, and thus his inauguration as President was to have been prevented. We thus see the desperate character of the political leaders of the rebellion, who were ready to frustrate the expressed will of the people by resorting to assassination. We need not think strange that a rebellion which was ready to resort to such means in its incipency should finally expire under the weight of this infamy.

By these secret organizations, the enemies of the government, wherever they might be, possessed the means of a secret recognition amongst their members. And under whatever circumstances they might be placed, the obligations of their oath afforded them confidence and security. They constituted a brotherhood, and by their secret grips, signs, passwords, etc., they had a guarantee of unity of sentiment and of purpose, and of faithfulness to each other and to the obligations of their oath.

These organizations were regarded as allies by the rebel government, and were counted on as a valuable factor to secure the success of its arms. This element in the North kept itself in constant communication with the rebel government and the rebel armies, and thus, in a large degree, filled the place of spies in giving information. To furnish facilities for communication with its friends in the North, as also for various other purposes in aid of the rebel cause, the Confederate government sent a number of its ablest civilians to Canada, at an early period of the war, as its secret agents, who established their headquarters at Montreal. This cabal consisted of the following persons: Jacob Thompson, who had been Secretary of the Interior, under Buchanan's administration; Clement C. Clay, who had been a United States Senator from Alabama; Beverly Tucker, who had been a circuit judge in Virginia; George N. Sanders, William C. Cleary, Prof. Holcomb, George Harper and others. Of these, Thompson, Tucker and Clay seem to have held semi-official positions, and we will designate them as Davis's Canada cabinet. The others named, as also others unnamed above, appear to have acted as aids, in a subordinate capacity, in the execution of their plots. They all claimed to be acting as agents of the rebel government upon their oaths on the trial for the extradition of the St. Alban's raiders.

The proclamation of martial law and suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in September, 1862, had the effect of restraining the open, active efforts of these secret disloyal organizations to cripple the resources at Mr. Lincoln's command for suppressing the rebellion, inasmuch as any such efforts were met by arrest, military trial and imprisonment; yet, inasmuch as they created a necessity for a military police at all important points in the North, they felt that they were still rendering valuable service to the rebellion by thus weakening the force at the front; and whilst it was necessary to conduct their operations with much more secrecy, their organizations were not disbanded. They went on to effect a complete military organization, thoroughly officered and drilled, and in many cases armed, holding themselves ready to take the field in any emergency that might arise that would justify so bold a measure. The Canada cabinet watched over these organizations with great interest, and directed their operations, and by many schemes sought to bring about an emergency that would enable them to bring this army, which they had hidden away in secrecy, into the field of active operations for the success of their cause. The officers of these secret military organizations were chosen from the local political leaders in the different localities where they existed, and kept themselves in communication with the Canada cabinet, and through this medium the Confederate government was kept informed of their strength, organization, plans and purposes. So bold and active did they become, in spite of the efforts of the military police for their suppression, that the government finally found it necessary, through its secret service department, to possess itself of a thorough knowledge of these organizations, and in this way was enabled to capture the arms and munitions of war which had been secured and were hidden away in secrecy by them, and also to arrest the leading officers of these organizations in several States. Whilst by these means these treasonable combinations were seriously crippled, they were unchanged in animus and still struggled to maintain their existence. They kept themselves in communication with the Canada conspirators, and ready to co-operate with them for the success of their schemes should the conditions become sufficiently promising to justify them in declaring themselves openly.

It was in the summer of 1864 that Jacob Thompson, according to the testimony before the Commission, declared that he had his friends all over the Northern States, who were willing to go to any length in order to serve the cause of the South. Jefferson Davis's Canada cabinet kept up a constant correspondence with their chief, through secret agents who traveled directly through the States, and even through the city of Washington.

So potent was the aid of secret signs, grips, pass-words, etc., as a means of recognition, and so universally were the members of these secret orders diffused over the country, that they could go anywhere. Should one agent find it necessary to stop his task for fear of detection, another would take it up; and where men could not go, women went, to carry communications. The Canada cabinet was well supplied with money by the government at Richmond, and in this department of the service Jacob Thompson seems to have been Secretary of the Treasury. He kept his deposits largely in the Ontario Bank of Montreal, and his credits there arose from Southern bills of exchange on London. The object of the writer in this introductory chapter has been to place clearly before his readers the formidable character of the conspiracy, which, with the President of the Confederacy at its head, and organized by his Canada cabinet, was intended to throw the loyal North into a state of chaotic confusion and bring to the aid of their sinking cause the disloyal element all over the North, by a series of assassinations which would leave the nation without a civil and military head, and without any constitutional way of electing another President, and at the same time would deprive the armies of the United States of a lawful commander. This was the last card of the political leaders of the rebellion, the last desperate resort to retrieve a cause that had been manifestly lost in open warfare. It may seem like temerity in the writer to make such a charge involving a total disregard of the laws of civilized warfare, and such utter moral depravity on the part of these conspirators, and to claim for their wicked project the approval of Jefferson Davis, but the evidence in the possession of the government and adduced before the Commission, it will be seen, fully justified the government in making this charge. The persons brought before the Commission, though in full sympathy in sentiment with their employers, were merely the tools and hired assassins of the Canada cabinet, acting under the advice and sanction of their chief.

BROTHERHOOD OF ANDREW AND PHILIP.

The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip is both denominational and interdenominational. Four denominations are already represented in its list of one hundred and twenty-five chapters, namely, the two branches of the Reformed church and the Presbyterian and the Congregational.

In the last six months nearly fifty chapters have been organized. There are now 125 chapters regularly enrolled; scattered throughout 25 States of the Union with a membership of 3,500. Active chapters are found in such well known churches as Bethany Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.; Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, New York City; Berkley Temple and Philips Church, Boston, Mass.; First Presbyterian, Western Presbyterian, and First Congregational, Washington, D. C.; Armour Mission, Chicago, Ill.; and in other prominent churches in Baltimore, Md., Cleveland, O., Pittsburgh, Pa., Omaha, Neb., San Francisco, Cal., Portland, Ore., and Minneapolis, Minn.

Each denomination has its own Brotherhood, made up of the chapters within its own body. It is intended that these shall meet in convention every second year.

There is also a union of all the chapters of the Brotherhood which holds a convention each alternate year, and is represented between the conventions by a Federal Council, whose members are drawn from all the denominations which have chapters of the Brotherhood. No chapter can be organized without the consent of the pastor or officials in charge of a congregation.

The Brotherhood is flexible in its working. In one congregation the most of its energy is expended upon a Young Men's Bible Class; in another, on a mission Sunday-school or rescue work; in the third, on a Sunday morning prayer-meeting of men, and in a fourth, it takes charge of the ushering of the church.

ARTICLE I. Name.—This organization shall be called the "Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip," being so called from the accounts given in John 1: 41-48; 12: 20-22, and the statement of James 5: 16, 19, 20.

ARTICLE II. SECTION 1.—Object and Rules.—The sole object of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip is the spread of Christ's kingdom among young men.

SECTION 2.—Every man desiring to become a member must pledge himself to obey the rules of the Brotherhood so long as he shall be a member. These rules are two: The Rule of Prayer and the Rule of Service. The Rule of Prayer is to pray daily for the spread of Christ's kingdom among young men and for God's blessing upon the labors of the Brotherhood. The Rule of Service is to make an earnest effort each week to bring at least one young man within hearing of the Gospel of Jesus Christ as set forth in the services of the church, young people's prayer-meetings, and young men's Bible classes.

The Badge is a button, made of various materials, but always in the colors, red, orange, and black; the red star being the symbol suggested by the Motto, and the three colors in combination, recalling the glorious struggle for civil and religious freedom and Gospel truth, in which the Netherlands conquered for the world.

The Brotherhood develops the unused and often unsuspected spiritual power latent in Christian young men, and increases that power by combination and co-operation in pursuit of a definite object. It places under the pastor's hand an agency by which he can reach many young men whom he cannot reach personally. It utilizes for Christ and salvation that peculiar comradeship of young men which is often—the more's the pity—the chain by which they are dragged to sin and destruction.

The Brotherhood is growing rapidly. It will increase much more rapidly as its working comes to be more generally understood. All evangelical denominations are heartily invited to establish chapters. Pastors who desire to find work for their young men whereby they will the more readily lay hold of other young men, drawing them into the services of the church and so into the possibility and hope of all good, are invited to correspond with the secretary of the Federal Council and to establish chapters in their congregation. Earnest young men may also find here suggestions for the direction of their powers which will greatly enhance their usefulness.—Christian World.

FRATERNAL INSURANCE IN KANSAS.

A dispatch from Topeka, Kans., July 12, reports as follows:

A fraternal insurance society, the Knights of Columbia, is in trouble. This society was started two years ago, and since that time has spread rapidly, as organizers have been receiving considerable fees for instituting lodges. The immediate trouble arises from failure to pay the death loss of John F. Lee, of Atchison, who was in good standing at the time of his death, although an assessment had been levied and paid. No reason has yet been assigned by the "supreme lodge" why the loss has been rejected nor why an assessment was made for a claim which has been refused. In a death which occurred in this city the heirs of the dead man were paid one-half the face of the policy, although the full amount was raised.

The officers of the supreme lodge claim that they were justified in making the compromise because the person had been addicted to the use of liquor, which was against the rules of the order. The same officers declared in an interview with a newspaper representative that they would consent to pay $1,000 on the Atchison death, though not liable for a cent of it. The policy was for $3,000. "We do this in order to save the credit of our order. The claim is blackmail, as the man died in the Keeley Institute, when he had taken oath that he was not in the habit of using intoxicating liquors. He committed perjury, but we will pay his heirs $1,000 rather than have a scandal, though we ought not to pay a cent."

He admitted that there had been an assessment, but alleged that the unexpended balance would be applied on other losses, as was done in the Topeka case. The Atchison lodge threatens to surrender its charter and demand a legal investigation unless the claim is paid in full. An investigation is not courted, and a compromise will be sought, which will probably be accepted rather than incur total loss.

No one seems to know who the supreme officers are, or where they meet, except that the man who founded the order is the supreme commander, the principal organizer and the committee to settle losses. There are so many of these fraternal insurance societies in this State that it is impossible to keep track of them. By a provision of law they are exempt from supervision by the superintendent of insurance. All they have to do to come under the law is to have a ritual with a little secret work, and then they can seek policy-holders without hindrance. It is estimated that there are over two hundred thousand holders of beneficiary certificates in the various secret society insurance companies, all conducted on the assessment plan. In addition to paying all losses that occur within the grand lodge jurisdiction, they are liable to be assessed by the supreme lodges under the provisions of relief calls when they send aid to other States.

The failure of a society of this kind, like the Iron Hall, does not seem to affect those who are caught by the fraternal features of the secret order. Any new society of this character can readily procure members and build up flourishing lodges in all the cities, appeals to the office-holding ambition of men being the bait that catches those who comprise the workers in the securing of new members. Some of these orders are apparently on a sound basis, having thousands of members. These are cited as examples by the concerns that cannot bear investigation.

FORMER WORLD'S FAIRS.

It is interesting to gather data from reports in reference to world's fairs that have been held years ago and it is a significant fact that only the first one, in London in 1851, and the last one, in Paris in 1889, made a financial success. In the first one, held in London, and known as the Crystal Palace because of its construction, over 1,000,000 square feet of glass being used; the gates were opened 144 days. Its cost and expenses reached the sum of $1,500,000 and the receipts from all sources were $2,500,000, leaving net a round million, says a writer in the Rock Island railway's bright publication, the Western Trail.

The building was a significant length, 1,851 feet, and the year was 1851. It was not opened Sundays, and the admission on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday was 25 cents. On Friday 62½ cents, and for Saturday the admission was raised to $1.25. Gentlemen's season tickets were 3 guineas, or $15. The ladies were highly favored by having the price of their season tickets shaded to 2 guineas, or about $10.

In 1854 the exhibition at Munich was classed with the international exhibitions. It was held in a crystal palace built by King Ludwig II., who vacated the throne in 1848, and to this man is due the building of this great enterprise, for at that time and place he had not the co-operation of the people. It was held in one building, and a veritable crystal palace it was, being 800 feet long, 260 feet wide, and 87 feet high.

The number of acres covered was twelve. The expenditures were $450,000 and receipts but about $200,000.

Paris in 1855 opened a world's fair that ran 200 days and cost $5,000,000 and the receipts from all sources were less than $1,000,000. Therefore the holding of this world's fair was attended by a loss of fully $4,000,000.

London followed in 1862 and nearly held her own in an exhibition opened 171 days; and in 1867 Paris again invited the world to exhibit and look on another fair international in its character.

This was not financially successful; and then came Vienna in 1873 and Philadelphia in 1876 in honor of the first centennial year of independence.

Paris opened again in 1878, and Melbourne in 1880, both failing to draw the crowds to make them financially successful. Paris yet again came to the front after a lapse of nine years, and in 1889 planned and completed the greatest of world's fairs up to that day. The machinery palace was the largest building on the ground and its length was 1,378 feet and width 406 feet. It covered about eleven acres. The French section cost over $1,000,000, palace of arts one and one-half millions, and half a million was expended in garden and parks.

The great attraction, however, was Eiffel's tower, which cost $1,000,000. It was put up by private enterprise, and proved financially successful. The income to the management from all sources was $10,000,000 and the total outlay was about $8,300,000. This showed a net gain of over $1,000,000.

Next in world's fairs comes our own, which it is expected will be the third great success.

TRY IT YOURSELF.

Over five hundred veterinary surgeons have signed a paper condemning tight check-reins, as painful to horses and productive of disease, causing distortion of the wind-pipe to such a degree as to impede respiration. They mention paralysis of the muscles of the face, migraines, apoplexy, coma, and inflammation as some of the results of its use. The over-check rein will often cause a horse to become knee-sprung. It destroys the delicate sensitiveness to the bit which is most desirable in guiding a horse. Dr. Kitching says: "If a horse pulling a load has his head held in by a check-rein, he cannot throw his weight into his collar, and is hindered from giving his body that position which is most natural and effective." He goes on to speak of the consequent strain of his limbs and muscles, and the injury caused by the constrained position of the head, whereby the breathing and circulation are affected, and the horse made restless, irritable, and uncomfortable. He says: "The check-rein inflicts unceasing torture upon the animal in another way. By holding the head upwards, it puts the muscles of the neck on a constant strain. They become painfully uneasy and tired. If the horse cannot bear it, he rests the weight of his head upon the rein, and his mouth is violently stretched. Thus he only exchanges one torment for another. To sum in a word, the check-rein lessens a horse's strength; brings on disease; keeps him in pain; frets and injures his mouth, and spoils his temper."

The following is from the pastor of a Methodist Episcopal church, after reading Rev. Dr. Caradine's excellent sermon, to which he refers. He writes under date of June 28, 1893: "I just wanted to drop you a note, to thank you for a pamphlet you once gave me, entitled: 'Are Secret Societies a Blessing or a Curse?' From the time I read that I began to turn from them; and, to-day, thank God! I am free from everything of the kind and expect to be. I have withdrawn from the I. O. G. T. and the A. O. U. W., and, instead of the A. O. U. W., I have insured my life in the 'Northwestern' of Milwaukee, Wis., an open institution. I feel free and clear now."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Women as natural reformers.—Over-education vs. under-education.—Prof. Whitney and the smokers.—Praying for the Pope.—A strange expression by a judge of the Superior Court.

Hawthorne was more of a romancer than he was a practical observer of the prevailing tendencies of the age. This made him a democrat in politics, and in all moral questions a conservative of conservatives. Like Sir Walter Scott, his mind dwelt in the past, and the creations of his brain lived, moved and had their being in a state of society altogether different from that out of whose opposing elements is born this strife of moral ideas which makes it so pre-eminently the age of reform. Hawthorne might, and probably did, honor the apostles of freedom, like Garrison and Lovejoy, but it would have been impossible for him to have followed in their footsteps, or even to have recognized the true grandeur of the sacrifices they made, sufficiently to become their eulogist. Lacking in sympathy with the radicals of his time, he was also lacking in prophetic foresight and insight. Of this we have a curious instance in the "Blithedale Romance," where he says, alluding to its principal heroine, Zenobia—a thinly-veiled Margaret Fuller:—"Women are not natural reformers, but become such by the pressure of exceptional misfortunes." This was almost an unpardonable blunder, provided it was a blunder and not a willful refusal to see the truth. Hawthorne was the contemporary of Abby Kelly Foster, and the Grimke sisters; of Lydia Maria Child and Lucretia Mott, none of whom became a reformer "through the pressure of exceptional misfortunes," but their own generous sympathy with the oppressed, and that intensity of moral convictions which would not allow them to stay behind.

"The sweet, safe shelter of the household hearth," when their sisters in black under American law had no right to home, husbands or children. If the wizard of Concord could rise from his grave under the pines in Sleep Hollow Cemetery, he would find, to his surprise, that women are the natural reformers of the world. In fact, reformers, whether men or women, are seldom made such by circumstances, but by the laws of their own being, which preclude their being anything else.

An English writer in the Athenæum makes this rather paradoxical critique on Sumner: "It was his misfortune to be an idealist, and yet it was his idealism which made him a force in American politics." Certainly if our politicians to-day were possessed by that same divine idealism which made him "prefer principle to expediency at all hazards and under all circumstances," we should have statesmen where we now have demagogues, and perhaps the muse of American history might have been spared the shame of recording our broken faith with China. Great men have always been idealists; and if our country now lacks the former it is because she has so few of the latter. And that is not all. In the name of "expediency" the most impolitic things are done, and in our narrow and sordid worship of the "practical," we are in danger of becoming very unpractical. The Saturday Review has lately been discussing the evil of over-education. The term is a misnomer. It is under-education that we are suffering from. Our schools and colleges every year turn out a certain quota of under-educated young people who think it a disgrace to soil their hands with honest labor. This is a sore evil under the sun. Cincinnatus at the plough in the heroic days of Rome, Madame Roland cooking the family dinners, and Gladstone "lifting up axes against the thick trees," are illustrations of that delight which real culture takes in laboring occasionally with the hands. In fact, the greatest men and women have always found their chosen recreation in some form of manual labor.

President Whitney, of the West End, still "halts between two opinions" in regard to allowing smokers to practically monopolize six seats on every electric car. The five thousand two hundred women who have signed the petition which is thus cavalierly treated, have no votes, and the men who smoke do; and moneyed as well as political corporations are quick to recognize this fact. They are of the opinion of Tom, the college coachman, who, last fall, when political excitement was at its height, got into an argument with a group of Wellesley girls on the merits of their respective candidates. Tom is of Hibernian lineage, and of course a strong Democrat. Worsted in the argument, he finally turned away, remarking: "Well, girls, you may talk, but next Tuesday I shall be worth more than the whole of you." Is it strange that to these intelligent young women this answer from an illiterate Irish coachman was the most effective woman-suffrage speech to which they had ever listened? A woman may be able to calculate eclipses, and have all the literature of the ancient and modern world at her tongue's end, but when it comes to influencing political parties or business corporations, she must stand aside for Tom, the coachman. She is a nonentity, politically considered; he is a man and a voter.

Like causes will produce like effects, without respect to locality. The craze for cycling is said to be the same serious menace to church-going, and the same efficient agent in Sabbath desecration in England that it is here, though report does not say whether the new disease, kyphosis bicyclistarum, has yet reached there. If half as dreadful as its name, bicycling ought to go speedily out of fashion, along with all that irreverence and ignoring of which it has helped so much to increase.

Nine days of prayer and devotion were begun last week in honor of "Our Lady of Mt. Carmel," at the Convent of Mt. Carmel, Roxbury, Mass. To all who visit the convent chapel from noon of the 15th to sunset of the 16th, a plenary indulgence will be given, provided that the prayers are offered up for the Holy Father. It might be supposed that an infallible Pope had no occasion to be prayed for like ordinary mortals, and that they must stand far more in need of his prayers than the Holy Father possibly could of theirs. As a matter of fact, I believe nobody in the world needs praying for more than the poor old man of the Vatican; but, regarding it from a Romanist point of view, it involves no little inconsistency.

It is said that among the foreigners who borrow books from the Boston Library, the Russians form the majority. This would seem to indicate a higher degree of intellectual advancement than in other nationalities.

If Judge Sherman, of the Superior Court, actually said of District Attorney Knowlton's argument against Miss Borden, at the late famous trial, that "he would rather have made that address than to be attorney general," it shows a strange moral obliquity in one holding that high position. If it is praiseworthy for an officer of the law to commit downright perjury in his attempt by shrewd handling to make falsehoods for the moment appear as truths, in order to convict an innocent woman, Knowlton may justly claim the meed; but for my part I should hate to be on trial for my life before a judge who could thus speak of an address that in its dark, cruel malignancy showed far more of Satanic inspiration than judicial calmness or acumen.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 12, 1893.

The return of the two physicians, Dr. Kempster and Surgeon Irwin, of the Marine Hospital service, from a six months' tour of investigation of the cholera in Europe and of the methods used to prevent the spread of the disease, as well as to keep it from obtaining a foothold, and the publication of a synopsis of Dr. Kempster's preliminary report to the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital service, under whose direction the investigation was made, served to remind the people of the efforts that are being made by the authorities to keep the cholera out of the United States, and to prevent the spread of the scourge from the few cases that may be expected, in spite of all vigilance, to reach our ports from time to time.

The investigators covered nearly the whole of Europe and a considerable portion of Egypt and the Holy Land. They regard the swarms of Russian pilgrims constantly flocking to Jerusalem and camping around that city in filth and squalor as a source of danger to the whole world, as they come in contact with people from everywhere; and they are at a loss to understand why the Turkish authorities refused to allow the English-speaking residents of Jerusalem to replace at their own expense the old sewers, built by Solomon, and to furnish the city with an ample supply of pure water. They visited Smyrna, headquarters of the wool, rug, goats' and camels' hair trade, and looked into the quarantine system at Constantinople, which was found to be careless and ineffectual. Vessels go through the Bosphorus with no examination whatever, and the medical officer in charge of the so-called quarantine station told the Americans that it was impossible to carry out a proper system, even if money was allowed him to do it, because no sanitary measure suggested by him is adopted unless authority for it can be found in the Koran, which in Turkish minds is the only authority.

The investigation at Constantinople also convinced the physicians that it was along the route taken by the pilgrims to and from Mecca and other Moslem shrines, and those followed by merchandise, that the cholera came from its original home in India to Mecca, passing thence northward through Persia to points on the Caspian Sea and into Russia; also that the expulsion of the Hebrews from the southwestern provinces of Russia, where the cholera prevails, is a source of great danger, as the exiles swarm through the Mediterranean, spreading cholera germs in all its ports.

After looking through Athens, Dr. Irwin remained at Naples to assist the American consul in his efforts to ward off the disease, while Dr. Kempster followed the route of emigrants from the northern points of Europe bound for America, and was not surprised when he found cholera along his route. He expected it. He found that the commerce between France and England, which is practically unrestricted, was a menace; also that the activity of our consuls at other European ports had driven the emigrants to avoid detention at ports under suspicion by coming to America via England. A mass of medical information was obtained that is regarded as very valuable, although it is thought to be practically impossible for the cholera to become epidemic in America, because of the intelligence of Americans, and their readiness to adopt needed precautions at the proper time. Still, it is well to be prepared for the worst at all times. Congress has provided the means and the people have a right to expect that full advantage will be taken of them by the authorities, and they seem to be doing it.

The High Tent of the Independent Order of Rechabites in North America is holding its annual session in this city. The High Chief Ruler has made some radical recommendations as to changes in the ritual and laws of the order, which are being considered as I write. This evening a complimentary excursion down the Potomac and a banquet are on the program for the entertainment of the visitors.

The friends of moral reform are watching with the greatest interest the working of the Board of Children's Guardians, which was authorized by the last Congress, and which began its existence July 1. The idea is to provide a way to dispose of children who get before our courts in other ways than in committing them to jail or the reform school, as had heretofore to be done. The guardians are appointed by the judges of the criminal and police courts, and serve without compensation. The present board has nine members, three of whom are ladies. An office has been opened by the board, in charge of Mr. W. H. Lewis, late of the Minneapolis State school, and already it has assumed the guardianship of a number of children below the age of 16. The greatest good is expected to be accomplished by placing the children in the houses of Christian families, and so great is the interest manifested in saving the children that more than fifty families have notified the board of their willingness to each take a child. Whenever circumstances will justify it the board will render material assistance to the natural protectors of the children and leave the children in their care. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND SECRETARY.

THE MASONIC JEWEL.

CHICAGO, June 13, 1893.

The "jewel" of Masonry is not the "jewel of consistency," judged by the late decision of the Grand Master of Michigan compared with the common practice of the fraternity. The press credit this high functionary with the official announcement that it is unlawful to convene a lodge in a building over a saloon, etc.

If this "exalted" Masonic jurist will visit Chicago he will find, on the corner of Halsted and Randolph streets, a Masonic temple, and in the basement a saloon in full blast, advertising and dispensing all kinds of liquor in a public and shameless manner. I saw, to-day, the open way to this vault of death and hell, and read, chiseled upon a solid block of granite, at the top of the stairs, this inscription. "West Chicago Masonic Benevolent Institution, A. L. 5869, A. D. 1869." Over and about the entrance I read: "Henry Walker, liquors and cigars: West Side Brewing Company's Pilsener, Besley's ale and porter on draught; 15 ball-pool, beer vaults," etc.

The sight was not new to me, for at the time of the great fire, in 1871, I took a note of it.

When the churches in the vicinity of this professed almoner of the needy were sheltering and feeding the homeless and destitute without fee or reward, this same insulting, libelous inscription stood out boldly upon the corner-stone of the "West Chicago Benevolent Institution;" and, without proffering a morsel of bread to the hungry, or a garment to "clothe the naked," it was serenely pursuing its wonted benevolent (?) vocation, of making widows of wives, orphans of children, paupers of prosperous business men, styes of wretchedness and crime of homes of contentment and thrift, and crowding the domain of the lost with victims of its hellish "benevolence". I have frequently looked down into this yawning chasm since, while passing, and am confident that there has been no intermission in its soul-destroying "benevolence".

This is not a case of "emergency," or a "temporary make-shift," but it is the bottom-tier in the moral and material edifice which Masonry has erected, and which it owns and controls, and where a lodge, chapter, commandery, council, or some other Masonic gathering, is held almost every week-day night through the year. Neither is it an exceptional case. A seceder from a lodge, the most high-toned and aristocratic in Boston, told me of cases where men in the high grades who were temperate and respectable in the light, but who were so overcome with strong drink in the night revels of Bacchanalian orgies that they had to be carried to their homes from the Masonic temple at the corner of Boylston and Tremont streets by their "brethren," who, as "Old Bruiser," could stand more of this "blessed charity".

Conversing with an adhering and active member of that Masonic body, I referred to the above facts and said: "How can you sustain such proceedings?" He replied: "It is a shame, and I have protested against it; but I can't help it, and am not responsible. I don't go to the lodge very often," etc. The fact that he was confirming the charges of dissipation I had brought against the lodge seemed never to have occurred to him; but the proof was all the stronger from the fact that it was unintentional and given by one attempting a defence of an order to which he belonged.

If we would know the system, we must study it in its centers of power, and not in some country lodge, or in the occasional utterances or edicts of some conscientious member, or captious or ignorant official; and, in view of all the facts on record, the well-known customs and nearly universal practice of lodges on the question of abstinence from intoxicants, it seems a strange freak of fancy, or a spasm of virtue into which the Grand Master of Michigan has fallen, when he attempts to knock the underpinning out of the "West Chicago Masonic Benevolent Institution," and thousands of less pretentious Masonic bodies, whose reciprocal influence and patronage keep both the saloons and the lodges open on the "black and dark night," thus exposing the husbands and sons of pure and loving mothers to the allurements and arts of her "whose house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death".

J. P. STODDARD.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN INDIANA.

PERU, Indiana, July 13, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am three miles from town, on Mr. Crane's farm, and am naturally interested in my surroundings. One week ago there was little wheat or hay cut in this section; to-day there is little standing. The speed and ease with which the products of the farm may be transferred to the granary would not have been thought possible a few years since. The self-binder enters the grainfield. In a few hours it easily does what would have taken a week of hard labor before it was known. Hay is cut in the morning. In the afternoon a team may be seen drawing a wagon with a crawfish looking machine attached behind the hayrack. This machine is raking and pitching the hay on the wagon faster than two men once could. Thus labor-saving machinery enables the farmer with large fields to secure his crops with greater ease and rapidity than the farmer with small fields who cannot afford the expense of these machines. May not the depreciation in price of farm-products be due somewhat to the fact that more land can now be cultivated by one man than formerly, and hence, an over-production? As the man with the little field must take the same price for what he raises as the man with the big field, he must grow poor while the other grows fat.

Christianity says: Let the man with the big field help the man with the small one. Lodgery says: Let the men with big fields help one another. The men with the little fields must sink or swim without their aid.

This world is run on the principle of "the devil take the hindmost." Christianity alone cares for the weak and feeble. Selfishness is evidently increasing in our land in the same proportion as the lodges are multiplying.

Catholicism has a foothold in this section. During the past week I have met several of this faith who have been as kind to me as any one could be. Seemingly, they were persons of good sense, yet strangely blinded. On Monday we were entertained by a lady of refinement, who took no little pains to make our visit pleasant. In her arms was as bright and promising a baby-boy as may be found. I thought, can it be possible that this mother is so blinded as to wish that bright child to be brought under all the debasing influences of the Romish priesthood? The brother of this lady is not a professor of religion. His relations were anxious that he should become a Catholic. The priest sent word that if he would come and see him, he would give him a glass of wine and a cigar. Not wishing to become a drunkard or a fool, he declined the offer, and has since led a sober, industrious life. This same priest has just had an anniversary gathering. The largest liquor-dealer in town was said to be the central figure of this gathering. Just think of pure, innocent children going to such a degrading creature as this to confess the inmost secrets of their hearts! Women shut up in a box with him to answer such questions as I have read in a confession-book, which the other day I found on the table of a Catholic! Yet I remember that I might have been doing the same thing, had I the same surroundings and no better light than they.

The pastor of the Brethren church (Loree) fell off a barn and injured himself so that he could not preach on Sabbath evening. Your agent was asked to fill the pulpit. I spoke twice to full houses, in the evening warning the young people to shun the idolatrous lodge worship. Several Masons and Odd-fellows were present.

I have been driving about the country much of the time, in company with friends Crabe and Miller.

Future meetings are supposed to be arranged as follows: Denver, Seventh-day Adventist church, Saturday eve.; Old-School German Baptist church, Mexico, Sabbath; M. E. church, McGrawsville, Monday eve.; North Grove United Brethren church, Tuesday eve.

Rev. Mr. Osburn, pastor of the M. E. church at Bunker Hill, sent me an invitation to preach for him on Sabbath morning. I received the invitation too late to comply with his request. This brother told me he took one degree of the I. O. O. F., but never went to the lodge after the night he was initiated. He was thoroughly disgusted. Let us toil faithfully on, for in due time we shall reap if we faint not.

W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LODGE IN THE CHURCH AT THE SOUTH.

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex., July 5, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been receiving the Cynosure for several weeks and am always delighted while perusing it. I indorse the principles of the Cynosure, and the stand which it has always taken in exposing popular sins. I know that great good has been done through its columns in showing up the evils of the lodge system and the liquor traffic—more than through any other medium of which I know.

I wish means might be raised to put two or three such men as Rev. R. N. Countee into this Southern field to expose the heinousness of the lodge system and the terrible effects of the liquor traffic. I have no doubt that a vast amount of good would flow out of such labors.

I am sorry that Bro. Countee could not visit our little town while down in Texas. He would have had my warmest sympathy and most hearty support.

Our town is lodge-ridden. The secret society business has almost destroyed the spiritual energies of the church.

When members are reproved for neglecting meetings of the church for the meetings of the lodge, they are easily offended and ready to defend the lodge at any cost. They often say, "The church does not promise to give me anything when I am sick, nor my family when I am dead; therefore, I am going to look out for number one." They seem to have lost all sense of moral obligation. Lodge interest far transcends that of the church. The lodge is requisite to good standing in social circles and church membership. Some go so far as to say, You must be a member of a lodge in order to be respected in church circles; and many try to carry out this idea by snubbing non-lodgers. There is no spiritual life or work in the churches of this town, because the lodge has absorbed all spiritual life and destroyed the influence of members for good. The church and the world are on a level, and go hand in hand. Indeed, you hardly know church-members from no church-members. They all seem one for the world. Indeed, I cannot think of any place which might exceed this in spiritual indifference and lodge idolatry. I am constantly expecting to witness a special judgment upon this town for its exceeding great wickedness. Pray for us.

Yours in Christian work, E. E. SIMS.

Pastor First Cong. Church.

"WOMEN AT A BOXING MATCH."

July 6, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The following, cut from the Boston Globe, takes its caption from "the surprise of the evening," mentioned therein:

Highland lodge, 235, Knights of Honor, celebrated the 20th anniversary with ladies' night in old Masonic hall, Roxbury, last evening.

The large hall was tastefully decorated with flags and streamers, and with the bright costumes of the women made a brilliant effect.

An excellent entertainment was provided in which the following participated: E. W. Jones, address of welcome; Miss E. L. Keyser, piano solo; A. E. Cahill, songs; Harry James, reader; A. W. Preece, flute solo; Josef Linden, songs; Miss Woodhead, recitation; Harry James, impersonation; Miss May Dee, song; Miss Fanny Stroud, accompanist; Miss Anna H. White, recitation; Mr. Elsbree, song; Mrs. Fred Bogardus, accompanist.

The surprise of the evening was a three-round boxing match between Charles Lathrop and E. L. Ripley, two colored boys of about 10, who gave an excellent exhibition under the direction of Arthur Cahill.

About 150 couples enjoyed the remainder of the evening in dancing, with an intermission for supper.

The floor was under the direction of W. J. Melvin, assisted by A. E. Cahill, John Barlow, D. B. Andrews, and A. W. Preece.

Possibly some of the women to whom it refers are enthusiastic, not only about the Knights of Honor, who provided "the surprise," but the Knights Templar, or other Masons, who have ordinarily worshiped in this hall. If they could have been there when it was not "ladies' night," but the night of a Masonic initiation, they might have found a still greater surprise.

ANTI-SECRECY LIBRARIES IN COLLEGES.

THYNE INSTITUTE, REV. J. H. VEAZEY, PRINCIPAL, CHASE CITY, Va., Feb. 3, 1893.

THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION:—The books sent for use in our school, at the request of Rev. Samuel F. Porter, came in good condition, and will do much good. I am placing them in the hands of our pupils in the highest department. I am sure they will exert an influence against secretism that is greatly needed among this people. I thank you, in the name of all these colored pupils, and trust that great good may result from the reading of the books in our school. Sincerely your co-worker,

LITERATURE.

REVELATION BY CHARACTER: Illustrated from Old Testament Lives. By Robert Tuck, B. A., author of "First Three Kings of Israel," etc. One volume, pp. 308. New York: Wilbur B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union. Cloth, $2.00.

The plan of this work is novel and interesting. The leading idea in the studies is that every man has his own marked individuality, and his precise mission to his generation in that individuality. The author believes that a man's character is his distinguished endowment, and that it is of more importance than anything that he did, or in any circumstances in which he may have been placed. The object of the author is to illustrate that God has been pleased to give many invaluable moral lessons to the human race, through the characters of the men whom he has sent forth. He writes clearly, and exhibits the candid temper of the true scholar, but does not lack positiveness of conviction, taking up and discussing in a fair, candid, and intelligent way, which leaves little to be denied. The twenty-four chapters of the volume treat of many Bible characters, the author having selected most suggestive titles; among them we note the following: "Righteous Abel," "Meek Moses," "Self-satisfied Solomon," "Fretful Jonah," and "Hopeful Isaiah." The various remaining titles are as suggestive as those mentioned. Mr. Tuck's works have been received with great favor, and we have no doubt that this excellent volume will command attention.

The titles of the twenty-four chapters which this volume contains, and the mottoes attached to each, are in themselves a pleasing study, and as follows: Righteous Abel—Religion must have a man's heart in it. Patient Noah—God tests obedience by requiring patience. Spiritual Abraham—The noble life is simply following God's lead. Self-conscious Lot—There is special peril for the self-centred. Peaceful Isaac—The quiet man has his own quiet power. Bargaining Jacob—Religion may be a life-struggle with disabilities. Talented Joseph—A man gets to do what he is fitted to do. Meek Moses—Life is a discipline of responsibility. Eloquent Aaron—Second-rate men often have important missions. Persistent Joshua—To many men activity is inspiration. Energetic Caleb—It is of first importance to be thorough in religion. Sign-seeking Gideon—God is ever ready to strengthen weak faith. Playful Samson—Troubles are lightened when we can laugh over them. Undisciplined Saul—It is well for a man to bear the yoke in his youth. Friendly Jonathan—True friendship may demand self-sacrifice. Pious David—Early piety unfolds into steadfast goodness. Wily Joab—The man of schemes is sure to over-scheme. Willful Absalom—The spoiled child becomes the self-willed man. Self-satisfied Solomon—A man may trust his wisdom rather than his God. Lonely Elijah—He who stands for God can dare to stand alone. Homely Elisha—Religion seeks its sphere in the common-place things of life. Fretful Jonah—Weakness comes from undue self-consideration. Hopeful Isaiah—The light of God's future is the cheer for man's present. Faithful Daniel—Persistence in goodness secures final triumph.

History of the Women's Crusade in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1874. By Mrs. J. S. Collins. Paper, pp. 31. Pittsburgh: Press of Murdoch, Kerr & Co. Price, 10 cents.

This pamphlet comprises a paper read at the nineteenth anniversary of the "Crusaders," April 8, 1893. The daring warfare waged against the saloons and the liquor traffic generally, when the women invaded the grog-shops with prayers, hymns, and exhortations, unmindful of the abuse and persecution heaped upon them, was one of the grandest triumphs of the efforts to reform mankind ever undertaken by the sex, and did more, we believe, to strengthen their influence in social advancement than any previous event; and to-day the cause of woman suffrage is enjoying the impetus given to it by the work of these sterling Christian women in those exciting days. Woman's place as a reformer can never be better understood than by reading a history of these "crusades."

OBITUARY.

ANDREW GUTHRIE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your readers will be interested in looking at the picture of Andrew Guthrie, a sainted father in our reform work, who recently exchanged the cross for the crown. There is no truer test of character than how a man impresses himself upon his children. I know of no father whose sons and daughters are standing more bravely on the front line of battle in reform work than those of Andrew Guthrie. Often in my reform campaigns have I found rest and inspiration in the homes of two of them—Mrs. Martha B. Park, of Alexandria, Neb., and Mrs. Susie G. Park, of Talmo, Kan. The former, at my request, has written me the following account of her father's life. It is due that we cherish his memory, as well as learn the secret of his power: Bloomington, Ind. M. A. GAULT.

THE MEMOIR.

My father was the son of William and Martha Brewster Guthrie, and was born near Paisley, Renfrewshire, Scotland, in November, 1815, and died at his home in Abingdon, Illinois, Wednesday afternoon, April 26, 1893, after an illness of about five weeks. He was of Scotch Covenanter blood. His mother's people, the Brewsters, suffered during the persecution.

His faith in Christ, which he professed when a young man, never wavered during a long and eventful life. He was a member of the U. P. church of Viola for over twenty years, and united with the U. P. church of Aledo on his removal to that place, remaining a member till his death.

The Aledo Times said of him after his death: "He lived quietly but earnestly a sincere Christian, and an upright pure life, taking the Word of God as his guide and rule. He searched diligently for the truth, and when he found it he clung steadfastly to it with unwavering faith in the ultimate triumph of the right."

Honesty and purity of thought and purpose were strong characteristics of his daily walk. Though his temper was hasty, yet he was kind-hearted and generous, and was highly respected by rich and poor wherever known. He opposed vice in every form, and was interested in all the leading reforms of the day. He was radical in his opposition to secret orders, especially Masonry, because he had read and studied their character and aims. Many years ago, while in Canada, he joined the Orangemen, unknown to my mother, who was strongly opposed to all secret orders; but he left them before a year, at the earnest request of my mother, who said that she never had a day's peace of mind while he was a member.

At Viola, Ill., he joined the Grange. He had connected with the U. P. church there by a letter from the Canada U. P. church, which had no testimony against secret orders. His pastor, the now sainted Rev. W. S. McClanahan, preached a sermon against secret orders, showing the church's position. This sermon convinced my father of the evils of lodgery, and ever afterward he sought the light on this greatest of reforms. He read "Finney on Masonry," and Miss Flagg's "Holden with Cords," and was an earnest reader of the Cynosure for many years, and in deep sympathy with the work of the National Christian Association.

He was a thorough party Prohibitionist, and a firm believer in woman suffrage; saying often that the liquor question would not be settled till woman used the ballot. So highly did he value his vote, that he cut short a very pleasant visit with his children and friends in Aledo, last fall, and hurried home to vote for prohibition. He was anti-rum, anti-tobacco, anti-lodge and anti-Romanist; in fact, he was a true reformer, and our dear mother was a true help meet for him.

Their fortieth and fiftieth wedding anniversaries were joyfully celebrated by the children and friends.

My father was married to Susannah Thompson, December 31, 1840, and came to America in 1849. He lived in Hamilton, Canada, till 1853, when we moved to St. Helens, Huron Co., where, with the help of my two elder brothers, my father felled the dense forest trees and built us a comfortable home. It was on his farm and through his instrumentality, that the first school-house was built, and the first Sabbath-school organized.

Among my earliest recollections are the family altar, and the children on Sabbath evenings repeating the catechism to father, while mother prepared the evening meal. The Sabbath was a day of delight in my childhood's home, and we were taught to reverence the Lord's day and call it the Sabbath.

In 1864 we left our much loved Canadian home, and moved to a farm near Viola, Ill. In 1885 father settled in Aledo; and in 1891 he and mother moved to Abingdon, while their two youngest children, Rev. Samuel L., and Jessie C., were attending college.

My mother and nine children—four sons and five daughters, survive to mourn the loss of a most affectionate husband and father. Besides those mentioned above, there were Wm. A. Guthrie, of Rock Island; Robert Guthrie, of Aledo; Andrew D. Guthrie, of Seattle, Washington; Mrs. E. B. Stuart, Evanston, Ill., and Mrs. M. M. Stuart, North Henderson, Ill.

My father's remains were taken to Aledo, where services were held in the U. P. church by his pastor, Rev. W. M. Storey. Mother and six of the children were permitted to follow his remains to the beautiful Aledo cemetery, where they rest in hope of a glorious resurrection.

MARY MOSER

was born in Pike county, Ohio, and died in Jewell county, Kans., April 24, 1893, aged 68 years, 7 months and 22 days. Her maiden name was Ruchman. When about twenty years old she professed religion, joined the United Brethren in Christ, and lived a consistent Christian.

For a number of years previous to her death she was deprived of the privilege of attending public worship, being a constant sufferer from heart-trouble and other ailments arising therefrom. But she bore all her sufferings without murmuring.

She was very radical on the anti-secret reforms; was a constant reader of the Christian Cynosure for the last thirteen years, and of the Christian Conservator for five years.

Our mother has left us and we are lonely without her. Three sons preceded her to the other world, but she leaves five others, three daughters, and many friends to mourn her loss.

Funeral services were conducted by Mrs. Irene B. Hester and Mrs. Laura Coppel, of the Friends' church, taking for a text Rev. 21:4.

We mourn not as those who have no hope. R. SCHNELLBACHER.

UP TO A CERTAIN POINT in the progress of Consumption, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a positive remedy. Even in the most advanced cases, it gives comfort and relief; and where other medicines only relieve, this will cure.

But delay is dangerous, with Consumption. In all the conditions that lead to it, the "Discovery" is the remedy. With severe, lingering Coughs or Weak Lungs, nothing acts so promptly. Every disease that can be reached through the blood yields to this medicine. The Scrofulous affection of the lungs that's called Consumption is one of them. For this, and for every other form of Scrofula, for all blood-taints and disorders, and all chronic Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, the "Discovery" is the only remedy so certain that it can be guaranteed. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

Can anything else be "just as good" for you to buy? Don't believe it.

Dr. Sage's Remedy positively cures Catarrh.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1893.

LESSONS FROM THE "VICTORIA" DISASTER.

A cartoon in a recent number of Puck represents John Bull seated on an immense cannon, with three army muskets tied to his back, and weeping for the loss of the "Victoria" war-vessel and her 400 men, that went down in the great deep. This design is both ludicrous and pathetic.

For what purpose was this great war-ship (one of the most costly and powerful that the world has ever seen) constructed, equipped and sent to sea? Manifestly to destroy property and lives, to terrorize and kill the enemies of Great Britain.

With scarcely a moment's notice, in a calm sea, and close to land, the great ship, its commander, and nearly all of its crew, went to the bottom, as the result of what seemed the most improbable and unlikely of accidents. She was destroyed by her companion-ship which was simply obeying the orders of the commander of the "Victoria."

But if "not a sparrow falls to the ground without our heavenly Father," then this terrible event was not causeless, nor without divine permission. Like all other providential events, it was designed to teach a lesson, not only to Britons, but to all to whom the knowledge of the awful calamity may come.

These magnificent and costly war-ships, whose peaceful evolutions resulted so disastrously, represented a professedly Christian nation; perhaps the most enlightened and most powerful, in both material and moral influences, of all the nations of the earth. Even the name of the ship was that of the Christian queen whose long and beneficent reign has added lustre to the history of her nation and to the world.

Her ministers and great statesmen are all professed followers of the Prince of Peace—of him who said, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you and do good unto them that hate you," who never, in all his earthly life, lifted up his hand in violence, or suffered it to be done in his behalf, and whose mission was to bring "peace on earth and good will to men."

The lessons which we ought to learn are mainly these:

1. That it is the providence of God, rather than great armaments, by which nations are preserved, protected, and prospered; and that the most immense and most costly war preparations may be speedily brought to naught and by causes unforeseen and unknowable. The song of Miriam: "The Lord hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and the rider hath he cast into the sea," is liable to be repeated as the triumph over the armies of a great nation to-day just as truly as it was thirty four hundred years ago.

2. That in view of the immense burdens of taxation that bear down the people of Europe, burdens that have been mainly caused by war and war preparations, for defense against professedly Christian people, it is the obvious duty of the leading nations, whose resources are the greatest, to set the example of disarmament, and the reduction of war expenses, before the sorely oppressed people shall take vengeance on their rulers.

3. That the demonstrated practicability of settling all international disputes by arbitration, and the obvious willingness of all the weaker nations to accept the suggestion of such method of settlement from the stronger powers, does away with all necessity for these great armaments, and makes it a duty to proceed at once to use this vast expenditure for the far more Christian purpose of taking away the burdens from the poor.

THE THIRTY-THIRD MASONIC DEGREE.

Years ago, before we were as conversant with Masonry and its methods as we now are, we heard that it was governed by a mysterious one-man power; that however high in the fraternity an adherent might ascend, there was still above him a power to which he must yield allegiance at all hazards and at all cost.

Later study of Masonry has somewhat modified the romance of the ruling sovereign head of the fraternity, and in its place left the truth that the thirty-third degree of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry, known as "The Protector and Conservator of the Order," as the Latin Constitutions of 1786 call it, forms a council of Sovereign (Supremorum) Grand Inspectors-General, whose duties are defined in the same work as follows. We quote from Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, page 728:

"The peculiar duty of their mission is to teach and enlighten their brethren; to preserve charity, union, and fraternal love among them; to maintain regularity in the works in each degree, and to take care that it is preserved by others; to cause the dogmas, doctrines, institutes, constitutions, statutes, and regulations of the order to be reverently regarded, and to preserve and defend them on every occasion."

Ex-Pres. J. Blanchard, in his comments on the thirtieth degree of the Scottish Rite (The Grand-elect Knight Kadosh), observes: "This degree, and almost every other, professes to war on despotism. Yet, Masonry is the completest despotism on earth; the edicts of a Grand Lodge (according to Mackey's Lexicon) must be obeyed without examination. . . . Why, this very ritual gives the Master power to stop and adjourn any debate by three raps with the pommel of his sword!"

The mission of the Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General, however, outranks that of the Kadoshes. Its councils exercise the especial right to maintain regularity in the work of all lower degrees, to see that it is preserved by others, and to enforce a reverent regard for, and the preservation and defence of, "the dogmas, doctrines, institutes, constitutions, statutes, and regulations" of all the subordinate degrees.

To us it seems that the council of this "supreme" degree will rank very well in power with that of a Jesuit "General," or with that other personage known in the Scriptures as "the accuser of the brethren," bearing the sword against recalcitrant Masons and Masonic bodies, as well as the enemies of the fraternity, under a torturing obligation, which is confirmed by drinking wine out of a human skull!

Thus much for the tyrannic power of the thirty-third degree. It is not a one-man power, yet it is ruled by "the Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander," whose word is law, and whom his council is bound, by their individual obligations, to "reverently regard."

Mackey's Encyclopædia and Dictionary of Freemasonry says of this degree: "The number of Inspectors in a kingdom or republic must not exceed nine. These, organized in a body, constitute the Supreme Council, which claims jurisdiction over ALL the ineffable and sublime degrees." "This," says ex-Pres. Blanchard, "explains the object of this otherwise weak degree. It was made to reduce the governors of the Masonic world to nine men, meeting in the little slaveholding city of Charleston, S. C., with Albert Pike for their Sovereign Commander."

So, as we have seen, Freemasonry is not a one-man power; but every adherent of the Chapter and Scottish Rite degrees is governed by a council of nine, although he may never know it.

PERSECUTION, AND VICTORY THROUGH FAITH.

A correspondent, in whose statements we have confidence, but whose name and residence are withheld from publicity for obvious reasons, writes that, owing to domestic troubles, his wife had him arrested for disorderly conduct, she evidently being at that time (last winter) in league with Masons to persecute her husband. Unable to obtain bail, he remained in confinement one night, and the next morning, on making his statement, was discharged from custody.

As he was passing out of the court room, his little two year-old boy was brought to him, in a friendly way. Taking the little fellow into his arms, without a thought of treachery, he turned to open the door, and at once a great hue and cry was made, as we understand it, that he was stealing his own child. The result was re-arrest and, without a hearing, a sentence of incarceration in the work-house, for thirty days.

The situation, as he has reason to believe, was this: The magistrate was a Mason, as was also the minister from whom the woman sought advice.

On entering his cell in the workhouse our informant took from the shelf man's dearest friend, the Bible. Opening it, his eye lighted, first, on Psalm 70. He at once made its prayer his own, in perfect trust, and at the same time sought to answer his prayer by soliciting human aid. His prayer, he testifies, was heard, but his personal efforts were not of the slightest account. He left a note, asking the chaplain to call and see him on the following Thursday afternoon; but it was not until the succeeding Monday, after he had learned that a writ was to be issued for our informant, that the chaplain came, wearing upon his vest a Knight Templar's emblem. By the consent of this prelate, our informant wrote to a prominent doctor of divinity, soliciting aid in his hour of peril. That letter came to nought; but all the time God was answering his prayer.

According to the best information that he has since then been able to obtain, the chaplain of the workhouse, its superintendent, and many (if not all) of the officers under him, were Masons; the city was a stronghold of Freemasonry, and among its residents were hundreds of men who would condemn him to death, if they dared, in the twinkling of an eye.

Why this hatred of the man? What was his offence? Simply laboring all the time with young men, advising them to keep out of the lodge.

Yet, in spite of all the rancor which he encountered, within eight days after his incarceration on a thirty-days' commitment, he was released and free.

But the end was not yet. The man who had taken an active part in securing all the legal papers, etc., against our informant said, when he first heard it reported that his victim was a member of his presbytery—"Well, that man is a liar!"

Through the influence of Masons, and for a little empty honor in the presbytery, this persecutor became one of our informant's worst enemies, doing all he could, in season and out of season, to slander, vilify and maliciously injure him.

"But, God be praised!" writes our correspondent, "he works, and none can hinder." His release from prison was a surprise to Masons, and for a time they were terrified and very quiet, and they even fawned upon him in numerous instances. But this feeling soon wore off, and the same old spirit of malevolence resumed its sway.

Quite a strong force of the presbytery belonged to the Masonic fraternity. The statement was made in the local press that our informant should have a full investigation at the following meeting of the presbytery, and he patiently waited for it. But when the presbytery gathered, not a word relating to his case was spoken. He at once preferred his request for an investigation. It was referred to the committee on bills and overtures. The first man to enter the committee room was the Masonic minister by whose counsel our informant had first been arrested. The report of the committee recommended the appointment of a special committee of five to undertake the investigation. The chairman of the committee on bills and overtures (a Mason) was named for chairman of the special committee, but he declined. The Masonic minister again came to the front, and insisted that the chairman was the right man in the right place on that committee, and must not be excused from service.

On a certain day, under a proper citation, our informant went before the special committee, and the first man whom he there encountered was the same Masonic minister, and a little later came another doctor of divinity,—his active co-worker and brother Mason.

The report of the committee of investigation was presented at a later meeting of the presbytery and said: "Your committee find probable ground for charges and recommend reference to the judiciary committee." Such reference was made, and, after consultation, the judiciary committee named a special committee of seven to try the case. Among the seven were three professional lawyers.

Later, it was discovered that this procedure would be contrary to the book of discipline. This circumstance led to the appointment of a new sub-committee, who were at first indorsed by the presbytery, but afterwards deposed. Who ever heard of Masonic jugglery more characteristic than this?

Yet, as nearly as can now be ascertained, nine out of ten of all the men named on these various committees were Masons! Surely the good hand of God was visible in these failures to condemn our informant.

At last it was voted to try the case before the full presbytery at the next (last June) meeting.

Just before that meeting closed, the charges against our informant were read, and the accused asked, as a special favor, that the trial might proceed at an early day, and the presbytery acquiesced.

The charge and specifications were as follows:

Charge: Unministerial, unchristian and immoral conduct. Specifications: 1. Slandering, vilifying and abusing his wife. 2. Uttering falsehood.

Ten witnesses were specified, three of whom were doctors of divinity. Four of these, there is reason to believe, were Masons. Four of the witnesses were not church members—two of them Masons and two Odd-fellows.

Previous to the trial, the accused was politely informed by a member of the prosecuting committee that "the best and wisest thing for him to do would be to plead guilty, as the presbytery knew to a certainty that he was guilty, and had decided that he was too vile a man to remain in the presbytery a moment longer. This course would save a world of trouble; and it would be better to confess the whole thing and save the trial!"

"Well," replied our informant, after hearing this cool proposition, "when I confess to a list of falsehoods, it will be a long time hence. I am well aware that the presbytery have tried this case on slander and falsehood, and have condemned me without a hearing; but I demand a trial, in spite of that."

The day came; and from about ten in the morning until three in the afternoon, every device that the ingenuity of Freemasons could invent was brought to bear against the accused, reminding one who was present of the condition of the priests of Baal on the day when Elijah's God won the victory.

Finally it was announced that the prosecution rested their case. The accused then called two or three witnesses and made his statement. Thus far had he proceeded in his defense, when the presbytery refused to hear any plea on either side, and demanded an immediate vote as to the guilt of the accused.

Very evidently the Spirit of God was at work in that tribunal, for even the worst enemies of our informant were ashamed and discomfited, daring only to vote in his favor; and the result was his UNANIMOUS ACQUITTAL.

In closing, he says: "I never saw the power of God more plainly manifested in my life. I had placed the utmost confidence in him all the way through; but in the morning (of the trial) I placed it ALL in his hands. I asked for no counsel but his. There was a large attendance, and every one was absolutely free to speak and vote as he would." Surely "this is the victory that overcome the world, even your faith."

THE CHICAGO WOMAN'S EDUCATIONAL UNION

Has now "a local habitation and a name" at the World's Fair. It is a Sunday-closing exhibit, where there had not been a thought of any exhibit at all; but there was a vacancy next to the exhibit of the National Christian Association, which Rev. Henry L. Kellogg suggested should be occupied by the Union. Requisite inquiries were made by him, and about the first of June the way was opened for the occupancy of the unoccupied space.

The lateness of the time, the scarcity of available workers, and of funds, made the Union pause upon the threshold of such an undertaking. But a philanthropist remarked that if the Union thought best to enter upon the enterprise, he would help what he could; and with similar encouragement from other sources, the work was advanced.

One of Miss E. Dreyer's favorite quotations—"Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward," (Exodus 14; 15,) and Major Whittle's verse—"Launch out into the deep," encouraged the Union greatly; the way was graciously opened and the women went forward.

So here they are, part way through the Red

Sea of difficulty, or out in the deep, struggling to secure the thousands (not of fish, but) of requests

TO HAVE THE BIBLE REPLACED IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF CHICAGO, which World's Fair visitors are ready and (many of them) anxious to leave with the Union.

Visitors to the booth of the Union will find on exhibition there, for signature, three petitions; one for those of adult residents of Chicago; one for those of friends from abroad, and another for young people under eighteen years of age to sign.

Within four or five hours of each day it is easy for one who understands the work to secure, on an average, one or two names a minute for these petitions. Many keen remarks and bright ideas are left with those in charge of the exhibit by some who sign the petitions. For example, one says:

"The way to manage this is to give the women a chance, and they will have the Bible back in the public schools."

Another: "A good movement; time it was being made."

Another: "We cannot work on that question too much."

Two girls, of about twelve years of age, seemed to appreciate the value of the Bible in schools, and were both anxious to sign the petition. One of them said: "Yes, indeed! we want the Bible in schools. It was read there when we lived in Pennsylvania, but it is not in Harvey, where we now live. We talk of asking all the scholars in our room to sign a petition requesting the teacher to read the Bible; and if she will not, we think of bringing our Bibles and reading them for ourselves."

"The Lord has sent us, through his stewards," says a prominent promoter of the Union and its object, "up to July 11, $55.17; and the cash expense that it has seemed impossible, with the closest economy, to avoid amounts to $79.20. Any contribution to this work may be sent to Mrs. E. A. Cook, 316 Washington boulevard, or to W. I. Phillips, at the Cynosure office."

The Union's exhibit has received a donation of two fine portraits, and the loan of a third, nicely framed. Much valuable work, including printing, has also been donated. Several acceptable loans have likewise been made, and two oil paintings, with a frame for one, and additional portraits, are promised.

Upon the shelves of the exhibit may be found several valuable books relating to the subject of the Bible in schools, together with (the loan of the Chicago Board of Education) the petition of 16,000 adult residents of Chicago, which was presented to that Board, December 10, 1890, asking for the restoration of the Bible to the city schools.

Should any subscribers to the Cynosure visit the beautiful and effective exhibit of the National Christian Association, the ladies of the Women's Educational Union hope to see them and receive their signatures on the Bible petitions. Their booth is in the Liberal Arts department of the Manufactures Building, in the gallery, section D, 106.

"We ourselves must pilgrims be—launch our Mayflower,
And steer boldly through a desperate winter sea,
Nor attempt the future's portal
With the past's blood-rusted key."

REVIVAL OF THE INQUISITION.

The Protestant Observer reviews, in an article of about 3,000 words, "three large volumes entitled 'Elements of Ecclesiastical Law,' written by Rev. S. B. Smith, D. D., of Paterson, N. J., and formerly Professor of Canon Law. They are published by Benziger Bros., of New York, 'Printers to the Holy Apostolic See.' The work is issued with the Imprimatur of a whole host of American bishops, and affords the clearest evidence that Rome is as intolerable now as ever she was in the dark ages. It is declared, for instance, that the Pope, 'and the church,' still retains the 'power to inflict the penalty of death' (vol. 1., p. 90); and that 'not only Catholics, but also heretics, are at least per se, subject to the laws of the church' (Ibid., p. 97). We read at p. 256 that: 'It is, therefore, de fide that the church, and, therefore, the Pope, has indirectly power over the state, and that consequently the state, in temporal things that involve sin, is subject to the church.' It will be noted that the 'state' here referred to is the United States, and it is claimed that it must be 'subject' to the Church of Rome 'in temporal things that involve sin.' But as all 'temporal' things do involve sin, for morals—and, consequently, sin—come into every action of human life, it follows that, according to Dr. Smith, the papacy should rule the United States in temporal as well as spiritual matters, and not only rule her own children, but—as we have seen above—all so-called Protestant 'heretics' also."

We have not room in this issue, but hope to return to the subject soon, for many other interesting papal decisions in these books, relating to marriages, etc. The following, however, appeals to the feelings of every American Protestant in this country:

At page 334 of Vol. 2, Dr. Smith treats of the "Criminal Trials of Heretics." His first paragraph reads thus:

Although, as we have seen, the Holy See no longer sends special inquisitors throughout the various parts of Christendom for the purpose of trying and sentencing heretics, as was done formerly, yet it were incorrect to imagine that the discussion of the mode of procedure against heretics peculiar to the tribunals of the inquisition, is altogether useless at the present day. For BISHOPS ARE STILL, IN THEIR RESPECTIVE DIOCESES, THE INQUISITORS ex-officio (Inquisitores nati) in matters of heresy, and are bound, in their procedure against heretics to observe the peculiar formalities or special forms of procedure prescribed by the law of the church for the punishment of crimes against the Catholic faith.

"Here," says the Protestant Observer, "are general principles laid down which govern every Roman Catholic diocese in the world. Every bishop of the Church of Rome, whether he be in England, Ireland, Scotland, Canada, or the United States, is, by virtue of his office, an INQUISITOR, for the 'punishment' of heretics; and he is 'bound' so far as lies in his power, to observe the laws of his church on this subject, and these, as we Protestants know full well, include imprisonments, torture and death in the flames."

The same paper refers to another work written by this same Dr. Smith, which is entitled "The New Procedure in Criminal and Disciplinary Causes of Ecclesiastics in the United States," on page 260 of which is the following "Instruction" on the criminal trial of priests, issued by Pope Leo XIII.:

The witnesses, whether for the prosecution or for the defence, in case the secular law does not forbid it, should take the oath to tell the truth, and also, if the case demands, to observe secrecy. Consequently, before they testify, they shall swear that they will tell the truth and also observe secrecy. With greater reason, all those who take any part in the proceedings, by virtue of their office, must swear that they will discharge their duties faithfully and also observe secrecy, so far as the nature of the case requires.

Yet in these secret trials punishment does not always follow, even when the culprit may morally deserve it. For instance, Dr. Smith writes that:

Sometimes there may be weighty reasons for not prosecuting a criminal or inflicting ANY punishment at all. The punishment might cause more harm than good: drive the delinquent to despair instead of causing him to amend: give scandal, by making an offence public which is still secret, or implicate a third party—for example, where an ecclesiastic has had illegitimate intercourse with a young lady of good character and unmarried.—New Procedure, p. 27.

In another place, recurring to the general punishments which may be lawfully inflicted on 'heretics,' be they priests or laymen, Dr. Smith writes:

The temporal punishments of the church are those which chiefly affect the temporal or worldly interests of the delinquent. They may be such as more directly affect (a) the soul, such as the loss of good name; or (b) the body, such as whipping, exile, detention in a monastery; (c) or also the property or possessions of the offender as pecuniary fines.—Elements of Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. 3, p. 23.

Again, the Protestant Observer wonders "how many Americans are aware that the present Pope Leo XIII., whom so many of them are never tired of extolling for his gentleness and charity, actually set up in the United States in 1880, a NEW INQUISITION, for the trial and punishment of rebellious priests? If they will purchase a book entitled 'Canonical Procedure in Disciplinary and Criminal Cases of Clerics,' published in 1887, by Benziger Brothers, of New York; in England, by Washbourn, Paternoster Row, London; and in Dublin, by H. M. Gill & Son, they will learn all about it, and be able to read for themselves the text of the papal document establishing this New Inquisition, which the editor, the Rev. Professor Messmer, D. D., kindly informs us will, in the course of time, 'be extended to all English-speaking missionary countries' (p. 7.) We may add here that this book is issued with the Imprimatur of Archbishop Corrigan, of New York, and the editor states that this New Inquisition will 'follow on the lines of the older Inquisition.'"

The establishment of a New Inquisition in the United States is an event which demands at once the serious attention of her statesmen and all non-Catholics.

THE HOME.

MARION.

A TRUE INCIDENT OF THE LATE WAR.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

"Halt!" all along the Federal lines
The word was passed; our march was done.
We reared our tents among the pines
That veiled afar the setting sun.
Slow came the stragglers in, and then
The roll was called, and all our men
Were present in the ranks, save one—
A fair-faced boy named Marion.

All the long night the lad's sweet name
Was sadly breathed from every tongue;
And when the morning twilight came Still more we wished him. Fair and young,
His name like sweetest music fell
On our rough hearts, for we loved well
This gentle lad, whose dream of fame
Had called him forth. He craved a name
Amid the din, the wild hot shriek
Of war's red hail—the notes which speak
From foe to foe the soldier's knell;
Not such his doom, more sad to tell.

The march, a long and heavy tramp;
The sun like fire, the air like death;
At early dawn we left our camp;
At noon the strongest gasped for breath.
Still onward through that weary day
We pressed with torn and bleeding feet,
While swift the moments passed away
Nor brought the rest that seemed so sweet
Still on we passed,—
Till e'en our stalwart sergeant, browned
With war's campaigns and scars, did say
That fire was burning in his brain;
As round and round it whirled and throbbed;
His broad breast heaved, he gasped and sobbed.

And some were there who bore their load
With quiet patience; others cursed;
And some fell fainting in the road,
Gasping for breath and parched with thirst.
But oh, to see young Marion
So weak, so drooping, and so wan,
And yet the foremost of the first!
His was the bravest spirit there,
But on his cheek there was a hue,
A wild, hot flush, a hectic glare
Of fever-heat; but in the blue
Of his deep eye, the will to dare
That heavy march, and dare its worst
E'en though his youthful heart should burst.

We crossed a stream; with gentle drip,
The cool, clear waters rippled by
A mossy bank. The boy's pale lip,
Half parted, as in mute reply,
As though he craved just one small drop
From that cool stream,—with longing eye
He marked its course but would not stop.
On, on, though every tender limb
Is quivering now, and heavy sighs
Convulse his breast, while strangely dim,
From out their sockets shone his eyes,
Like stars when seen through misty skies:—

On, on, they passed through brake and swamp
Nor halted once for drink or rest.
Still shone the sun with fiery glare,
While, stealing up from marshy vales,
Rose stifling vapors which the air
Of that hot Southern clime exhales;
His lips by treacherous moisture kissed,
The boy drinks in the poison mist,
Till he can scarcely breathe.
He stops, he staggers, and he reels,
Sinks to his knees, then up again!
He staggers on, and on, till all
His sense the deadly pain entralls—
He clutches at the air, and falls.

We laid him where the shade could play
Upon his brow of marble mould;
And bathed him with the cool, clear spray
Of running streams; but he grew cold
And died without a murmur, while Upon his lips a sad, sweet smile.

And oh! to think of that bright day
When through the streets of Boston town
Those youthful soldiers marched away,
Their banners in the breezes blown:
And Marion's feet, with that brave band,
Kept time, while cheers the silence rend;
He came to this fair Southern land,
And this is now the mournful end!

On his mountain home the vines are green
While dear ones watch for him in vain;
They said that he would come again,
While the palmetto o'er his grave
Its branches in the starlight wave.
Alas while Northern winds may blow

His loved ones weep, but cannot know
That far from his own native vines
Their Marion sleeps among the pines.

THE CONSECRATED MOTHER.

We would commend the moral of this incident to the serious consideration of every Christian among our readers. There is nothing like thorough consecration. It is related that "In the latter part of the last century a girl in England became a kitchen maid in a farm-house. She had many styles of labor, and much hard work. Time passed on and she married the son of a weaver of Halifax. They were industrious. They saved money enough after a time to build them a home. On the morning of the day when they were to enter that home, the young wife rose at four o'clock, entered the front yard, knelt down, consecrated the place to God, and there made the solemn vow: "O Lord, if thou wilt bless me in this place, the poor shall have a share of it."

Time rolled on and fortune rolled in. Children grew up around them, and they became prosperous; one, a member of parliament, in a public place declared that his success came from that prayer of his mother in the door-yard. All of them were wealthy—four thousand hands in their factories. They built dwelling houses for laborers at cheap rents, and when they were invalided and could not pay, they had their houses for nothing. One of these sons went to America, admired the parks, went back, bought land and opened a great public park, and made it a present to the city of Halifax, England. They endowed an orphanage and they endowed two alms-houses. All England has heard of the generosity and good works of the Crossleys.—Gospel Messenger.

THE DUTY OF SLEEP.

The sleeping room is nature's repair shop, the place of recuperation and renovation. There are persons who sometimes tell us that some great man, such as Napoleon Bonaparte, only slept four or five hours in twenty-four. But Napoleon Bonaparte was a very poor example to follow. His restless spirit kept the world in an uproar a good share of his life; he was broken in health long before he was defeated in battle, and finally, fretted and chafed in his captivity, he died aged fifty-three, long before he had reached the allotted age of man.

If a man would last, he must rest. If he would make his life calm and strong, glad and useful, he should have abundant sleep, and to obtain it he should avoid late hours, and especially should avoid stimulants. The man who takes anything to keep himself awake is making a great mistake, and preparing himself for future troubles. A man who keeps awake with stimulants now, will be trying to put himself to sleep with chloral by and by. A woman who drinks strong tea to keep herself awake, will by and by be taking opium to benumb her senses that she may get a little rest.

One of the great hindrances to sleep is a restless anxiety about things to come. There is so much to be done that some people feel that they can hardly take time to sleep; but six, seven, or eight hours of good, solid sleep, begun at nine o'clock at night, is a much better preparation for a hard day's work than any amount of midnight toil or restless tossing upon the bed in the watches of the night.

It is a matter of duty for persons who fear God and serve him, to see to it that they have their sleep. They must not be cheated out of it; they must not be harassed until sleep forsakes their eyes; they must rather bid their cares depart, and commit soul and body, business and estate, friends and foes to the care of a loving Father. They must make it their business to sleep.

There is nothing more favorable to healthful slumber than the peace of God that passeth understanding. With that peace we can lay ourselves down and sleep, and awake because the Lord sustains us. And we can prove how vain it is for men to rise up early, and sit up late, and eat the bread of sorrows, and strive and struggle to gain those things which God is willing to give, and which he gives his beloved while they are asleep. Our heavenly Father is able to do exceeding abundantly above our utmost thought, our utmost desire; and it is for us, knowing his love and care and tenderness, to resign ourselves into his kind hands, committing the keeping of our souls unto him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator, fearing no evil, but casting all our care on him who careth for us, who has been with us from the beginning, who has promised to be with us to the end, who has said, "I will never leave you nor forsake you." In our sickness he smooths our pillow and makes all our bed; in our weariness he gives to us abiding rest; and in the toils and conflicts that fall to our earthly lot, he supports and protects and strengthens and defends his feeblest children.

Lie down and sleep, then, O children of the Most High. Let sorrows and doubts and fears be gone. Cast off the restlessness and weariness which has disturbed your souls, and let the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds through Jesus Christ our Lord.—The Safeguard.

THE AUTHORIZED BIBLE OF THE REVOLUTION.

It may not be generally known that we have in the United States one really authorized Bible that is authorized by American authority. A Philadelphia book-seller recently found in a Lancaster farm-house a perfect copy of the Aitken Bible. This copy—there are known to exist only nineteen copies in this country—contains the resolutions of Congress commending the enterprise of Mr. Robert Aitken, the publisher, and recommending the book to the inhabitants of the United States.

The facts regarding this are interesting for reading on this Fourth of July week. The only Bible in the English language printed in America before the Aitken was printed secretly in Boston for Daniel Henchman, in 1752. It was unlawful to do this, for the publisher had no royal license. The edition did not exceed seven or eight hundred copies. When independence was declared, and the scarcity of Bibles began to be felt, Congress was memorialized with a view of its becoming responsible for the publication of thirty thousand copies. But the expense being considered, it was thought better to import twenty thousand from Holland or Scotland. But the war prevented the execution of this order. Accordingly, Mr. Aitken brought out his edition, and it having been favorably endorsed by the chaplains of Congress, it appeared under the sanction of Congress.

The printer encountered many difficulties, and on one occasion had to remove his type and materials, and bury them under a barn. The paper on which the volume was printed was of home manufacture. The whole work is described, in a local journal of the time, as "purely American, and has risen, like the fabled Phoenix, from the ashes of that pile in which our enemies supposed they had consumed the liberties of America." Unfortunately for the publisher, the war closed too soon, and he "lost more than three thousand pounds in specie". He asked, therefore, for a copyright, empowering him to print the Scriptures for fourteen years, exclusively of all others. Congress laid his petition on the table. The library of Congress, two years ago, bought an imperfect copy of this work for $650.—San Francisco Pacific.

CROWNING A BLACK KING.

From the versatile pen of Rev. D. C. Crowther, son of the famous Bishop Crowther, comes the following interesting narrative of the coronation of an African king at the town of Brass, on the Niger River. The story was given in the Church Missionary and Quarterly Token: "A secret meeting is first held by the chiefs of the country, at which they unanimously select one person of the royal line to be made king. A public meeting of chiefs is next held, a few days or weeks after, when the party chosen is called to attend. On his arrival about half a dozen men, hidden for the purpose, rush out and take hold of him. Astonished at such proceedings, he naturally asks, 'What have I done?' He is then told by the eldest chief that the Ebebege told them he is to be king. (Ebebege is a square frame of wood, and carried by four men, who profess to be directed where to go by this frame, which is supposed to be inspired by the spirit of the fathers.) Then the other chiefs answer, 'Yes, yes, so it is; did not the Ebebege tell us so?' He is not allowed to return home, but is led to a house, and put in a room already prepared to receive him. His shirt is taken off, leaving only his handkerchief cloth around his loins; then he is told to sit on a stool and is chalked over from head to foot. This is the anointing. For three days he is to be alone in this room, chalked; his meals brought to him by servants. On the fourth day a public meeting is held of the whole country people. The king-elect, after washing, is dressed in a most expensive cloth and shirt. Loaded with corals around his neck, arms, and feet, he appears and sits on a large arm-chair, and is exhibited to the people as their king, amid loud exclamations and praises. When silence is effected, a chief advances, and on getting near the king, gives him a crack on the head, saying, 'The country is in your hand; mind it well.' Another comes and gives him a box on the ears, saying, 'Keep your ears open, do justice, and give right judgments.' Another comes and gives him a thump on the forehead, saying, 'Keep your head clear, and pity the poor;' and so on till twelve or fifteen chiefs, as the case may be, have duly impressed the king concerning his official duties, both by word and thumping.

"After this, priests appear with their sacrifices, and killing of goats and fowls, to propitiate the gods and the forefathers. These the present Christian king refused to have performed for him, and they were dispensed with. After the sacrificial performances, a day is chosen for the whole of the inhabitants to go out fishing for the king."

AN ARCHBISHOP DOUBTED.

There is one advantage in being plain John Smith. The owner of this simple name is never accused of putting on airs when he announces himself, as was the Archbishop of Canterbury at one time.

On one of his visits to a certain country house in a Scottish county, Archbishop Tait went alone to the postoffice to send a telegram to his brother. He wrote it out, "The Archbishop of Canterbury to Sheriff Tait," and handed it in.

The skeptical old postmaster read it aloud in contemptuous tones, "The Archbishop of Canterbury," and added, "Wha may ye be that taks this cognomen?"

The Archbishop, taken aback, remained silent for a moment. The morning was cold, and he had a woollen comforter wrapped about his neck. But, on second view, the postmaster thought he looked more respectable than on a first, and added, "Maybe ye're the gentleman himsel'."

Tait replied modestly, "For want of a better, I am."

On which the good old Scot hastened to apologize for his first suspicions of imposture, adding, "I might have seen you were rather consequential about the legs."

Then he added words of cheer, which Tait said truly were vitally Scotch: "I have a son in London, a lad in a shop, and he gaed to hear you preach one day, and was verra weel satisfied."

WHAT A LITTLE GIRL DID.

A good many years ago, a little girl of twelve years of age was passing an old brick prison in the city of Chicago, on her way to school, when she saw a hand beckoning from behind a cell window and heard a weary voice asking her to please bring him something to read.

For many weeks after she went to the prison every Sunday, carrying the poor prisoner a book to read, from her father's library. At last one day she was called to his death-bed.

"Little girl," said he, "you have saved my soul; promise me that you will do all your life for the poor people in prison what you have done for me."

The little girl promised, and she has kept her promise. Linda Gilbert has been all her life the steadfast friend of the prisoner. She has established good libraries in many prisons, and visited and helped hundreds of prisoners; and from the great number of whom she has helped, 600 are now, to her certain knowledge, leading honest lives. Prisoners from all parts of the country know and love her name, and surely the God of prisoners must look upon her work with interest.

And all this because a little girl heard and heeded the call to help a suffering soul.

THE LITTLE ARM-CHAIR.

Nobody sits in the little arm-chair;
It stands in a corner dim;
But a white-haired mother, gazing there,
And yearningly thinking of him,
Sees through the dust of the long ago
The bloom of her boy's sweet face,
As he rocks so merrily to and fro,
With a laugh that cheers the place.

Sometimes he holds a book in his hand,
Sometimes a pencil and slate,
And the lesson is hard to understand,
And the figures hard to mate;
But she sees the nod of her father's head,
So proud of the little son,
And she hears the word so often said,
"No fear for our little one."

They were wonderful days, the dear sweet days,
When a child with sunny hair
Was hers to scold, to kiss, and to praise,
At her knee in the little chair.
She lost him back in the busy years,
When the great world caught the man,
And he strode away past hopes and fears
To his place in the battle's van.

But now and then in a wistful dream,
Like a picture out of date,
She sees a head with a golden gleam
Bent over a pencil and slate.
And she lives again the happy day,
The day of her young life's spring,
When the small arm-chair stood just in the way,
The center of everything.

—Margaret E. Sangster in Harper's Bazar.

TEMPERANCE.

WHO PAYS THE BILLS?

Who pays the bills? Who feeds the drunkard's children? Who provides for the drunkard's wife? Who supports the beggarly tramps, who, having wasted their money in drink, wander about the country? Who repairs the losses caused by the failure of intemperate merchants and reckless and half-intoxicated business men? Who makes good the damages caused by the blunders of drunken workmen, and the hindrances of business caused by the sprees of intemperate employees? Who pays for the railroad wrecks caused by drunken conductors and engineers? Who builds the asylums where crazy drunkards are kept? Who supports the idiotic children of drunken men? Who pays the attorneys and juries and judges who try drunken criminals? Who pays the expenses of trials and commitments and executions occasioned by the crimes of drunken men? Who pays for the property destroyed and burned by drunken men? Who builds and supports almshouses, which, but for drink, might remain unoccupied? Who endures the suffering and losses and brutality, which are due to the recklessness and insanity of drunken husbands and fathers? Who pays for the inquests held on drunkards found dead by the wayside? Who pays for a pauper's coffin, and for digging a drunkard's grave in potter's field, when the last glass has been drunk?

Who pays the bills? The drunkard cannot, for he has wasted his substance in his cup. Will the rumseller pay them? The fact is, you and I, and the sober and industrious toiling portion of the community, must meet all these bills. The drunken rowdy, wounded in the street fight, is cared for in the city hospital at our expense; the drunken beggar is fed from our table; his hungry children come to our doors for bread, and we cannot refuse assistance to his suffering wife, and when at last, having "wasted his substance in riotous living," he comes to the almshouse, the asylum, the hospital, or the prison, honest, sober temperate men pay the bills for supporting him there. There is no escaping it. We may protest, we may grumble at the taxes and find fault with beggars, but ultimately and inevitably we must foot the bills.—New England Evangelist.

TEMPERANCE AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

1. The Word of God, the teachings of science, and the lessons of experience teach conclusively that total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks is the duty of every individual.

2. The liquor traffic is only evil, and that continually. It has not a single redeeming feature to authorize its continuance. It is one of the most serious obstacles in the path of the Christian church. It tends to the physical, mental, and moral debasement of its citizens, and therefore to the overthrow of good government. It is hostile to every aim of home and family. It is so utterly at variance with every interest of society, of the church, and of the state that the only consistent attitude for the Christian man is one of determined and persistent opposition. It can never be legalized without sin.

3. High-license laws are utterly at variance with the divine method of treating crime. They discriminate wrongfully between the rich and the poor. They give the sanction of law to that which is wrong and should be condemned. They do not diminish the amount of liquor used, nor lessen the drunkenness resulting therefrom. They are bulwarks of defence to the liquor traffic. We oppose any and all laws that propose to sanction or regulate the business; for by so doing they provide for its continuance. We favor the legal prohibition, and so far as is possible the utter annihilation, of this most villainous traffic.

4. It is not our place to dictate the political conduct of our people, nor do we desire so to do. But the liquor power to day holds its deadly grip upon our political and national life by the strong arm of the law; and by this same power must it be destroyed. It is our deliberate judgment that no political party has a right to expect, nor should it receive, the support of Christian citizens so long as it stands committed to the license policy, or refuses to put itself in an attitude of open hostility to the saloon. The church must awake to the summons of her Master and see that there is no blood of souls in her pulpits and none in her pews. The church must either admit to her communion altars the saloon-keeper with his bloody hands, or erase from her rolls the name of the church member who by vote or voice made it lawful for the saloon-keeper to do his dreadful work.—General Conference of United Brethren, 1893.

WINE AND WIT.

"Wine in, wit out."—Angelica Every Week.

And yet that old saying is only true after a certain stage of the game has been passed. Many men, and even most men are more witty and facetious after a drink or two of wine than before. It doesn't take a young man long to find out that he can say more funny things, and make more laughs at his witticisms when he is a trifle cocked than when he is his own natural self. When he finds himself in company with others, and all are trying to be 'cute, it is perfectly natural that he avail himself of every means within his reach, to "keep his end up" as the saying is. So he hoists in a few drinks, and in his revised shape he finds no difficulty in raising a laugh at will. In fact he is more of a fellow drunk than he is sober, and he knows it. But he goes on and forces the machinery too hard, until instead of being funny, he gets either idiotic or ugly, and then the very fellows who admired and applauded him call him a hog, and want the bartender to fire him. This sort of thing goes on night after night, until the fellow grows to be a regular drunken bummer, and don't amount to anything drunk or sober. Young man, look the matter over and see if this doesn't hit your case. See if you don't take more drinks to make you funny than for any other reason.—Danville (N. Y.) Breeze.

IN TWO CHAPTERS.

Miss Willard puts the drunkard's career in two very short chapters, as follows:

CHAPTER I.

He could have left off drinking if he would.

CHAPTER II.

He would have left off drinking if he could.

THE END.

Massachusetts is tired of saloons. Twenty-four more towns in that State held their annual meetings recently, and voted on the license question. Only one town out of the number voted for license, and three which went license last year changed to prohibition. The total vote on the license question in these 24 towns was 2,569 yes, and 4,061 no, as against 2,361 yes, and 3,424 no, last year, showing a handsome gain for prohibition. Two large towns, Natick and Pepperell, changed from license by a majority for prohibition greater than was last year's majority for license.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Some ignorant believers.—vs. 1, 2. Paul, on his third missionary journey, finds at Ephesus twelve disciples, who seem to have struck him at once as lacking in the higher spiritual experience. He therefore asks: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" And they replied that they had not so much as heard that the Holy Ghost had been given at all. They had no knowledge of their high privileges. They had been groping their way heavenward like slaves instead of children of God. This same question might properly be asked of many Christians at the present day. They have what they call religion, but no enjoyment of it. They have passed through an experience which they call conversion, and, so far as it goes, it may be genuine, but it does not go far enough. Their minds have not received divine illumination to discern between essentials and non-essentials; between mere dead works and that obedience which springs from a living faith. We are told in 1 Sam. 3: 7 that "the child Samuel did not know the Lord, neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed unto him." There are many Christians who remain in this state of childhood, instead of striving to attain to the perfect stature of a man in Christ Jesus. No wonder that such are never favored with manifestations of God's presence, or revelations of his will. They are not fitted to receive it any more than is a babe or a little child to be made the confidant of its father regarding matters utterly beyond its comprehension. A Christian cannot grow without the Holy Spirit any more than a plant can grow without the sun and dew.

2. The Holy Spirit given.—vs. 3-7. Further inquiry elicited the fact that they had been baptized into John's baptism; i. e., into the doctrines which he taught. These we find in Luke 3: 3-14. Repentance, preparation of heart to receive Christ, deeds of almsgiving and a breaking off from all sin. But this was only the alphabet of Christianity, so to speak. Without doubt they led upright, formal, joyless, ascetic lives. Their Messiah was in the future; their idea of the Holy Spirit was of a divine gift confined entirely to the Jewish race, and to a select few even among them. They never thought of it as God's free gift to the lowest and humblest Gentile. It must have been a joyful surprise to them when Paul preached Jesus to them, and they were baptized into a new and joyful hope. We notice (1) The Spirit came by the laying on of Paul's hands; but, though this was the Lord's chosen way in this instance, he does not always use human agency. He did not on the day of Pentecost. (2) "They spake with tongues and prophesied." No one can receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit without the accompanying sign of spiritual gifts. These may differ in kind and degree with different individuals, but the fruits of the Spirit,— "righteousness, peace and joy," will certainly manifest themselves in all. (3) The soul can obtain no satisfaction by mere formal effort to live a good life, for it will always be tormented by a consciousness of coming short.

3. Earnest missionary work.—vs. 8, 9. "He spake boldly . . . disputing and persuading." There was great need of boldness, and at the same time great risk, as the event proved, for Paul's fearless proclaiming of the truth raised a mob in Ephesus as it had done in Philippi and Corinth. We may be sure that wherever the enemy, through wicked men or half-hearted Christians, tells us to keep still and not oppose certain evils because it will arouse persecution and make us trouble, there is sore need of brave men and women who will "cry aloud and spare not." He both "disputed and persuaded." He used different methods to convince; one way with the subtle polished Greeks, and another with the superstitious Jews. "Divers were hardened;" always the result of rejected truth. Paul, though his heart must have bled for his obdurate countrymen, "departed from them" when he saw the uselessness of further work, and "separated the disciples," i. e., called them out from the synagogue worship and the bonds of Judaism into the liberty which is in Christ Jesus. The unbelieving Jews had forced a separation and on them rested the responsibility.

4. The Gospel of healing.—vs. 10-12. Ephesus was called one of the eyes of the East. On this vantage ground Paul continued for three years and preached the Word with wonderful effect. One of the signs that they were genuine converts at Ephesus was "the special miracles wrought by the hand of Paul." Even Christ could not do many mighty works in unbelieving Nazareth. The victory was two-fold—over disease and over evil spirits. The Gospel of Christ, by teaching purity of life, by the discoveries of science, and by the direct operations of faith in divine healing, has proved itself through all the centuries the same as in the days of old; a Gospel of healing for the body as well as for the soul.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AMERICAN SABBATH UNION.

—At the request of the Board of Managers of the American Sabbath Union, George S. Mott, D. D., Chairman of the Sabbath-observance Committee of the Synod of New Jersey, has accepted the position of acting president of the union for the present, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Col. Elliot F. Shepard. Dr. Mott represents the conscientious and religious phases of the Sunday question.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

—Over a hundred missionaries are employed to gather the neglected children out on the frontier and elsewhere into Union Sunday-schools and to carry the Gospel into desolate, scattered households. Funds needed. $800 sustains a missionary for one year. Every dollar helps. Contributions received by F. G. Ensign, Supt., 143 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill., or Addison P. Foster, D. D., Secretary for New England, No. 1 Beacon street, Boston, Room 85.

BAPTIST.

—There are three bodies of regular Baptists: the Northern, Southern, and colored. They are not separated by doctrinal or ecclesiastical differences, but by the old-time division of section and color. According to census bulletin No. 375 the Northern has 800,025 communicants, in 7,902 organizations, with 7,066 churches of the value of $49,524,504, or an average of $7,008. The Southern Baptists number 1,276,491, in 16,206 congregations, which have 13,472 churches, aggregating $18,152,599, an average of $1,347.

—In Russia, the governors of Stavropol and of the Kouban district have issued orders prohibiting the meeting together in these provinces of Baptist-Stundists for religious purposes. The alleged reason for this drastic measure is the omission of a prayer for the Ozar in the Baptist services; the real reason, however, is that latterly a considerable number of orthodox Russians have been visiting the Baptist meetings with a view to being admitted to membership.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The old church at Industry, organized in 1808, has just received three members, the first, according to the church records, since 1867. It once had a membership of 100. Now it numbers fifteen, with fourteen non-resident members. With help from the Maine Missionary Society they heartily unite in sustaining as resident pastor, Rev. T. A. Merrill, who united with that church in 1841.—Advance.

—Pilgrim church, Cleveland, laid at twilight, July 6, the corner-stone of its magnificent and imposing red stone house. In closing words pastor Mills emphasized the fact that though this is to be an institutional church, its great aim and mission, first and always, is to save men.

—Auburn (N. Y.) Theological Seminary has done well in calling to its chair of Church History Dr. Theodore W. Hopkins, of Rochester, N. Y., formerly Professor of Church History in our Chicago Seminary. Professor Hopkins possesses eminent qualifications for this department.

EVANGELISTIC.

—A warm welcome is given to Rev. Theodore Monod, of Paris, who has come as an evangelist to Chicago at the call of Mr. Moody. This evangelist is all the more welcome as he brings the instincts of Christian courtesy as well as intense spiritual earnestness.

LUTHERAN.

—There are twenty-six Lutheran theological seminaries in America, with property valued at $1,097,800; the number of students is 898, and the number of professors 80. These figures are encouraging, but still there is greater need of men in the Lutheran church than in any other.

—At the late meeting of the Missouri Synod at St. Louis, Mo., the reports of the various committees and boards were very encouraging. There were 108 calls for ministers and 53 for parochial school teachers, but there were only 76 and 33 graduates respectively. The Synod resolved at once to increase the educational institutions. A new college is to be built at St. Paul, Minn., for $25,000, a normal school in Nebraska to cost $40,000, and a dormitory at Springfield, Ill., to cost $13,000. There is also to be an addition made to the college building at Fort Wayne, Ind., for $14,000, and a professor's house at Addison, Ill., for $3,000. The college at Milwaukee, Wis., receives $40,000. The salaries of all the professors were increased.

—The Lutheran church in this country has 11 colored congregations. These have eight churches, together with nine day and thirteen Sunday-schools. There are six white and three colored pastors and six white teachers among them. There are 437 communicants and 935 in the Sunday-schools.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Woman's Home Missionary Society has issued an eight-page tract setting forth succinctly its organization, object, and methods of work. The society has 63,390 members of all classes in 2,201 auxiliaries distributed over seventy-five conferences.

—A note from Mrs. Foss is to the effect that the bishop "is gaining power to move his arm, but has no use of it. His general health is improving very slowly, and he is able to sit up but a few hours at a time. 'He has gone to a sanitarium for rest.

—The English Methodist New Connexion conference reported at its recent ninety-seventh annual session a net increase of 421 full members, 448 probationers, 700 scholars, 48 scholar-members, and 900 more scholars meeting in class.

—The English Primitive Methodists, at their seventy-fourth annual session recently, had 220 delegates present. An increase in the membership of 1,559 was reported. It was announced that £38,000 is already promised to the jubilee fund of £50,000 to be raised in celebration of the Missionary society's jubilee.

—During the revival at Seymour, Wis., the saloon element, angry at the plain and pungent words of Evangelist H. Cordner of Marinette, Wis., set fire to the tent in which services were held; it was completely destroyed, as were also the church organ and some furniture. The revival continues, and great good is being accomplished.

—Contracts for the new library building of the Northwestern University have been let, and work will be immediately begun upon the structure. The building will be of Bedford stone, and will be situated upon the lower campus, facing Sheridan road. The estimated cost is $100,000, and the building will be named for Mr. Orrington Lunt, whose munificent gift made the enterprise possible.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Presbyterian church of Canada is remarkable for its home missionary work. The work is carried on in two sections: the Eastern, including the Maritime Provinces, and the Western, which embraces the remainder of the Dominion. In the Eastern section there are 53 missions, with 178 stations, receiving $8,083 aid, and 54 congregations receiving $7,320 to supplement the salaries of pastors. In the Western section there are 342 missions, with 900 stations, receiving $44,722 aid, and 160 congregations augmented to the amount of $24,124; a total of 395 missions, in which there are 1,078 stations, and 214 congregations, to which the appropriations are $84,249. In this department, twelve years ago, there was but one minister; now there are three presbyteries. Of the whole population, 28½ per cent is Presbyterian.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—In the fall, the Paulist Fathers are to try a new plan of campaign in their work of making America Catholic. Hitherto they have given missions to Catholics to make them more Catholic, hoping to hold them in the faith by its practice and to use them as examples of religion wherewith to convert their neighbors. Now they will go direct to Protestants and put before them the claims of the church and the need of membership in it.—Catholic Review.

UNITED PRESBYTERIANS.

—The Synod of Kansas will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary, August 1 to 8, in Forest Park, Ottawa, Kas., and it will be a meeting appropriate to the occasion. The gatherings of the past have been pleasant and profitable. Twenty-five years have wrought many changes in even this young synod.

Y. M. C. A.

—At the college "Students' Conference," at Geneva Lake, Wis., Mr. Mott in his report gave the religious statistics of the colleges of North America for the year 1892-3. These figures were compiled by the intercollegiate department of the Young Men's Christian Association, and are given greatly condensed, herewith: Number of associations in the colleges, 441; young men in college, 70,419; Christians in college, 38,327; non-Christians in college, 32,092; members in the associations: active 20,856, associate 6,178; total, 27,034. Professed conversions 2,850; in association Bible classes, 7,531; colleges having English Bible in curriculum, 147; candidates for the ministry, 4,892; candidates for the general secretaryship, 95; candidates for foreign missions, 1,155.

HOME AND HEALTH.

A LUSCIOUS TOMATO MAYONNAISE.

Tomato mayonnaise is a very pretty and palatable dish, if properly prepared. Scald and skin half a dozen fair-sized tomatoes; select those as nearly of a size as possible. With a sharp knife cut out a bowl-shaped space in the stem-end of the fruit. Prepare the mayonnaise dressing and fill the holes with it, filling it up as high as possible without spreading over the fruit. Place the tomatoes on a flat dish, surrounding each one with crisp lettuce leaves. Slices of hard-boiled egg may be used, if desirable, but are not necessary. The mayonnaise is prepared as follows: Beat the yolks of three uncooked eggs, half a teaspoonful of mustard, one of sugar, a pinch of cayenne, one teaspoonful of salt, until they are very light and thick. The bowl in which the dressing is made should be set in a pan of icewater during the beating. Add a few drops of salad oil at a time until the dressing becomes very thick, then the oil can be added more rapidly. A pint of oil is generally used with three eggs, although many cooks do not think that amount necessary. When the oil is all in beat for a few moments, then add a teaspoonful of vinegar and the juice of the lemon. Then place on the ice until required for use.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

THE PINEAPPLE.

The strawberry pineapple, in spite of its acidity, makes a very good compote, and is nice for desserts. For a compote, peel the pineapple and cut it in slices about a quarter of an inch thick. Remove the core. Make a syrup of a cup of sugar and a cup of water. Let it boil for about five minutes. Pour it hot over the sliced pineapple and let the fruit steep in this syrup well-covered for twenty-four hours. Then drain the pineapple and boil down the syrup for ten minutes more, until it begins to thicken. Pour it hot over the pineapple again, and when the dish is cold serve it.

A great many desserts may be made from the strawberry pineapple, and it is often considered better for this purpose than the sweeter sugar-loaf pine, while it possesses the advantage of being much cheaper. For a pineapple pie prepare the pineapple, chopped fine or grated, and otherwise made ready for a compote. Have a shell of nice pastry spread with a little apple sauce—just enough to glaze the crust. Fill the pie-plate with pineapple and orange strips of pastry across. Bake the pie about forty-five minutes in an oven quite hot for the first fifteen minutes, and a very little more moderate for the last half hour. When the pie is removed from the oven dredge it with powdered sugar and set it back in the oven just long enough to allow the sugar to melt. Serve it cold.—New York Tribune.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

To clean woodwork which is painted, wring a soft cloth out of warm water, dip in whiting and rub; rub off the whiting and rub with a dry cloth.

Chemists say that it takes more than twice as much sugar to sweeten preserves, sauces, etc., if put in when they begin to cook, as it does to sweeten them after the fruit is cooked.

For a bad cough boil a tablespoonful of flaxseed ten or fifteen minutes in a pint of water. Strain, add the juice of a lemon, sweeten to taste and drink a few spoonfuls at a time every few minutes.

For polishing furniture, waxed or stained floors, or picture frames, the following preparation is good: Melt beeswax, turpentine and sweet oil. Rub this on with a soft cloth or piece of chamolis.

To make shirt bosoms like new take two ounces of white gum arabic, put in a pitcher and pour a pint of water on it; cover and let stand all night and filter in a clean bottle and cork for use; use a tablespoonful of gum water to each pint of starch.

A nice way to keep wax for the work-basket is to fill half shells of English walnuts with melted wax, fastening the two half-shells closely together at one end. There will then be a small space at

FARM NOTES.

FRAUDS IN BUTTER.

The chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture has been looking into the composition of some of the nostrums used for increasing the yield of butter (?) and the results have been compiled and form Farmers' Bulletin No. 12. This bulletin may be had by any farmer who asks for it. Address Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The principal frauds investigated were "Gilt-edge Butter Compound," "Black Pepsin" and "Butter-making by a New Process," or "New Process of Making Butter from Milk."

The "Compound" was found to contain 70.48 per cent of anhydrous sodium sulphate and 29.52 per cent of organic matter. The organic matter responded perfectly to the test for pepsin. The gilt-edge butter compound is colored pink.

The "Black Pepsin" fraud has had the biggest run and sells for $2.50 for a two ounce box. Its cost is about three cents. So the farmer who defrauds the consumer is himself defrauded first. This "black pepsin" is made of eighty-three per cent salt, fifteen per cent anhydrous, two per cent rennet and organic matter. It is made and sold by the notorious Bane who was, the last we knew, sailing under the title "U. S. Salyx Co., New Concord, Ohio." Leave him and his compound alone. He will beat any one at his game.

Salt, alum and other ingredients not as free from harmful results as these enter largely into the "black pepsin" fraud. The result of using it is a compound resembling butter, but "its tendency to separation, decomposition and rancidity is so great as to condemn it for general use;" and making it "certainly violates the spirit if not the letter of the oleomargarine law; and dairymen who insist that oleomargarine and other imitations of butter shall be properly branded, of necessity must oppose the use of any chemical that certainly perpetrates as great a fraud on honest butter as any other imitation."

Any one can easily detect one of these imitation butters. If genuine butter is melted the small amount of water it contains will separate and appear upon the top of the melted mass. It should not exceed twelve per cent in volume of the whole amount. "By placing a little of the suspected butter in an ordinary test tube and melting it at a gentle temperature and comparing it with the sample of genuine butter the difference in the amount of material not butter fat will at once be noticed. In the adulterated article almost half of the whole volume will be a mixture of water, curd and other materials, while with the genuine article of butter the fat will separate in a clear, limpid mass, and a small amount of water and a little curd will appear at the top."

We have so often warned our readers against the use of compounds for increasing the yield of butter, or preserving milk, butter or fruit that it seems they ought to clear escape these bare-faced frauds.

It is safe to assume that any substance which is offered for the purpose of increasing the yield of butter above what normally belongs to milk may be classed as a fraud, no matter by what name called or by whom recommended.

The proper way for increasing the yield of butter is to secure a breed of cows giving a milk with a high content of butter fat, giving the animals proper nourishment, and keeping them in a clean and healthy condition. The proper treatment of a herd of cows, together with neatness in the dairy, not only will give an increased yield of butter, but will also enable the producer of it to get an increased price.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

POULTRY FARMING.

We have a letter before us from a young man who wants to go into poultry farming, and he asks the usual questions, winding up with the all-embracing one—"will it pay?" That question is asked a thousand times a year, and the inquirers all know that poultry farming, like any other kind of farming, will pay if it is managed right. The evidence that it will pay, that it has paid, and that it is paying now, is overwhelming. It pays the man who knows how, and who has the requisite energy and business ability. A prominent grocery firm in this city has, within a few years, worked up a family trade in fresh eggs, of nearly half a million dozens annually. It was done by looking up the men who knew how to get eggs in the winter season, when fresh eggs are a luxury. A representative of the firm said to us: "We care nothing for the man who can furnish eggs only when any fool can furnish them—when uncared-for hens have a mind to lay them. We are looking for the man who can send us eggs when all his neighbors' hens are frozen up." They have found quite a number of these wide-awake men and are paying them good prices for their eggs.

We understand that they take the year's supply, winter and summer, simply to hold the winter product. We referred, last winter, to one of these men who lives near Orville, Ohio. He has a few acres of land and keeps 300 hens. This grocery firm sent him $69.80 for his February eggs last winter, and from March 4 to 11, one week, his fowls shelled out 130 to 158 eggs per day, just when they were bringing the highest prices.

Oh yes, poultry-keeping pays the man who puts brains, energy, skill and the necessary capital into it. But it must be made an all-the-year-round business. If you give the hens a vacation let it be in the summer, when eggs are low and poultry not wanted. The dairyman who feeds the heads off a lot of dry cows during the winter never makes it up during the summer, and the poultryman who lets his hens manage the business as they please will soon require an assignee.

The man who quietly submits to circumstances, in any branch of business, is the man who gets left. The man who makes circumstances is the man who succeeds.—Ohio Farmer.

Pearline does it. Pearl-line; cold water; no boiling; little work; that is the programme for hot-weather washing.

The Pacific Coast Anti-secrecy Convention is to be held at Canby, Oregon, August 15, 16. Rev. P. B. Williams, the efficient secretary on the coast, has charge of all arrangements. His address is at Portland, Ore. Let all who can attend.

We are indebted to Rev. J. G. Terrill, General Traveling Agent of the Free Methodist church, for a fine half-tone portrait of the late Rev. B. T. Roberts. It is a striking likeness of our esteemed co-worker, and occupies a prominent position on the walls of this office.

"Whoop! I'm a politician. I draw $3,000 a year from the government as a pension," remarked William C. Pomeroy, vice president of the Trade and Labor Assembly, the other night when he was arrested for smiting Julius Kuchband on the nose in a beer saloon.—Chicago Herald.

No wonder that Secretary Smith is dropping government pensioners from the rolls by thousands. Pomeroy gives us a clue to the reason.

Rev. William Fenton has been with us for a few days for rest, quite as full of zeal in behalf of our reform as ever. His study of Freemasonry as a spurious religion admirably fits him for contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and for thoroughly exposing the evils and errors of the secret system.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, whose letter we print in another column, enters this week upon a new line of duties as the World's Fair Exhibitor of the National Christian Association. Without personal prejudice we heartily believe him to be the right man in the right place, as the elucidator of the great reform in which we are engaged. Such an opportunity for important Christian service is seldom afforded even to the most stalwart reformer; and we are sure that with the prayers and earnest support of all Cynosure readers, he will leave such a mark of his high calling upon this Exposition as shall put to shame those who boastfully flaunt the "mark of the beast" and its image within the sound of his voice.

A second note from Rev. C. G. Fait, dated Monong, N. Dakota, July 15, brings the following gratifying intelligence: "I am glad to report that a great improvement is manifested in the appearance of the crop prospect since I last wrote. We have had two heavy showers, which have improved the growing grain beyond the hope of the most sanguine. The outlook now is, that with good weather from this time until harvest we will be favored with an average of at least a half-crop. This causes great rejoicing, as fear of a famine is averted."

Through the mistake of an amanuensis, Bro. E. T. McIntire's renunciation of Masonry, as published in the Cynosure of June 13, contains an error as to his lodge connection which he desires to correct. His statement is: "I joined the Masons at Plymouth, Me.; was a member of Putnam Lodge, Cambridge, Mass.; was made a life-member of the Cambridge Royal Arch Chapter of Cambridge, and was a member of De Molay Commandery, Knights Templar, of Boston, and advanced as far as the degree of Grand Elect, Perfect and Sublime Mason in the Scottish Rite." While we regret that the Cynosure was inadvertently led to perpetuate the errors of others, we are very glad of an opportunity to make this correction.

The reason given for the Roman Catholic assault upon the Christian Endeavor International Convention at Montreal—noted at the time in this paper—was the utterance in the great tent, by Rev. S. V. Karmarthe, of Bombay, India, of the following: "There is a remarkable correspondence between Romish worship and Hindu worship. Romanism is but a new label on old bottles of paganism containing the deadly poison of idolatry. Often the Hindoo asks when seeing the Romish worship: 'What is the difference between Christianity and Hinduism.' In India we have not only to contend with the hydra-headed monster of idolatry, but the octopus of Romanism." And he might have truthfully added, "and the paganism of Freemasonry," which, as the readers of the Cynosure are aware, is quite as formidable an opponent to Christianity in that country as idol-worship or the adoration of saints and images.

For some time past there has been an active movement among the 200 churches of Chicago, looking to a general closing of the 7,000 saloons of the city on the Sabbath, and petitions to that effect had, up to last week, received about 70,000 signatures of interested citizens. With this very respectable document rolled upon a reel, a committee of honorable business-men waited upon Mayor Harrison, and requested him, as the great municipal governor, to exert his influence in closing the saloons on Sunday in accordance with the petition, and equally in accordance with the State law of Illinois. The reception of the committee by the Mayor was characteristic of him, and was, in substance, that he had no inclination or power to enforce a State law that clashes with a city ordinance. For the city authorizes the saloons to open on Sundays, and Mr. Harrison derives his magisterial power and influence from the saloon element. So far the movement has not been a success.

The next issue of the Cynosure is to be a SPECIAL NUMBER. The action of the Directory of the Exposition in permanently closing it on Sabbath has greatly encouraged the hearts of Christians and impelled them to "enlarge their coasts" in our reform work. Greater interest will now center about the N. C. A. booth in the Manufactures Building (northwest corner of the gallery), where Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard will hold daily receptions and strike fire from Masonic and Anti-masonic authorities to illuminate the truth about the secret societies which we oppose as enemies of the religion of Jesus Christ. To aid in this work, and to show some of the weapons which are wielded for this purpose in its behalf, the next Cynosure will be replete with the kind of information, illustrated, that is needed to enlighten the public as to our objects and methods. It will be an interesting campaign document. To meet the expense of making this special effort in behalf of our work, and of increasing the distribution of tracts and other literature, our friends should avail themselves of the opportunity now afforded them for liberal donations.

The modern system of political maneuvering, now becoming quite universal, is despicable in the extreme. It is reported that the new German Army bill, which passed by a vote of 201 to 185, owes its success to a political movement. Sufficient votes to carry it were purchased from members of the Reichstag representing a subject Polish province by the promise of the Emperor that the Polish language should be restored to its courts and public officers and the control of its schools given to its priests. Protestants and Socialists are equally offended at the result. In Kansas, the Populist Attorney General, with the approval of Governor Lewelling, has officially declared by a published letter that prohibition can't be enforced, and has recommended the anarchistic system of regulating it by licenses under the guise of "fines." In Chicago, the other day, the officers of the State Liquor-Dealers' Association organized a national liquor-dealers' association. Mayor Harrison told the association that "bad whiskey" causes all the drunkenness. A leading purpose of the association is to pledge political candidates before election "to aid the liquor-dealers in all possible ways." The English statesman who called "politics a dirty trade" was right.

TWO HORNS LIKE A LAMB—REV. 13: 11.

BY C. A. S. TEMPLE.

(Concluded.)

"HE SPAKE AS A DRAGON."

This last clause of this eleventh verse sheds still more light upon the identity and the character of this two horned beast.

"The dragon" thus referred to is exhibited in chapter 12:3, as—"A great, sea dragon, having seven heads and ten horns."

Haydock, the Romish annotator, in the Rheinish Testament, says, "By the dragon is generally understood the devil." This statement is true, but only in part. It agrees with verse 9. "The great dragon, . . . that old serpent called the devil and Satan;" but the statement in verse 4—"The dragon stood before the woman, to devour her child as soon as it was born"—directs attention to a being, or a system, who, or which, was nothing more nor less than an earthly vicegerent of the devil. But Haydock furnishes the key which unlocks and solves the whole problem. He says—note on verse 1—"The woman was the church." Strictly true, but not (as he would have it) of the Church of Rome.

Again he says, on verse 5, "The man-child whom she brought forth, was the Son of God." True again, every word.

But when the Son of God was "born of a woman," a great power stood watching for his advent, to crush and "to devour him, as soon as he was born." That power was Rome, as represented by Herod the king of Judea. Matt. 2:1-18.

The fact that then and afterward Rome was a principal, if not the chief agency of that old serpent (Satan) in the world, made it eminently fit and appropriate that she should be represented and designated by the appearance and title of "a great, red dragon."

THE DRAGON AS THE TWO-HORNED BEAST.

The text, at the head of this chapter, "He spake as a dragon"—shows the two-horned beast, as the dragon in disguise. It also exposes and explains that disguise. It assures us that his speech betrays him. In other words—that "the speech of the Church of Rome is the speech of the dragon."

1. It is in the Language of the Dragon. We all know, from history, that the language of Imperial, Pagan Rome, was the Latin. We know, too, from our acquaintance with the Church of Rome, that the Latin is her language now: the language of the dragon! Her standard translations of the Word of God; her text-books of theology; the bulls and encyclicals of her popes; the decrees of her councils; all her devotional books, in whole or in part; in short, all her standard official literature, is in Latin. Her priests "say mass" in Latin. All her public prayers, her chantings—in a word, all her public religious observances (save her preaching) are performed in the same language—the language of the dragon!

Thus the language of the Church of Rome reveals her absolute identity with the dragon, and so with the two-horned beast. Again that beast—the Roman Church—speaks.

2. In the Spirit of the Dragon. History, both sacred and profane, abounds with illustrations of the spirit and temper of the dragon. From Rev. 12:4, 13, 15, 17, we learn that the dragon was and is an enemy and persecutor of the Son of God, and of his believing people; and the history of the Roman emperors, since the Christian era, shows them, one after another, issuing their edicts for the persecution and "extirpation" of the hated Christians, within their dominions. Although only one of those edicts is now extant, the persecutions which followed them gave abundant evidence of their spirit and design. No words from any uninspired tongue, or pen, could possibly portray even a tithe of the terribleness of those persecutions.

DECREES OF COUNCILS.

In later ages, the decrees of the general councils of the two-horned beast (the same dragon—now called "the Church of Rome") have, if possible, even exceeded in the Satanic malignity those edicts of primitive times. By those councils, and, in fact, by all the official and approved literature of the Roman Church, and by Catholics everywhere, as well—all true Protestant Christians are stigmatized as "heretics."

The Council of Constance, Sess. 45 (and also the Fourth Council of Lateran) decreed that "Whoever apprehends heretics—which all are at liberty to do—has power to take from them all their goods and freely to enjoy them!"

The same Council of Constance also decreed that "The punishment to be inflicted on heretics must be excommunication, confiscation of goods, imprisonment, exile, or death." The third and fourth Councils of Lateran, also: "Heretics are not only to be anathematized, but deprived of all property and civil rights, and delivered over to the secular power, to be punished and extirpated."

Again, "Let the secular powers be warned and induced . . . so they publicly take an oath for the defence of the faith, that they will study in good earnest, to exterminate, to their utmost power from the lands subject to their jurisdiction, all heretics denoted by the church."

Fourth Council of Lateran. Such quotations from the decrees of Romish councils—as also others which might be presented from the bulls of popes and the utterances of other hieratic dignitaries—all thundering out their demands for the "extirpation of heretics," might be multiplied indefinitely. For the terrible significance of such fulminations, we have only to look at the utterly devilish torturings, and Auto-Da-Fé of the bloody, infernal Inquisition, the burnings at the stake, here and there, the lingering, cruel deaths by starvation and other sufferings, in Romish dungeons, and the wholesale butcheries and assassinations of millions on millions of "saints and martyrs of Jesus"—all in the interest, and by the command of that great "infallible" name of "blasphemy"—"The Church!" Surely the edicts of the dragon, by which he let loose the powers of hell upon the Christians, in the days of the empire, did not—as results have shown—even equal, in Satanic malignity, the decrees by the councils of this beast "with two horns like a lamb"—that modern "Catholic" dragon—the Church of Rome!

Mark—he spake, not "like," but as "a dragon." That is, as himself, a dragon. His speech was the speech of the dragon; his voice was the voice of the dragon; his spirit and his communications were the spirit and the communications of the dragon. He was the dragon, in and as the Church of Rome!

Those utterances, by councils, popes, etc., are not, as some suppose, a dead letter now. It is the boast of the Roman Church, everywhere (both of clergy and laity) that "she never changes. Being infallible, she cannot err. Hence she can neither change nor reform. Her position, therefore, once enunciated, is irrevocable." (Boston Pilot.) To-day, every Catholic, whether a papist from his birth, or a neophyte in the Roman Church, is required to endorse and adopt Pope Pius' creed, as a summary of his own faith. In his acceptance of that creed, he declares, "I also profess and undoubtedly receive all other things delivered, defined and declared by the sacred canons and general councils. . . and likewise I also condemn, reject and anathematize all things contrary thereto."

In those horrible decrees, we behold the image of the two-horned beast, in the Roman Church, as in no other organization, of either ancient, or modern times—perfect, in every feature, in every particular. They are a perfect reproduction, in both language and spirit, of the speech (the edicts) of the dragon (the Roman empire) in primitive times.

Although, as the Roman Church, the dragon now claims to have become another self, those frightful modern manifestoes show that in that church he has only assumed the roll of the two-horned, lamb-disguised beast. They are the utterances of "the beast with two horns like a lamb"—the Church of Rome—now "speaking like a dragon."

"He exerciseth all the power of the first beast." Verse 12. "He." This second beast, "with two horns."

"The first beast, before him." Evidently the beast described in verses 1-3. That first beast succeeded the dragon—the empire—but not to all the imperial authority and power. The secular power of Rome, over "the nations," had departed, and they had resumed their former civil independence (as denoted by the transfer of the crowns from the heads of the dragon—Chap. 12:3 to the horns of the beast—Chap. 13:2.) Hence, the dragon did not, could not bestow on the beast, all his former authority, but "great authority." The pontifical power of Rome—the dragon—over "the nations, remained and was "exercised" as before. This, together with civil jurisdiction, in and over Rome, and what were afterward denominated "The states of the church," was that "great authority" inherited by the papacy, from the former imperial regime. Thus the papacy became "the beast with two horns like a lamb"—the full-fledged "man of sin," claiming, "exercising" all the powers and prerogatives of the "first beast" who was the connecting link between the dragon and the two-horned beast; that is—between the empire and the papacy, 476-756. Then, from the setting up of the papacy, in A. D. 756, till the occupation of Rome by Victor Emmanuel, in A. D. 1872, the Church of Rome (as the two-horned beast) literally "exercised all the power of the first beast."

Thus we have the hieratic genealogy of the two-horned beast. First, the dragon; that is, the Imperial Rome. Next, "the first beast," the immediate successor and heir of the dragon; the intermediary between him—the dragon—and the two-horned beast; that is, between the empire and the papacy. Next comes "the beast with two horns like a lamb," the full-fledged papacy, inheriting (from or through the first beast) the "seat" of the dragon—Rome—and "exercising" all the power of his immediate predecessor, "the first beast."

All these symbols, types, figures etc., are now fulfilled to the letter, in and by the Church of Rome. No other power ever has fulfilled, or ever can fulfill, in any sense, this inspired exhibition and description of that great apostate church. She now occupies "the seat of the dragon"—the city of Rome. Till Victor Emmanuel, she "exercised all the power" which was left to Rome, at the subversion of the empire.

Holding, therefore, exactly the place assigned to "the beast with two horns like a lamb," fulfilling, too, all the functions, relations and conditions assigned in the vision, to that beast, that church can be nothing else than the power designated by him, and he can be nothing but a representation of that church. That beast, therefore, was and is the Church of Rome.

"THE MARK OF THE BEAST."

"He causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads." Verse 16. The fulfillment of this statement is clearly manifest in the fact that every member of the Roman church, young or old, male or female, "small and great, rich and poor, free and bond," received at baptism a "mark"—"the sign of the cross"—on his or her forehead, and every priest, at his ordination (or "consecration") receives the same mark, in the palm of his right hand. (Rev. S. B. Smith, Ex-priest and Editor of "The Downfall of Babylon," 1834.)

In verse 17 we find this "mark of the beast" coupled with "the name of the beast," in a manner at once peculiar and very suggestive. In it we see that "the sign of the cross" was connected with a "name," was, in fact, emblematically itself a name of much more than ordinary significance. That "sign of the cross" is simply and only "the true, original, mystic tau (T) of the ancient Chaldeans and Egyptians, the initial of the name of Tammuz. (Hislop, p. 322.) Tammuz was the false Messiah of Babylon. (Id. pp. 117-20.) With his mother—Semiramis—"Astarte" etc.—he was an originator of the ancient Paganism there, and so of Romanism. (Id. pp. 80-89, 365-6.) Thus, that sign of the cross," so used, symbolizes and expresses the name "Tammuz." Thus too it designates, describes and exemplifies that great system of which he was a founder, and after his deification (next to the sun) its chief divinity. Hence the inspired description of the "sign of the cross," the mark or name of the beast, and (chap. 14:11) "the mark of his name." That "sign of the cross," therefore, stamps the Church of Rome the church of Tammuz, not of Christ.

Of course, then, its application, as a initiative into the Roman church, stamps its recipient as the disciple and votary of Tammuz. It is a "seal," not "of the righteousness of faith," but as a "mark of the beast," and of "the name of the beast"—it is a seal of the beast, of Paganism—of Baal. It consecrates its recipient to the worship and service of anti-Christ. By it, therefore, he is "sealed," not for Christ, but for "the dragon . . . that old serpent, called the devil and Satan!"

[NOTE.—When we see (as in Rev. 12:4 we have seen) that primarily "the dragon represented Imperial Rome, we must also see that that ancient Imperial Roman "Pontifex" was also the representative of the dragon. So, when the bishop of Rome assumed the office of "Pontifex Maximus" or "pope" with all the relations, functions and powers of the ancient pontificate, and (as the head of the Roman Paganism, became the vicegerent of the devil) brought that whole system of abominations into the church, "he necessarily became thereby the primeminister of Satan, and, of course, came as thoroughly under his power as the previous pontiffs had ever been." Hence in verse 9 (of this twelfth of Revelations) the words "dragon," "devil" and "Satan," are used interchangeably to signify and designate the same thing. The fact, therefore, is self-evident, that those names, thus used, do teach that the sovereign pontiff of Rome was, and is, ever and always the dragon, and as such, "the high priest of Satan!" These facts give an added and darker significance to "the mystic tau," "the sign of the cross." "At first, it was the emblem of Tammuz." As Tammuz, by his apostacy from God, became, as it were, the progenitor of the whole system of Paganism, and thus the vicegerent of Satan's, so through him, "the sign of the cross" became the emblem of the ancient "Teitan," that is—of Satan himself." (Hislop, pp. 460, with note.) What then of the use of that "sign," in the Christian church?]

Such is "the mark of the beast," the sign of the cross. As a professedly Christian "mark," it is simply and only one of those "sorceries" by which, for long centuries, the Roman church has "deceived the nations." As the initial and memento of the great originator of the dragon and beast (the Pagan, Roman hierarchy) it is, frequently, "the name of the two-horned beast," as he is now impersonated and represented in and by the Church of Rome.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIANS AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

The double number of the Pittsburgh Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter for July and August contains the Minutes of the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., held at New Castle, Pa., beginning May 1, 1893. In it we find the following REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

The argument against secret orders is many-sided. These orders are to be condemned as rivals of the home; as selfish, and in their selfishness wasteful of time and money; as promoters of the evil communications which corrupt good morals, as hostile to just government in the state, and to purity of doctrine and faithful discipline in the church. All these and other kindred objections may be and should be urged against secret societies. But there is one particular aspect of the argument against all such orders suggested by their name itself, and that is their secrecy. This objection is selected for consideration in this report for the reason that frequent attempts have been made of late to belittle it or even to dismiss it altogether. It has been maintained in public meetings of the National Christian Association within a few months past that their secrecy is not in itself a reason why these societies should be opposed and condemned. There seems to be, therefore, a present urgent call for a brief review of this mischievous apology for one of the worst characteristics of Satan's empire of darkness.

The argument by which it is attempted to apologize for this feature of secret orders is in substance as follows: The family may have and does often have its home gatherings, from the privacy of which all others are excluded. In like manner there may be meetings of ecclesiastical tribunals or civil legislatures which are not open to the public. So there may be societies for social, industrial, or other purposes, with secrecy as one of their essential characteristics, and yet their secret character may be justifiable and right.

A summary answer to all this argument is that it draws an unwarranted conclusion from the premises. God has given to mankind the family, the state, and the church. Their blessings are intended for all. The privacy of the homes and any occasional privacy in the church or state is only a wise means of securing their intended blessings more fully and more certainly for the entire family of mankind. To find in the privacies of these institutions which God has given with all their fullness of light and blessing to meet all the wants of all men, a justification of man-devised societies which are conceived and born in selfish exclusiveness, and carried forward in darkness, is a shameful perversion of reasoning from analogy. It is far worse than that. It is an insult to the wisdom and goodness of Him who said in the moral and spiritual as well as the natural world, "Let there be light," and who in the days of his tabernacling with men, taught his followers to walk in the light as children of the day and not of the night, by his own example of doing nothing in secret and ever speaking openly to the world.

But we must go further than simply to deny any true analogy between the privacies and intimacies of the home and the secrecy of the lodge. The latter is destructive of the former. The secrecy of a social order, apart altogether from any other feature of it, cannot but prove a deadly enemy of all the proper confidences of the home. It interposes the chasm of sealed lips and closed breasts between husband and wife, fathers and daughters, brothers and sisters, and sons and the mothers, in whose bosom they were cherished. The secrecy itself, whether of Masonry or of Odd-fellowship, or of any other less objectionable association, so far from having any analogy to the confidences and privacies of the home, is their necessary and implacable foe.

But does not the affirmed analogy hold in the wider sphere of the church and the state? Do not their institutions, by occasional proceedings at least, justify the secrecy of the lodge? The argument here is no less fallacious than before. The church and the state may at times exercise the right of reaching in private certain conclusions intended to have in due time the widest publicity. This is a wise private method for a public end; a prudent administrative means for accomplishing the greatest possible good for all. But a secret association is founded in secrecy. The very end and essence of its being is to have secrets, and to keep them from all but the initiated. If anything at all analogous to this is introduced into the administration of national or ecclesiastical affairs, it is to be condemned equally with the secret orders themselves.

In the state, as in time of war, there may be secret methods for public ends. To guard against the communication of information to an enemy, matters may be kept in temporary concealment for the ultimate knowledge and benefit of all. But in all this can be found no justification either for secret orders or for secret caucuses of ambitious politicians. A secret political caucus, like a secret order such as Masonry, is readily transformed into a cabal, or even into a traitorous conspiracy.

In like manner in the church, in times of persecution, her members may be driven to the retirements of glens and moors, and to hidings in dens and caves of the earth. But the concealments necessary in such times for the enjoyment of the means of grace, and even for the preservation of life, bear no analogy either to the secrecy of ecclesiastical caucuses or to the secrecy of the lodge. The analogy is between the caucus and the lodge. An apology for the secrecy of Masonry may be attempted as a defence for a secret meeting of a coterie within a church, the very nature and purpose of which secret gathering requires the concealment of its proceedings from the church itself. But such an attempted apology and defence is a condemnation both of the secret order and of the secret church meeting which patterns after it. One of the gravest of perils that can threaten the church is a clique or coterie of her officers and members, planning their course, and agreeing before hand to stand by each other for the securing of certain ends. Entering into any such covert arrangement, whether expressed or in substance only tacitly understood, no follower of Christ can hold his soul free to receive divine light and guidance, and to act an independent part in all emergencies as they arise, and as present and imperative duty to the Lord himself demands.

Your committee submit for adoption the following recommendations:

1. That Synod urge upon all its members the maintenance of our uncompromising testimony against all secret orders on account of their secrecy, as well as on account of other evil features, whether these may be more or less aggravated.

2. That we testify not only against secret societies themselves, but also against the civil authority which gives to them a corporate being, and against the churches which permit their members to be connected with them.

3. That we commend the National Christian Association, its agents and its excellent organ, the Christian Cynosure, to the hearty co-operation and support of our ministers and people.

4. That Synod appoint five delegates, with power to add to their number, to represent the Covenanter church at the approaching Annual Meeting Conference, on June 20, in Chicago, with the understanding that that gathering shall in no way involve its members in an approval of the Columbian Exposition.

AN INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

With much pleasure we call attention to the following announcement made by the Evangelical Alliance for the United States, of which William E. Dodge is President and Rev. Josiah Strong is General Secretary.

We have reason to believe that this conference will be the most important of all the long series of World's Fair Congresses in Chicago, because of the practical results which it is hoped will be therein achieved. Pastors and laymen interested in any one of seventy different lines of practical Christian work will be able to hear an expert tell of his or her success in that line of work, and will be able to ask a thousand questions as to methods and results.

At the Memorial Art Palace in Chicago, October 8-15, 1893, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance for the United States will be held an International Christian Conference. The subjects to be discussed fall under four general divisions, as follows:

I. Christian Liberty. The Evangelical Alliance has ever contended for liberty of conscience, and has rendered important service in its behalf in many lands. Papers will be presented on the Present Condition of Religious Liberty Throughout the World, Religious Liberty and the State, and Religious Liberty and the Progress of Mankind.

II. The Religious Condition of Protestant Christendom. The papers of this division will not attempt statistical presentations, but rather discuss the existing currents of religious thought and life in Europe, America, and Australia.

III. Christian Union and Co-operation. These were the germinal ideas of the Evangelical Alliance. Their present prominence in Christian thought will lend exceptional interest to their discussion. There will be addresses on Organic Union: Its Reasons and Prospects, Denominational Federation, and the Necessity of Co-operation.

IV. The Church and Sociological Problems. This Conference will have been preceded by many denominational church congresses, showing how great and varied are the resources of the Christian church in the United States, also by congresses presenting the many and great social and industrial problems of modern civilization. It will be a peculiar province of this conference to point out the relations of the one to the other, to show how the resources of the church may be applied to the solution of these problems, and to emphasize the necessity of united action on the part of the churches in order to the accomplishment of their evangelic and social mission.

In addition to the General Conference there will be a large number of Section conferences, which together will constitute a School of Applied Christianity. Information will be given by experts on many lines of practical work, classified under the general divisions of Evangelistic, Reformatory, Social, Economic, Sanitary, Educational, and Miscellaneous.

It is expected that the Conference will hold two sessions daily: viz., morning and evening.

All ecclesiastical bodies, theological seminaries, ministerial associations, local churches of the various evangelical denominations, as well as local alliances, are hereby cordially invited to send delegates.

All communications should be addressed to the General Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, United Charities Building, 105 East 22d Street, New York.

THE DENS OF VICE IN CHICAGO.

The course taken by several Chicago papers in exposing some of the notorious dives, is most commendable, and as a result a number of them have already been closed through the attacks made upon them by these papers. Chicago is certainly a dangerous place for a young girl to go alone. The Columbian Exposition seems to have been an excuse for letting down the bars in all quarters, and immorality which would not have been tolerated even in Chicago at another time, is allowed to go on undisturbed. Fathers and mothers who let their innocent girls go to Chicago without friends to shield them, are running a tremendous risk. A great number of those who arrive in the city are likely to join the vast throng of unfortunate outcasts. Other people's daughters as innocent as yours have entered a large city never to be again what they were.

Pastors, superintendents of Sunday-schools, teachers and parents, should not hesitate to warn all the young girls of their acquaintance to look out. A father searching for his daughter not long since, said with great anguish, "I would to God that some one had warned us of the danger."—Union Gospel News.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Two common newspaper blunders—Some reminiscences of anti-slavery times—The Congregationalist and the Boys' Brigade—Matters collegiate—A hint from the enemy.

There are certain things which always seem to get muddled in the brains of the average newspaper-writer. I have two especially in mind; one, a point of history; the other belonging to modern times. The Pilgrims and the Puritans, as in these days of diffused intelligence everybody ought to know, were radically different—in rank, in creed and in disposition; yet the former are still made to shoulder the sins of the latter, when, as a matter-of-fact, they never hanged or even persecuted a so-called witch, and pursued with the Indians a liberal Christian policy, the spirit of which, if adopted by the government to day, would save us another century of dishonor. The Pilgrims were Separatists; the Puritans, according to John Wesley, who lived nearer their time than we, were "old strict Church of England men." The one had a passive, the other an aggressive, form of piety. The Puritans were still in the shadow when the Pilgrims were rejoicing in the sunlight of freedom from sect bonds. They were as different as a Hicksite Quaker and a Hard Shell Baptist. The other distinction, which it seems almost impossible for newspaper paragraphists and reporters to recognize, is that existing between Christian Science, the faith-cure and divine healing. The intelligent reporter invariably muddles them all together, as if they were one and the same, and the worst of it is this confusion in his brain leads to similar confusion in the mind of the honest reader, and as a consequence gross injustice is often done. One of the marks of the cultured writer is that he keeps the boundary lines intact, and does not confound together, in this slipshod way, persons and things that have no affinity. For instance two "Christian Scientists" in Pittsfield, Mass., according to the papers, have been trying the faith cure on a horse with disastrous results; whereas Christian Science is as different from the faith-cure, as that is different from divine healing.

Last Saturday's Transcript has some reminiscences of anti-slavery days by Whipple which are calculated to make a New Englander blush. Park Street church walled up one of its pews which had been bought by a colored man, and stationed a constable at the door to prevent him from entering. Rowe Street Baptist church absolutely forbade in its by-laws the sale of any pew to a colored person. And was Unitarianism, with its boasted spirit of liberality, one whit behind when the standing committee of Dr. Channing's church refused to allow Rev. Samuel J. May to preach the funeral sermon over Prof. Charles G. Follen of Harvard University, because the latter had strong anti-slavery sympathies of which they feared the former would avail himself in order to make it an anti-slavery lecture in disguise? Anti-secretists need not "weep or lament" because they are called to pass through similar experiences. It simply shows that they are in the true line of apostolic succession from these worthies of a past generation.

The Congregationalist does itself no credit by its fling at Secretary Trueblood, of the Peace Society, for his honestly expressed condemnation of the Boys' Brigade. Its reference to Paul "with his figure of Christian as a soldier clad in armor," and his "allusions to life as a warfare where men must be good soldiers of Jesus Christ," as proof that such methods are right is not to the point. When did Paul seek to win converts by forming them into military companies in imitation of the legions of Rome, putting them through a course of drill, and arming them with carnal weapons when he distinctly says that the weapons of a Christian are spiritual, not carnal? It is unfortunate that a journal which is the acknowledged organ of Congregationalism, and a leader of religious thought, should take the wrong side on such an important question.

President Helen A. Shafer, of Wellesley, has received the degree of LL.D. from Oberlin, her Alma Mater, being the second woman in America, after Maria Mitchell, to receive this honor, although there have doubtless been scores of American women whose attainments rendered them worthy of it.

Smith College, from a very small beginning in 1875, when it was a standing joke that President Seelye, on occasion of a college picnic, could take all the pupils who attended on a barge, being more like a large family than a college, has steadily grown till now it runs a nearly even race with Wellesley in the matter of numbers, having 700 students, and 114 in the graduating class. "The Smith College girl is sensible, proud and self-reliant." I wonder if the name has anything to do with these characteristics. Somehow we attach the idea of good sense and like qualities to such world-famous family names as Smith and Brown. Wellesley girls are just a little addicted to "gush", and the Vassar girl, everybody knows, has not materially altered since she tried the soul of Maria Mitchell by her devotion to feminine vanities. The story is told that on one occasion, when giving a lecture on astronomy in her class-room, a pupil informed her that the brooch which confined her collar was unfastened, but instead of thanks the latter received a stern rebuke for the frivolous interruption. Miss Mitchell could have had as little understanding of the keen interest which so many women take in the society column of the daily newspaper, dealing with such momentous topics as the care of the complexion or the latest fad in table etiquette, as the man in the moon. A brain which soared undisturbed among the worlds, and walked daily as in its habitual home among the vast eternities of celestial space, could only view such trifles with a pitying contempt for those who could find nothing higher or nobler to occupy their attention, and who, in her own words to the Vassar students, are "throwing away infinities for infinitesimals."

Wellesley, Smith and Mt. Holyoke are growing more and more to be miniature worlds in themselves, the college authorities trying as far as possible to keep the students from any "entangling alliances" of friendship or business with the townspeople. This is doubtless the wisest course to pursue, on the whole, though the result of four years of scholastic seclusion from the common everyday life about her, as complete as if she lived in a glass case, must be unfavorable in many respects for the college-bred young woman when she finally leaves her Alma Mater. She must know something of the world before she can do the world's work; she must do considerable learning and unlearning, and, above all, make the wholesome discovery that in spite of her graduation diploma there are plenty of men and women in the world who know as much, and perhaps a great deal more, than she, yet never took a college course.

Williams College has just rounded out its hundredth anniversary. It recently adopted the new method of making Greek and Latin elective, with a substitute in scientific studies and the modern languages. The result is that so many have elected the latter as to almost exclude the former. The bent of the age is decidedly in favor of practical studies, and the smaller colleges seem to yield to the pressure first; possibly because the students are as a rule poorer, and feel more deeply the necessity of obtaining an education which will help them in practical life, than the sons of wealthy parents who enter the larger and more richly endowed institutions.

"In the cool of the evening, as you sit on the front stoop or in the front yard, it is a good time to tell your neighbor of the advantages of Odd-fellowship." So reads a paragraph in the secret society column of one of our local newspapers. And is it not also a good time for an anti-secretist, as he sits under the shadow of his own vine and fig-tree, and chats with a neighbor, to enlighten him on the evils of the lodge system, and get him to take the Cynosure? It sometimes pays to learn even from the enemy.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

Steps were taken at a meeting of representatives of the various secret railway orders, at Pittsburgh, on a recent Sunday, to form a federation, the object of which is ostensibly "mutual protection and aid." It includes the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, the Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association, the order of Railway Conductors, and the order of Railway Telegraphers. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has no connection with this federation. This concentration of railway employes will not, it is said, consider the question of wages, perhaps, for a year, but when it does, it may take the form of a serious menace to the railway prosperity of the country, through the lodge power.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 19, 1893.

As soon as a man of prominence dies it seems that all of the absurd and ridiculous stories with which his name has been connected—such connections are penalties paid with more or less frequency by all men who become prominent in any station—are republished, no matter how often they may in the lifetime of the deceased have been proven to be entirely false, and begin a fresh round of the newspapers. The truthfulness of this statement is proven by the revival of the old stories about the late Senator Leland Stanford having become a Spiritualist after the death of his only son. Your correspondent once heard Senator Stanford say in the most positive language, soon after the death of his son, when the story was first started, that it was not true; and Bishop Newman, who was for many years the pastor and the close personal friend of Senator and Mrs. Stanford, has more than once publicly denounced the story as being without the slightest foundation. Now comes further proof. Rev. Dr. Hugh Johnston, who, although pastor of the church attended by Senator and Mrs. Stanford for some months previous to the death of the Senator, never saw him but three times, told his congregation last Sunday of one of those visits. It was on the day of the annual pew-renting, and the Senator being confined to his house, under medical treatment for a painful ear trouble, could not attend, so Dr. Johnston called at his residence to ask him whether he wished to retain his pew. His reply was: "Oh, yes, I shall keep my pew. I am a Methodist; I love the theological system—a generous teaching—of the Methodist church." After a general conversation, in which the Senator explained why he had not been able to attend church and expressed regrets, Dr. Johnston said to him: "My dear Senator, in view of the uncertainties of life, I trust you have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and have no fears for the future." The Senator warmly grasped the hand of the minister and said: "Thank God, I have peace. I have no fears for the future. I do not fear death. I rather welcome it. It seems to me that the happiest moment of existence must be the moment when the soul returns to its Maker." "His eyes were suffused with tears," said Dr. Johnston, "so were mine. I said: 'My dear Senator, I am so glad to hear you speak as you do.' And when in Toronto, I read of his sudden departure, I said: 'The happiest moment of his existence has come. His soul has been kissed away to God.'"

As a rule, the funerals of military officers are gorgeous affairs, but that of Gen. Kelton, late Superintendent of the Soldiers' Home, which took place late Monday afternoon, was a striking exception to the rule, owing to the following quotation from a letter by the deceased some time before his death, which was sudden: "Having lived longer than the average life-time of men, and having wrought hard for many years in the interest of public good and for the benefit of the army, and for which the army and the public have both shown appreciation, I feel that my work and usefulness must soon come to an end. I therefore express the wish that, if I die on duty at the Home, I be buried in the National Cemetery near the Home, in a common coffin, such as are made for the inmates, covered with common black serge, and that the Home hearse be used. I do not desire a military funeral, nor any pall-bearers; I have been permitted to walk alone, self-reliant, all my life; I prefer to go alone to the cemetery, without the escort of pall-bearers or military band." The dead officer's wishes were carried out to the letter, although 2,500 people, including all the inmates of the Soldiers' Home, attended the simple funeral services.

Government officials do not attach the slightest importance to the rumor telegraphed here a few days ago from the Pacific coast, that the British authorities were preparing to resist by force the decision of the Behring Sea arbitration, if it be in favor of the claims made by the United States. They are unanimous in the belief that the decision, whatever it may be, will be accepted by both countries, in accordance with the terms of the treaty of arbitration. Statements to the contrary are both malicious and disgraceful.

The number of men who can address a congregation in three languages—German, Swedish and English—as the Bishop of Visby, Sweden, did Monday evening at the reception given him at St. Paul's Lutheran church, is limited. The bishop was sent to make a tour of the United States by King Oscar to commemorate the 300th anniversary of the Reformation of the English Lutheran church.

REFORM NEWS.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN INDIANA.

ON TRAIN, July 20, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As our train speeds on toward the Iron City, I will write of my recent past.

The appointments announced in my letter of last week were all filled. The attendance was very good, all things considered.

I hardly expected the publisher of the Cynosure to leave the office and come down to Denver, Ind., to hear me lecture. The first man we saw as we drove up to the Adventist church, on Saturday evening, was Bro. Phillips. He was loaded with tracts, which the friends received gladly. The Adventist brethren treated us most kindly, and assured us of a welcome should we ever come that way again.

I was given a copy of the American Sentinel, with the request that I read it. I did so. There is some truth in this paper, but much that is unreasonable, and not in accord with the facts, as I understand them.

While I have spoken in German Baptist meeting-houses before, last Sabbath was my first experience in speaking at one of their regular meetings. As these brethren have different ways and means of conducting their religious services from any other denomination, they want to be very sure that the man who preaches for them is of the right kind. A council, consisting of about fifteen of the leading brethren, was called to discuss the situation. It was finally decided to risk me, and I was given the floor (there was no pulpit), morning and evening. There were at the two services not less than seven hundred people, many secretists coming to hear their lodges arraigned for trial in the evening. Weighed in the divine scales, they were all "found wanting". Judging from the kind words and Cynosure subscriptions given, I may report my efforts here as well received.

I cannot say what the lodge men thought. They did not stop to shake hands. As the women of this church are to "ask their husbands at home" (if they have any) about the things they want to know, they will doubtless think much as their husbands do. I am glad the husbands think right, on the lodge question.

I went to the M. E. church, at McGrawsville, in good season, Monday evening, and waited for an audience. At 8:10 the pastor and his wife came; a few ladies appeared later, and I began the meeting. The men came soon. Before 9 o'clock some seventy-five had gathered from the harvest field or threshing-machine, where they had been hard at work all day. They listened attentively while I spoke, for over an hour. Those who could not keep awake were allowed to sleep.

The friends at North Grove U. B. church said it was hard times, and I agreed with them, as I failed to get a Cynosure subscription. If the times were hard, the children were plenty. There was a large collection at the lecture. They were allowed to run at large and cry when they felt like it. If I were not blessed with a good voice I should have stood a poor show in this meeting.

En route for Columbus, Ohio, yesterday, I stepped off one train at Marion, Indiana. Here I renewed the acquaintance made with Bro. J. Q. Thomas in Chicago recently. He was the delegate sent by the Friends of Indiana Yearly Meeting to represent them in the late conference of Christian churches to discuss the lodge question. He went with me, and we found three others willing to subscribe for the Cynosure. We reached the Friends' midweek meeting just as they were adjourning. I was introduced to several who knew Fathers Stoddard, Hinman, and several of the leaders in our work. They would have been glad if I could have stopped for lectures and work among them. The lodges have been making some inroads, and the watchful Friends say there is now need for more work. Sister Mary A. Nichols is their pastor. She has been greatly honored, as an evangelist, in seeing many turned from darkness to light. Her testimony is that where the lodge goes up the church goes down. I am to send her tracts for young men whom she hopes to keep out of the lodge.

I stayed last night with my sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Orvis, in Columbus, Ohio. They were watching over a very sick child—their little Florence. Favorable symptoms gave them more hope of recovery this morning. We trust it may be the Lord's will to answer prayer in her restoration to health.

In looking over my work in Indiana I feel glad that it was my privilege to there proclaim a much-needed truth. But for the kind assistance of our friend, Isaac Crane, I could not have accomplished the work performed. Bro. Levi Miller's kind hospitality will be remembered with gratitude. Bro. Phillips' presence and help was an inspiration. Friends in Indiana, take new courage! We are on the side that is sure to win, for it is God's side. W. B. STODDARD.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

CHICAGO, July 21, 1893.

Since the gates to the World's Fair have been officially closed on the Lord's day, the situation has been materially changed. This change, from law-breaking to law-abiding, has given a new impulse to the N. C. A. department and necessitated a readjustment of the working force on the grounds.

The committee in charge of our exhibit applied to me to represent the cause at their booth, and I have consented to do so to the best of my ability. On and after Monday the 24th inst., I expect to be in my place, until further notice. As there was no other person available who had as wide an acquaintance on the field and as general a knowledge of the methods, history and literature of the reform, it seemed to be a call from God to the duties of the station. With the co-operation and assistance of Mrs. Stoddard and other friends, I shall seek wisdom from God to make the most of this rare opportunity for the cause of Christ, in whose name we have unfurled our banner.

Friends will remember that our exhibit is to be found in the northwest corner of the gallery of the Manufactures Building, the largest on the grounds, easy of access, and in the midst of other interesting exhibits.

The work is not altogether new to me, and the few hours already spent at the exhibit are to me sufficient proof of an opportunity to reach the "ends of the earth" such as we have never before known, and such an opportunity as is not likely soon to be repeated.

I desire, first of all, to have in me "the mind of Christ," which is the Holy Spirit. Second, That "perfect love which casteth out all fear." Third, That "faith which overcomes the world." Fourth, "A mouth and wisdom which all your [and His] 'adversaries shall not be able to gain-say nor resist,'" and, Fifth, That I may so exalt Christ and his body, the church, that the unsaved, like the disciples, will forsake all and follow the Lamb whither soever he leadeth them.

I cordially invite friends visiting the Fair to call and register their names, examine the exhibits, and leave orders for books or other literature (which we will send by mail or express, as the rules prohibit us from delivering articles purchased on the Fair grounds), and subscribe for the Cynosure and obtain free tracts.

If you are already interested and have friends who are indifferent, induce them to call, if you can. I wish, especially, to extend a cordial invitation to all Freemasons of either rite in the higher degrees, to Odd-fellows, and members of other secret or exclusive orders, to call and examine our "degree charts" and look over our list of credible witnesses, and get a catalogue of our publications for reference.

If you are not sufficiently interested already to pray for the man who is called as your representative to "stand in the gate," then a simple request from me would avail nothing. "This kind" of enemies which we encounter "come not out but by fasting and prayer," and I feel that there is a volume of believing prayer behind this movement against the secret empire which will prevail. Dearly beloved, let that volume increase.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SHOULD THE TARES BE ALLOWED IN THE CHURCH?

DEKALB, Iowa, July 17, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is claimed that the church should receive members of secret societies, because "Christ receives them." The evidence given that Christ "receives them" is that they claim to be "converted."

But if we are to depend upon human testimony whether secret societies are to be fellowshipped or not, there are at least two other classes of witnesses that should be heard. One class are those who claim to be converted from the secret orders to Christ, and testify against the lodge as evil. The other class are those who claim, and among them the writer, that Christ has converted them from all desire to belong to any lodge.

All human evidence on either side is not valuable, unless it has Bible foundation. A part of the foundation for the evidence against the lodge is just as good as it was eighteen hundred years ago, though quoted often, and there is none of the Bible contrary to it. Here it is:

"Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Christians are commanded by the Lord to "abhor that which is evil," and not testify in favor of it.

We, however, do not accuse any intelligent Christian thus, but many Christians grieve the Spirit by ignorance and "perish for want of knowledge."

In casting about for a seeming Bible foundation to admit members of lodges to church membership, they destroy the testimony of their own witness by the plank they use. "Let the tares and wheat grow together."

Christ does not receive tares into the church. Tares are not converted persons. It seems to me that wise men would not produce such an argument. An unlearned and ignorant brother gave me the light I needed on this subject. He said: "Let the tares and the wheat grow together, in the world, not in the church." That is according to the Gospel of separation. Christ says of those he receives, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." The lodge is.

CYRUS SMITH.

AN ENCOURAGING LETTER FROM THE SOUTH.

SENECA, S. C., July 11, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am a minister of the Gospel, and laboring here in harmony with my church—the Wesleyan Methodist. I have been preaching in this vicinity since last January, and have been outspoken against organized secrecy.

I have been careful in my statements and manner, but I have raised quite a commotion. Some have left their lodges, and others are honestly investigating. We need some books and tracts, to help in the work. The people have been educated to believe that secret societies are religious institutions and look upon them with favor. The consequence is, I am, in the war, but in the minority, and looked upon by some with suspicion; but we are gaining ground and advancing on the foe. Still we need help. If you are in a situation where you can donate some books and tracts, I will see that they are judiciously distributed, and will be very thankful for the chance to do so.

I have just returned from a trip to Athens, Ga., and while there I preached seven or eight times in a tent that had been put up for Gospel services. In one of the services I spoke plainly against organized secrecy. There was a Methodist preacher present, and at the close of the service he came up and took sides with Masonry. He wore the badge of a Master Mason. In my remarks I had said that secret organizations were worldly institutions, and, to prove it, I stated that Masonry and Odd-fellowship forbade prayers in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ in the lodge, if there was a member that objected, and that Masonry, when it pretended to quote Scripture, left the name of Jesus Christ out of its quotations. These statements the minister referred to, and positively denied. There was an Odd-fellow standing by, and he was a member of the same church of which the Mason was minister, but he spoke right out and said: "What Mr. Abbott said is true concerning Odd fellowship." That remark brought him into conflict with his preacher and with the secret order men of the place. He is a business man, and proposes to stand by the truth. He told me, before I left Athens, that he was going to leave the lodge. He needs help to meet the opposition and to intelligently defend his position. If you could send him the Cynosure for a while, and some reliable exposition, I believe he would use them in such a way as would let light on many, and in the end pay you fully by obtaining subscribers for your paper, and distributing tracts. His name and address are James H. Higgins, Jr., 220 and 222 East Broad street, Athens, Ga. Do what you can for us, and we will be thankful, and remember you when the opportunity comes.

H. S. ABBOTT.

FRATERNITY AND WHISKY.

EMPORIA, Kans., July 16, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A few years ago a man came to Corsicana, Tex., and began business as a street auctioneer. Within about six years he accumulated several thousands of dollars. He was a Knight of Pythias. He then developed a taste for ardent spirits, and we found out that it has been his curse through life. I think that from the time he began a reckless drinking bout until his death was about twenty days.

There was a saloon in the town, operated by two brothers, at which our street auctioneer obtained more or less of his whisky. One of the brothers was also a Knight of Pythias; and as the victim of alcohol was buried by the order, the man who sold him the liquor, instead of following him to the grave, walked before him in the procession, in the character of acting chaplain of their lodge, carrying the Bible!

How is that for fraternal love? Here is the victim of alcoholism dead in his coffin, and the man who sold him the poison conducting his funeral services! I thought it the most appropriate combination that I had ever seen.

T. H. CHURCH.

FREEMASONRY.

THE CHRISTLESS DEGREES AND THOSE THAT BURLESQUE CHRISTIANITY.

XVI.—GRAND PONTIFF.

In this degree, says President J. Blanchard, "the lodge master is 'Thrice Puissant,' personating Christ, who has all power. The master is seated on a throne and holds a sceptre, with the blue canopy of the heavens over him. This is Christ's rival, the usurping god of this world. The degree itself, says Mackey, is founded on the mysteries of the Apocalypse, which is the Revelation of Jesus Christ (Rev. 1: 1), and his lodge members are clothed in white linen robes, like attending angels (Rev. 15: 6); and on the jewel is engraved 'Alpha and Omega,' which is the title of Christ; and, in opening the warden, says: 'The Sun of truth has risen.' Christ is the Sun of Righteousness, and the 'Truth and the Life.' As in a preceding degree, where the grim mockery of opening the seals and sounding the trumpets was gone through with, so here follow the vials poured out, and the dwelling-place of God, the New Jerusalem comes down to men; and after these superlatively impudent mockeries are gone through with, the candidate is made to kneel down and swear to conceal them from all but Masons of this degree; after which the candidate is solemnly anointed into the priesthood of Christ, who is 'a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek.'" All of which is horribly blasphemous.

ous. All ascriptions of glory to Christ are omitted, and the Scripture is mutilated to avoid giving him honor.

XVII.—GRAND MASTER OF ALL SYMBOLIC LODGES.

There is no mention of Christ in the opening ceremonies, in the initiatory rites, or in the closing passages.

XVIII.—NOACHITE, OR PRUSSIAN KNIGHT.

The legend of the degree describes the travels of Peleg from Babel to the North of Europe. The object of the legend seems to have been to impress the idea of the thorough dispersion at the tower of Babel, and its fundamental idea, to teach the crime of assumption and the virtue of humility. It has no room for Christ.

XIX.—KNIGHT OF THE ROYAL AXE, OR PRINCE OF LIBANUS.

This degree would make an appropriate drama for a trades-union of carpenters. It recurs to a period when the Sidonians cut down the cedars of Lebanon to build Noah's Ark, etc., and the dignity of labor is lauded. It is neither witty, wise, nor pious—simply driveling.

XX.—CHIEF OF THE TABERNACLE.

In this degree Aaron and the Tabernacle worship are revived and burlesqued. The drama is the destruction of Korah, and the burning of the sons of Aaron. It is a string of blasphemous utterances. "When Christ began to exercise divine power here, the devil met him, and claimed through him the world's worship. That he has been at ever since, and Freemasonry and its spawn are the last hope of the devil." (Pres. J. Blanchard.) Christians have no business with this degree.

XXI.—PRINCE OF THE TABERNACLE.

Aaron and other Jews reappear. "Proofs are afforded by this degree," says Pres. J. Blanchard, "that Freemasonry is vulgar, debased heathenism."

XXII.—KNIGHTS OF THE BRAZEN SERPENT.

Founded in part on the brazen serpent erected by Moses in the wilderness and the incidents relating to it. In its connection with the corruptions of Freemasonry, that sublime story of the severity and mercy of God, the latter is debased to the character of a burlesque passion play. Like the rest of the Scottish Rite degrees, "it mixes things sacred with things profane, till the whole compound is profanity."

XXIII.—PRINCE OF MERCY.

Christ appears in this degree, but not as he is, the only Prince of Mercy. The Senior Warden opens "a chapter of Princes of Mercy." In Romanism, intercession and mercy for sinners is sought not only from Christ but from his mother and numerous other dead human beings. So here, in this degree, we have as many Princes of Mercy as there are ministers, doctors, lawyers, saloon-keepers able and willing to pay for their initiation into it. Christians know only ONE Prince of Mercy—even the Lord Jesus Christ, whom the Masons dishonor in all degrees.

XXIV.—COMMANDER OF THE TEMPLE.

This degree is looked upon with contempt by intelligent Masons. It is the revival of an old Teutonic order of military monks or priests, which Napoleon I. abolished in 1809. It is now renewed as an armed secret degree of Masonry. Mackey and Macoy dislike and scout it because it lacks symbols, allegories, and philosophy. Christians will avoid it as unworthy of their profession and allegiance to Christ.

(To be concluded.)

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

Home and Country for July derives a large share of its interest from its opening paper, by Robert Sigel, on the German Parliament (Reichstag), which has recently gained fresh distinction by its passage of the new German Army bill. As a legislative body representing a great nation it is a study in itself, and Mr. Sigel has made his sketches (illustrated by portraits) of the principal present leaders peculiarly attractive. Rev. Dr. J. J. Law reviews, with specimens, "The Songs of Freedom" that have moved the world and contributed to important national changes—The Marseillaise Hymn, etc. Other contributions are as follows: An Abolitionist, a story of ante-rebellion days, by M. H. Peters; Crossing the Plains in Early Days, illustrated, by Lieut Nathaniel Grill; Bird Racing in America—The Carrier Pigeon, illustrated, by Thos. C. Hilton; Insect Musicians, illustrated, by Harrison Kellogg; The Greatest Invention of the Greatest Inventor, by F. H. Vizetelly; The Kleptomaniac; Evolution of Coaching, illustrated, by Horace E. Bishop; Like a Tale that is Told—a Fourth-of-July story, by Leon Mead; Lawn Tennis, by Ernestine Gray; The White-Bordered Flag, illustrated, by Hezekiah Rutterworth; with other poems, sketches, etc. There are several full-page engravings—Peace; The German Parliament in Session; Indian Fight on the Plains; A Street in Denver in the '70s.; A Western Lynching; Sappho; Coach Attacked by Highwaymen, and Lawn Tennis. Published by Joseph W. Kay, New York.

The fifteen new forest reservations recently created by the government are described in the July number of the Review of Reviews, and maps are presented showing the exact location of each. These reservations are scattered throughout the great western half of the country, and aggregate in extent probably not less than 15,000,000 acres. The writer makes plain the importance of preserving the great forests which guard the headquarters of many of our large rivers, and urges that the undertaking so splendidly begun may be further extended. Published at 13 Astor place, New York City.

PAMPHLETS.

The "Time-Saver" is a guide to the World's Fair that deserves its name. It names and locates 5,000 of the most interesting things on the Exposition grounds, grading them according to their importance. No other guide does this. The visitor who uses a "Time Saver" can see the Fair in one-third of the time usually occupied and find without difficulty everything he wants to see. An encyclopædia of World's Fair information that can be carried in your breast pocket. Compiled by a newspaper man, who inspected every exhibit on the grounds. Not sold on the Exposition grounds; but nothing sold there will take its place. Ask your newsdealer for it, or send 25 cents to W. E. Hamilton, Room 12, No. 283 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

"The Lochgoil Conventicle, Sabbath, 4th June, 1893," is the title of a neat pamphlet, published by David Bryce & Son, Glasgow, Scotland. It contains an interesting collection of papers relating to the celebration of the centenary of the death of John Howie, author of the "Scots Worthies"; and the Two Hundred and Fourteenth Anniversary of Drumclog, which occurred on the above date. The contents are as follows: Lochgoil and the Howies; Covenanting Relics at Lochgoil; Gathering to the Conventicle; Order of the Service; Sermon by Rev. Dr. Kerr; Lines by Mr. Alex. Watt; The Battle of Drumclog; A Description of Claverhouse, and Hislop's Dream of the Martyrs. The illustrations represent Lochgoil Farmhouse, Covenanting Relics; Bothwell Bridge, and the Battle of Drumclog. Everything connected with the persecutions of the old Scotch Covenanters is of interest to every Christian. Their fidelity to truth and the principles of Christianity, we are glad to know, are perpetuated with equal fidelity among their present representatives. At the conventicle were gathered 5,000 to participate in the beautiful services of the occasion. "After prayer and the singing of the 93d Psalm," says a reporter, "Dr. Kerr announced his texts—the 8th verse of 2 Kings, chapter 2, and the 31st verse of the Gospel by John, chapter 8. From these he preached a most impressive sermon, dwelling on the main ideas that Elisha, though no relative of Elijah, inherited his position and work, while the Jews to whom Christ spoke had not inherited the faith nor other pious characteristics of their Father Abraham. Towards the close he made an allusion to the doctrines held specially by the Reformed Presbyterian church as to the relations between church and state, and expressed his belief that a middle course might be found between extremists in this matter."

Among recent publications embraced in "The Anti-Infidel Library" of H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, are the following, both written by Mr. Hastings: "Witchcraft: Is It a Reality or a Delusion?" and "Was Moses Mistaken? or, Creation and Evolution." The former is a summary of the evidence, ancient and modern, in support of the reality of devilism in the affairs of men; the latter a defence of Bible truth against the delusive reasoning of evolution. These two enemies of Christ and his religion have been often exposed, and in these pamphlets, written in plain language, their author has condensed the wisdom of the ages in defending Christianity and its Founder against the insidious doctrines that would dethrone Christ and bring his kingdom to naught. The price of each pamphlet is ten cents.

NOTES.

The August Century will be, as usual, the Midsummer Holiday number. Its chief feature will be "Phillips Brooks's Letters to Children," which will include a great number of delightful letters written from abroad by the late Bishop Brooks to the children of his brothers' families. They present a little-known and most interesting side of the life and character of the great preacher.

One of the leading articles of the August St. Nicholas will be "The Boyhood of Edison," with an account of some of the great inventor's juvenile experiments, including his attempt to hatch eggs by sitting on the nest as he had seen the hen do? A portrait of Edison when a boy forms the frontispiece of the number.

LODGE NOTES.

(From Secret Society Papers.)

The Encyclopedia Britannica says that the oldest Odd-fellow lodge of which the name has been handed down to us is the Loyal Aristarchus No. 9, which met in 1745, "at the Oakley Arms, or the Bear's Head, in Smithfield, as the Noble Master may direct."

The Grand Lodge, K. of P., of Iowa, will assemble at Muscatine, August 7th, and continue through the 10th. At the same time the Grand Encampment of the U. R. will be held there. Three prizes for $150, $100 and $50, will be awarded to the best drilled division, and one of $150 to the best band of not less than sixteen pieces.

The "ball ballot" is a secret ballot and cannot be reconsidered. This is plain law and should be easily understood by every one who has read the ritual and laws of the order; yet every little while we find the question presented to Grand Lodge officers. After a secret ballot has been taken no member should speak of or discuss it. It is the prerogative of every member to cast such a ballot as he chooses, without question; and to deprive him of it would be to subvert one of the most sacred safeguards of the order.

"Bill Thompson's dog got his head stuck in a pitcher. Bill cut off the dog's head to save the pitcher, then broke the pitcher to get the head out." This fairly illustrates the wisdom of the man who goes in the Knights of Pythias, thinking that for twelve cents a week dues he will receive $5.00 per week continuous sick benefits, $100 death benefits after his demise, and $50 when his wife dies; in addition, he expects to receive from the lodge a ten cent Havana cigar at each meeting, every other member to come to him, shake hands, offer him a cigar, and after adjournment all the members present to go out and have a banquet at the expense of the lodge.—Pythian Banner.

IN BRIEF.

A NEW FLOORING.

It is stated that French builders, who have carried the art of hardening plaster to where it is used for flooring, either in place of wood or tile, employ for this purpose six parts of good quality of plaster intimately mixed with one part of freshly-slaked white lime, finely sifted. The mixture, as thus composed, is laid down in as quick time as possible, care being taken that the trowel is not used upon the surface for too long a time; after this the floor is allowed to become very dry and subsequently saturated in a most thorough manner with sulphate of iron or zinc, the iron giving the strongest surface, its resistance to breaking being found to be twenty times the strength of ordinary plaster. It appears that with sulphate of zinc the floor remains white, while when iron is used it becomes the color of rusted iron; but if linseed oil, boiled with litharge, be applied to the surface, it becomes of an attractive mahogany color, this being especially the case if a coat of copal varnish is added.—*N. UNSUSPECTED CAUSES OF FIRE.

Among the results brought to light, through modern chemical investigation of the sources and causes of spontaneous combustion, attention has recently been specially called to the fact that sawdust should never be used to collect drippings or leakages. It is said that dry vegetable or animal oil is found to inevitably take fire when saturating cotton waste at 180° F., and spontaneous combustion occurs more quickly when the cotton is soaked with its own weight of oil. Danger is involved in patent "driers," from leakage into sawdust, etc.; in oily waste, too, of any kind, or waste cloths of silk or cotton, saturated with oil, varnish or turpentine; also in linseed oil drippings into a sponge; glycerine or oil of any kind leaking into sawdust; bituminous coal in large heaps of pit coal, hastened by wet, and especially when pyrites are present in the coal—the larger, the greater the liability. Oil on flour, or water on flour is productive of spontaneous combustion. In fact, all organic structures, being largely composed of carbon and hydrogen, are readily excited, because of the affinity of the hydrogen for oxygen.

CURIOUS PHOTOGRAPHS.

At a recent meeting of the British Royal Society one of the members exhibited some curious photographs, produced by placing coins, medals and such like objects on a sensitive plate. An electrical discharge was sent through the object, and a developer then applied to the film, whereby images of the designs upon the objects were obtained. The best results were produced in oxygen. No effect could be obtained in a good vacuum. Changes of temperature made little difference in the results, while increase of atmosphere pressure was found to improve definition.—Electrical Review.

CONGRESS AND SILVER.

August 7 is the day set by President Cleveland for the meeting of an extra session of Congress to discuss and adjust the prevailing financial situation. One important measure, which is urged by bankers and others, is the summary repeal of what is known as the Sherman Silver law, which required the government to purchase silver bullion to the amount of 4,500,000 ounces every month. When received at the mints, it has been coined into dollars, with the consequence of loading up the vaults with this money until stagnation and depreciation have overtaken it, disturbing values and creating a corresponding financial depression. Silver certificates, issued in lieu of silver dollars by the government, also felt the depreciation of silver values, and suffered accordingly as to demand and circulation.

It is not probable that the recent business failures, suspensions of banks, etc., can be traced to this dethronement of silver, but it has, perhaps, exercised an influence in that direction. Overproduction of manufactures, slow collections and other causes have contributed to the present commercial and financial situation; but the Sherman law has proved itself inimical to the national prosperity, and even its originator, Senator John Sherman, is now said to be in favor of its repeal.

It has always been understood that this law was the result of a coalition between politicians and silver mine owners for their mutual benefit. Hence the depression in the value of silver was at once and severely felt by the mine owners, with the result of stopping production at the mines, throwing thousands of laborers out of employment, and thus entailing upon them idleness, and promoting suffering in their families. This is why we have recently read in the secular papers of mining troubles in the silver-producing States. It would seem that there must be less production of silver, or it will have to be demontized and classed henceforth with the baser metals used in the arts and manufactures.

THE GERMAN ARMY BILL.

The passage of the Army bill in the German Reichstag indicates a triumph of the Emperor and of militarism. What the result may be to the peace of Europe time only can determine. The professed object of the Emperor is the preservation of peace.

At present the nations of Europe are too much afraid of each other, and of an enlightened public sentiment, for any one of them to inaugurate a war. The German standing army will be (without counting the reserves) nearly half a million.

Such a vast body of men cannot long be kept in idleness, and they constitute a burden that the people of Germany will not contentedly bear. The rapid growth of the Socialistic party, if it does not mean republicanism, means at least a great limitation of absolute power, and more thoughtful legislation in the interests of the masses. Notwithstanding the pacific declarations of the Emperor, the discordant elements in Germany and the surrounding nations are such that war may break out at any moment, and only the good providence of God can avert it.

CONTRASTS.

The Knights-Templar Conclave in Chicago, August, 1880, was an event of large significance, both to the fraternity and those who see in Freemasonry of every degree nothing in harmony with Christianity.

In the first place, with the usual arrogance of the fraternity, which can never brook rebuke for anything that it does, the Knights gathered here as a "Christian" assembly. They came ostensibly as Christians, as defenders of the Christian faith, manifesting intense devotion and enthusiasm in behalf of the symbol of the cross. They emblazoned it upon their banners, their regalia, their triumphal arches and their buildings. Even the saloons hung out the banner of the cross.

Yet these "Christians" came from far and near, filling Sunday trains with their commanderies, paraphernalia and "liquid refreshments." If public information may be relied upon, the mass of visiting Knights did most of their journeying to Chicago on the Sabbath.

Secondly, they came as gentlemen; for it is a prime principle in the fraternity that Masons must be gentlemen; and so they are—when they are nothing else.

Yet these gentlemen, when off parade, thronged the saloons, paying double prices for beer, etc., because the saloon-keepers knew that the Knights were gentlemen and would not object to paying gentlemanly prices for their grog.

We don't pretend to know where all these Christian gentlemen spent their nights. Many of them ostensibly slept on cots in the Lake Front Park. But it was currently reported that the women whose "steps take hold on hell" were as jubilant as the saloon-keepers when the gathering began.

The conclave brought out some other incidents that do not reflect credit upon these Christian gentlemen. A newspaper printed at that time quoted a circumstance to this effect: One of the Knights, "who does not support his family in decency, an irreligious man, a Sabbath-breaker, and a patron of intemperance," (yet a knightly Christian gentleman!) got together $80 with which to buy a sword and other "fixings" in which to join the parade.

A coal-dealer reported one of his customers a Knight in full rig, who passed his time pleasantly in the conclave, yet bought his household fuel by the bushel when the show was over!

But enough of that old conclave. It will come, some day, before the Lord whom it professed to honor for judgment—let us hope it will be judgment tempered with mercy.

This blessed summer of 1893, in Chicago, is not marked by the presence of a general conclave of Knights Templar. It has, instead, the Columbian Exposition, with which this article has no connection, and that noble band of evangelists led by Dwight L. Moody, and including Rev. Dr. Gordon, Messrs. McNeill, Whittle, Bliss, Sankey, Towner and a host of lesser lights in the mission tents.

Not a single saloon or other place of doubtful morality has hung out a sign of recognition of the presence of these Christian workers. They have not gone about with banners and swords: regalia and costly plumes, asking people to glorify them for their smart appearance. True, some of them have gone into theatres and circus tents, during the devil's recesses—not to act a part or to swell the coffers of the managers—but to preach Christ crucified.

Yet it is strange that in these same theatres and circus tents thousands have crowded about these men of God to hear the simple Gospel of Christ preached in love and earnestness. There are songs, and prayers, and exhortations, and testimonies of the love of Christ; but the fumes of ardent spirits, cigars, and oaths and innuendoes, are not apparent to the senses in those assemblages. Not even the semblance of the cross is there for adoration.

Not there, as in the Commandery, is the Scripture mutilated, lest any should be offended by the name of Christ, or hear something not at all conducive to the peace of the sinner; just the plain simple truth—"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye may ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you;" "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world;" and "Come unto me all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

And they are coming.

What can Freemasonry offer that is half as consolatory?

CONTRADICTIONS OF MASONIC THEOLOGY.

"Able, sound thinkers regard Masonry as a species of religion."—[John H. Brown, Capitular Correspondent of Kansas Grand Chapter, in "Voice of Masonry" for July, page 548.

"I am firmly resolved, with God's assistance, to oppose it (Freemasonry) all I can, being fully persuaded that man is wicked and corrupt enough by nature, without voluntarily returning to pagan practices, and swearing to support and maintain a pagan religious institution."—[From "The Master's Carpet," page 396, by Edmond Ronayne, Past Master Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago.

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church."—[From the "Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," by Rev. Chas. G. Finney, Master Mason, pp. 260, 263.

"It is amazing that Masonic writers should coolly affirm the identity of Freemasonry with the dark, bloody and polluted heathen mysteries. The New Masonic Trestle-Board gives, as one reason why Masonic lodges are in upper rooms, that 'the ancients, worshiped in high places;' those that corrupted and destroyed the Hebrew nation; and the author of a 'Philosophic History of Freemasonry' calls his book 'The Modern Eleusinia,' from the mysteries of Eleusis, which Paul forbade Ephesians to fellowship because they were 'unfruitful works of darkness,' so vile that it was 'a shame even to speak of the things done of them in secret.' Eph. 5: 11, 12. These are broad confessions that Freemasonry is ancient paganism modernized. It follows that if 'the things which the Gentiles sacrificed,' they sacrificed to devils' (1 Cor. 10-20), then Freemasons worship the same."—[Pres. J. Blanchard, in Doesburg's "Masonry Illustrated," page 345.

"Freemasonry is not Christianity, nor even a substitute for it."—[Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia, page 641.

"Masonry is not the religion of Israel; it is not the revelation of Jesus of Nazareth."—[From "Masonry's Grandeur and Goodness," by Rev. Jas. B. Murray, G. C., in "Voice of Masonry" for July, p. 485.

"The Christian religion... believe me, brethren, ... remains the basis and chief commentator of Masonry."—[Address of Rev. Jno. F. Ernst, G. C., Grand Royal Arch Chapter of N. Y., in the "Voice of Masonry" for July, p. 495.

Here is a choice bit of Masonic theology, by Wm. E. Ginther, in the "Voice of Masonry" for July, p. 504, founded on the text of Scripture in John 3: 14, 15: "The Son of man is 'lifted up' in the man who is born again, and in no other;" which is a serious perversion of the original meaning of the text.

Again, from the same, p. 510: "Surely no Mason, or any other intelligent person who believes the Scriptures to be the Word of God... ought to conceive the great deluge of Genesis 7, and the inundations spoken of elsewhere, to have been by rains, oceans and streams of natural water, and the fire and sulphur mentioned as having fallen from heaven, and conflagrations therefrom, to have been liquid and literal fire!" [The italics are his own.]

This is matched only by Robert G. Ingersoll's attempts to "upset Moses."

In "A Masonic Templar Address to the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar in Alabama, May 10, 1893," by an unknown orator, printed in the "Voice of Masonry" for July, p. 530, we are told, in a comparison between "Masonic Templary" and "Free and Accepted Masonry": "Neither is a religion or creed in or of itself; it neither displaces religion, nor usurps its prerogatives. They are SECULAR institutions, with a common end in view, teach lessons and truths in their own peculiar way."... "Masonic Templary stands at the head of SECULAR institutions." Page 531.

"19. A belief in the existence of God"—any ruling deity whose existence is acknowledged in any country where a Freemason's lodge is established—"as the Grand Architect of the Universe, is one of the most important landmarks of the order. It has been always admitted that a denial of the existence of a Supreme and Superintending Power is an absolute disqualification for initiation

... 20. Subsidiary to this belief in God, as a landmark of the order, is the belief in a resurrection to a future life." [Masonry cares little by whom, or by what medium, the resurrection from the dead is performed. The Master's degree shows a belief that the grasp of the "lion's paw," personated by the Master of the lodge, is sufficient to raise the dead after burial for a fortnight!—EDITOR.] "This landmark is not so positively impressed on the candidate by exact words as the preceding; but the doctrine is taught by very plain implication, and runs through the whole symbolism of the order. 21. It's a landmark that a Book of the Law shall constitute an indispensable part of the furniture of every lodge. . . . The Book of the Law is that volume which by the religion of the" (any) "country is believed to contain the revealed will of the Grand Architect of the Universe." [The Old and New Testament—our Bible—is prescribed for Christian countries; the Koran for Mohammedan lodges, and, by implication, all the "sacred books" of heathen lands, for the various locations in which their authority is admitted.—EDITOR.] See Mackey's "Encyclopædia of Freemasonry," page 442. And this is the imperative law of Masonry throughout the world, whatever any other exponent of Masonic religion may say.

But enough of these theological contradictions in Freemasonry. They abound in Masonic authority; and it is difficult to determine just what a man may believe and lose his own soul if he remains a steadfast adherent of the fraternity.

"IN HOC," ETC.

We ask for the chapter on "Two Horns Like a Lamb," printed in this issue, a careful perusal, especially that portion of it (page 2, third column) relating to "the mark of the beast." The author has spent much time and given long research to this subject, and his description of the image of the cross and its origin and use by the heathen, the Romish church and the Masons, is full of interest.

We suppose that if all the pieces of wood exhibited throughout the world as relics of the true cross of Christ were gathered together they would form one taller than the gallows of Haman and be as remarkable for the different kinds of timber they present.

In 2 Kings 18:4, we are told that Hezekiah "broke in pieces the brazen serpent that Moses had made; for unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it; and he called it Nehushtan"—a piece of brass. The brazen serpent was the antetype of Christ on the cross—to whom all may look and live, as did the snake-bitten Israelites upon the brazen serpent in the wilderness.

The virtue was not in the piece of brass nor in the wood of the cross, but in the Christ whose power was represented in the one, and on the other of which he died for our sins.

There is no intimation in all the Scriptures that the cross, or the image of it, was ever designed by the Almighty to be honored or bowed down to; but if Bro. Temple is right, the sign of the cross in any form, as a something pertaining to religion, is an invention of Satan and its worship of pagan origin.

Yet in many forms it is worshiped, and by numerous people who think they thereby honor Christ.

The Second Commandment in the Decalogue is strangely ignored; and when we see the metallic cross on the Knight Templar's regalia, with the old Crusader's motto—"In this sign we conquer," we are not superstitiously to connect its significance with Christianity—it is only a piece of metal, the veneration of which is sin.

LAST SUNDAY.

Last Sunday was a day of events, both in and out of Chicago.

The World's Fair, for the first time since May 28, was closed to visitors. Only employees and those provided with passes could gain entrance to the grounds; but these swelled the number of admissions to 8,819. Lawyer Mason, who was Clingman's attorney when the latter obtained an injunction in a local court forbidding the Directory to close the gates on Sunday, sent his son to several gates to demand admission under the injunction, but his applications were refused. It may mean trouble for the Directory, but God and public opinion will defend them against these enemies.

All the booths in Midway Plaisance, except that of the "unspeakable Turks," were closed.

Altogether, the Commission and the Directory did their duty very well.

Joseph Cook preached about the World's Fair at Union Park Congregational church, and took occasion to remark that "greed opened the gates of the World's Fair on Sunday, and greed closed them on Sunday." He should have given God the glory for this last blessing.

The Erie street mission of the Third Presbyterian church passed resolutions thanking the Chicago Record and another Chicago daily for so strenuously insisting that the gates be closed on Sunday. From the first the Record has been a grand advocate in this behalf, and richly deserves the thanks and patronage of our readers, while so many other secular papers throughout the city and country have rancorously advocated Sunday opening, and that without a single valid reason. The other daily thanked, by the Erie street mission for advocating Sunday closing was a recent convert to the cause, which it formerly opposed. But the Record has been with us first, last and all the time.

About 11,000 persons went to Milwaukee, from Chicago, by several steamboats, to witness the great Turner festival held in the "Cream City" on Sunday. Of these, 1,000 who had return tickets, and some of whom had no money, were crowded out of the boats when they wished to come home, and were left at Milwaukee to look out for themselves as they best could.

In Chicago the weather was warm and fair, and the public parks and saloons, drug-stores and ice-cream parlors were well-filled.

Taken altogether, including base ball games, the day, outside of the Christian places of worship, was very far from being honored according to God's commandment.

THE WORLD'S FAIR N. C. A. EXHIBIT.

As the Cynosure has previously stated, is in the northwest corner of the gallery of the Manufacturers' Building, the largest structure on the grounds, covering thirty and a half acres. Next to the N. C. A. exhibit, on the north, is the Woman's Educational Union, where two large attractive signs catch the eyes of those coming from each way:

"PETITIONS FOR BIBLE IN SCHOOLS; YOUR SIGNATURE SOLICITED."

Most of the time several young and old are signing petitions, while beautiful portraits of Miss Mary Allen West, the organizer of this union, D. W. Irwin and John Forsythe look down upon the scene. Next to the N. C. A. exhibit, on the south, is the National Temperance Society, then the M. E. church South, the M. E. church, the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, Good Templars, Y. M. C. A. and Society of Christian Endeavor. Denominational exhibits are found to the east of those named.

Among all of these exhibits there is not one that attracts as much attention as that of the N. C. A., so far as we have observed.

The first thing that catches the eye is a large handsome sign:

"STANDARD ILLUSTRATED RITUALS OF SECRET SOCIETIES. POST UP."

Two book-cases, one of them of a revolving pattern, well filled with books, invite inspection and purchase, though they cannot be delivered from this stand.

A case filled with a variety of tracts and the sign "Free, take one of each," stands in the foreground and is well-patronized. Hanging on the left, is an oil-painting of Philo Carpenter, and, on the right, one of President J. Blanchard, and under each is the sign: "THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE."

At the back of the exhibit, on a shelf just under the canopy, are busts of Washington, Webster, Grant and John Quincy Adams, and under these are portraits of D. L. Moody, Pres. Finney, Drs. Gordon, Goodwin, Roy, Joseph Cook, John Wesley and others, with their ringing testimonies against the unfruitful works of darkness, in such large clear letters that they can be read thirty feet away. Many other short quotations from eminent divines and statesmen, on large map-like hangers, adorn the walls, and thousands stop to read these. Overhead are even clearer Scripture quotations condemning secretism. The first quotation on one of these hangers is by Shakespeare:

"It is a sin to swear unto a sin

But greater sin to keep a sinful oath," and after a Mason has read that, he does not feel so much like honoring seceders with the "perjured villain" title. Much of the time there is an earnest discussion of secrecy going on, and often from six to ten young men are interested listeners. It would be difficult to imagine a method of attack that secretists do not resort to. Some express astonishment and indignation that the exhibit is allowed at the Fair at all, and such rabid secretists are usually answered by a listener, with the question: "Isn't this a free country?" or by some retort to show that lodge intolerance is not relished. Such retorts often come from young men who have joined college or insurance societies, and they almost invariably seem glad to have their attention called to the danger that they will reach such depths of degradation unless they about-face.

"You don't know anything about it," is the commonest declaration of war from a Mason or Odd-fellow, but the reading of a few foot note quotations from Albert G. Mackey, Robert Macoy, Daniel Sickels, etc., will convince said Masons and all listeners that they may be mistaken and the foot-note quotations from Grosh, Donaldson and others, satisfy the Odd-fellows. Sometimes a man will take one of the rituals and read some moral platitude and ask if that is not good teaching. If an Odd-fellow, he is told that the greatest objection to the order is the fact that it is an imitation or counterfeit religion, and if he disputes this, Grosh and others settle it, for the fact that the Sovereign Grand Lodge has prescribed Christless prayers ONLY, and Grosh's pity statement Manual of 1869, old edition, New Edition 1882, page 90: "What regeneration by the word of truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship," is so conclusive that it often calls up honest astonishment from the deceived Odd-fellow.

Perhaps some of the Cynosure readers are not aware that the many similar quotations of Rev. A. B. Grosh, found in the foot-notes of Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated, are excluded from the next edition of his Manual, dated 1882.

Many well-posted Freemasons will deny with much vehemence that Masonry is a Christless religion, but they dare not go back on the exponents of the order who with one voice proclaim salvation through Masonry and without Christ, and the foot-notes referred to settle the case. They also confirm the ritual in such a marked manner that Masons, when they have read a few of them, give up the fight and even talk freely and candidly on the subject. As Bro. James P. Stoddard has charge of the N. C. A. exhibit for a month, beginning July 24, the Cynosure readers can look for some pithy World's Fair items from him. His good wife, Mrs. Anna E. Stoddard, it is hoped, will have charge of the Woman's Educational Work during the same month.

W. I. PHILLIPS IN INDIANA.

A four-page, illustrated tract was issued just before my recent trip into Indiana. Some of our friends highly value illustrations, and my experience justifies their taste in this direction. These tracts were read on the cars, on the streets, and in homes, and carefully preserved.

For the first time I listened to an anti-secrecy lecture by Rev. W. B. Stoddard, and was gratified to notice the interest which he aroused and the power with which he spoke.

On Sabbath I had the pleasure of beginning an acquaintance, which I hope may long be continued, with Rev. Frank Fisher, superintendent of the Brethren Orphans' Home, at Mexico, Ind. In selecting him for superintendent, Bro. Miller showed a Napoleonic wisdom and insight of men. Bro. Fisher will be a great blessing to his church and Miami county, if he will inform himself as to the effect upon communities of the Masonic and other lodge altars. "Because they lacked knowledge, my people have gone into captivity."

A walk of seven or eight miles brought me to the home of an aged and well-known friend of the poor and of all good causes. I had a pleasant conference with Bro. Wm. Haverstock, and he seemed to have abated none of his Christian interest or zeal.

My trip was mainly for the financial interests of this reform, which are the interest of those whom I visited, and hence I can report good success so far as future promises are concerned. The financial stringency affects all our friends, and consequently we are finding it difficult to keep the work moving as we ought. But I believe you will do all that you can to keep the Treasurer supplied with means to meet current expenses.

My faith has been strengthened since returning to the office and finding a draft for $50.00 from Bro. J. A. Conant, of Connecticut.

THE HOME.

NOT YET.—JOHN 13: 7.

Not yet thou knowest what I do,
O feeble child of earth,
Whose life is but to angel view
The morning of thy birth!
The smallest leaf, the simplest flower,
The wild bee's honey-cell,
Have lessons of my love and power
Too hard for thee to spell.

Thou knowest not how I uphold
The little thou dost scan;
And how much less canst thou unfold
My universal plan,
Where all thy mind can grasp of space
Is but a grain of sand;
The time thy boldest thought can trace,
One ripple on the strand.

Not yet thou knowest what I do
In this wild, warring world,
Whose prince doth still triumphant view
Confusion's flag unfurled;
Nor how each proud and daring thought
Is subject to my will,
Each strong and secret purpose brought
My counsel to fulfill.

Not yet thou knowest how I bid
Each passing hour entwine
Its grief or joy, its hope or fear,
In one great love design;
Nor how I lead thee through the night,
By many a various way,
Still upward to unclouded light,
And onward to the day.

Not yet thou knowest what I do
Within thine own weak breast,
To mould thee to my image true,
And fit thee for my rest.
But yield thee to my loving skill;
The veiled work of grace,
From day to day progressing still,
It is not thine to trace.

Yes, walk by faith and not by sight,
Fast clinging to my hand;
Content to feel my love and might,
Not yet to understand.
A little while thy course pursue,
Till grace to glory grow;
Then what I am, and what I do,
Hereafter thou shalt know.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

DO NOT RESIST GOD.

You perceive by the light of God, in the depth of conscience, what grace demands of you; but you resist him. Hence your distress. You begin to say within, It is impossible for me to undertake to do what is required of me. This is a temptation to despair. Despair as much as you please of self, but never of God. He is all-good and all-powerful, and will grant you according to your faith. If you will believe all things, all things shall be yours, and you shall remove mountains. If you believe nothing, you shall have nothing, but you alone will be to blame. Look at Abraham, who hoped against every rational hope! Look at Mary, also, who, when the most incredible thing in the world was proposed to her, did not hesitate, but exclaimed, "Be it unto me according to thy word." Open then your heart. How can grace find room in so straitened a heart? All that you have to do is to rest in the teachable spirit of faith, and no longer listen to self, and those things which seemed the greatest difficulties will be insensibly smoothed away.—Madam Guyon.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF CHRIST.

"Any man"—any soul may have the friendship of Christ, or these, his words, are without meaning. His heart aches with pity for our loneliness, and for the poverty that we misname riches. He will listen to what we have to tell him, he will take what we have to offer him, however simple the story, however humble the fare. And he will give to us the heavenly food wherewith his earthly life was sustained, the meat that men know not of. While we talk with him and he with us, he will unfold to us the secret of his glorious earthly career—the blessed open secret that he would have us share with the whole world—"not to be ministered unto, but to minister". Filled with his Spirit, we shall not desire to claim him for ourselves alone. Our hearts will unfold with his open-heartedness, and lonely souls will seek shelter with us, attracted by the light and warmth of his presence. They who have set wide the doors of their being to him have caught from the presence of this divine guest their first hint of the possible rapture of living; they have had in the face of Christ their first true glimpse of God.—Lucy Larcom.

A SIGNIFICANT STORY.

A wealthy banker in one of our large cities, who is noted for his large subscriptions to charities, and for his kindly habits of private benevolence, was called on by his pastor one evening, and asked to go with him to the help of a man who had attempted suicide.

They found the man in a wretched house, in an alley not far from the banker's dwelling. The front room was a cobbler's shop; behind it, on a miserable bed in the kitchen, lay the poor shoemaker, with a gaping gash in his throat, while his wife and children were gathered around him.

"These people are starving!" exclaimed the banker, as soon as he caught sight of their pinched, wan faces; and while the doctor was busy sewing up the cobbler's wounds, he hurried away to procure fuel and food.

"We have been without food for days," said the woman, when he returned. "It's not my husband's fault. He is a hard-working, sober man. But he could neither get work nor pay for that which he had done. To day he went, for the last time, to collect a debt due to him from a rich family; but the gentleman was not at home. My husband was weak from fasting, and seeing us starving drove him mad. So it ended that way"—turning to the fainting, motionless figure on the bed.

The banker, having fed and warmed the family, hurried home, opened his desk, and took out a file of little bills. All the large debts were promptly met; but he was apt to be careless about the accounts for milk, bread, etc., because they were so petty.

He found there a bill of Michael Goodlow's for repairing children's shoes, ten dollars. Michael Goodlow was the suicide. It was the banker's unpaid debt which had brought these people to the verge of the grave, and driven this man to desperation; while at the very same time the banker had been giving away thousands in charity.

The cobbler recovered, and will never want a friend while the banker lives; nor will a small, unpaid bill ever again be found on the banker's table.—Anonymous.

AFRICAN PECULIARITIES.

There arrived at Des Moines, Iowa, June 30 (says the State Register) David A. Day, Lutheran missionary on the west coast of Africa for more than nineteen years. That evening a delightful service and reception were held at the church. On Sunday a much-pleased audience listened to Dr. Day's sermons, both morning and evening, as well as his addresses to the King's Daughters, the Sunday-schools of St. John's and the Swedish Lutheran church, the Christian Endeavor Society and Missionary Twigs.

In the morning he began with the tribal troubles as to language. Cut up into many different petty clans, each dialect is different, causing one to feel that the tower of Babel might have located there. There are no words for "faith," "hope," "love," "home," "wife," "God." It is "Negro-English," a sort of patois, amusing specimens of which the missionary made his hearers "savvie" (understand). He told of crewmen living right on the coast who for generations have pursued their amphibious life, bringing in passengers and baggage from the roads several miles out as there are no harbors on the coast. A vivid description of climatology in general gave all an idea of forests of impenetrable jungle in a country without roads or horses to travel them; of farms cleared after immense labor, but no cows to pasture on some of the richest soil on earth, and better watered than any country on the globe.

A still larger audience greeted him at night. He began where he left off and pictured the native African as the most independent man on earth,—a man that did not want to work and did not have to. In his estimation the white man,

"he big fool, too muchee sweat." His sketch of the native standing at his (Mr. Day's) parlor window, dressed in a yard of cloth and his naked body greased with palm-oil, while the rain was pouring in torrents, was vivid and realistic.

All sickness is held to be the result of witchcraft, and a woman is generally at the bottom of it. The speaker illustrated this by telling of a time when the natives thought the sun was bewitched, and the means they took of discovering the witch, a woman, of course, who actually confessed that she had done it! They poured palm-oil over a lot of cork-wood, tied her on them, and then firing it, roasted her to death. Lack of space forbids the mention of many intensely interesting things, but there was the hush of death as he depicted the desolating curse of the rum-traffic. Ten years ago, after he left the Boston port, he discovered that the hold of the vessel contained 100,000 gallons of rum, bound with him for the west coast! He stood at Sierre Leone one Sunday morning and saw unloaded there 10,000 cases of gin and 10,000 demijohns of rum. He described the wrecking of a rum-loaded vessel, afterward abandoned by the crew, and how, for days, it seemed along those ports that pandemonium had broken loose. Everybody was drunk; every man, woman and child lay around drunk.

After a native is Christianized he settles down on a farm in the community. There is a self-supporting church there, with a Sunday-school "Endeavor" society. Clement Irons, a regular "Uncle Tom" from South Carolina, is in charge of the industrial plant. The young blacks are taught not only to wear shirts and hats, but how to get them, which is more important.

A VALUABLE CLOAK.

There has been on exhibition in New York, to be exhibited later at Chicago, the war cloak of Kamehameha I., of the Sandwich Islands. This is composed of the feathers of native birds. There is a network of homespun cord made of native hemp, with tiny meshes; the feathers are laid in small bunches of three or four feathers each, tied with a tiny thread on this network. The body of the cloak is of red feathers. The cloak has a border of yellow feathers, the plumage of a bird said now to be extinct. This bird is but little larger than a sparrow, with all its feathers black, except little tiny patches under the wings. The bird was under roof protection for several years; when it was captured only four feathers were plucked and then the bird was released; and this was allowed once a year. The value of this cloak, which is of a large size, can perhaps be partially estimated when it is said that five feathers were valued at $1.50, and there are probably over a million in the cloak. At the Smithsonian Institution in Washington is a cloak that was presented by Kamehameha III. to Commodore Kearney in 1843. The commodore went to Honolulu on a diplomatic mission, and the king, as a token of his esteem and regard, took his royal cloak from his shoulders and placed it on the shoulders of the commodore. This cloak is insured for $100,000.—Christian Union.

TWENTY-TWO FACTS ABOUT DANCING.

1. It is a fact that the dancing mentioned approvingly in the Bible was carried on by the sexes separately, and generally, if not always, as a religious act.
2. It is a fact that modern dancing, however well done, adds no worth to the character.
3. It is a fact that a trained monkey can excel the best taught young lady or gentleman in the use of the heels.
4. It is a fact that it requires no intelligence and no virtue to dance well.
5. It is a fact that there is no more honor in dancing well than there is in jumping, walking, running or wrestling well.
6. It is a fact that mixed dancing becomes extremely fascinating.
7. It is a fact that much valuable time is lost by this species of revelling.
8. It is a fact that people who can not entertain themselves and each other in a rational way and must employ their heels for this purpose are to be pitied.
9. It is a fact that much money is wasted on dancing.
10. It is a fact that young ladies permit familiarities in the ballroom which public sentiment universally condemns as dangerous to purity.

11. It is a fact that many females have been ruined by attending dancing.

12. It is a fact that the best young men, even those who dance, do not wish their sisters to attend balls and they do not wish to marry dancing girls.

13. It is a fact that the whole spirit and tendency of dancing is worldly.

14. It is a fact that no one was ever noted for piety and dancing.

15. It is a fact that when a professor of religion follows dancing, his influence for good is lost.

16. It is a fact that men of the world think dancing inconsistent with the Christian profession.

17. It is a fact that the best people in the world never dance.

18. It is a fact that a dancing church member is not worth anything much to the church. As the love of dancing comes in, the love of God goes out.

19. It is a fact that most pious and considerate people in all denominations are opposed to dancing and earnestly advise against it.

20. It is a fact that no young convert desires to dance, nor any one else in whom the love of God burns.

21. It is a fact that no one ever dances to glorify God, but an apostle enjoins us to do everything to his glory.

22. It is a fact that the most ardent advocates of dancing always change their views in the presence of death.

All these facts can be proven, and are true beyond doubt. In the light of them it ought not to be difficult to any inquirer after the right way to come to a safe conclusion.

Reader, if you are a Christian and wish to decide the question, Shall I dance? with reference to your Christian growth, influence and happiness, you will never dance. It is a safe rule, says one, to engage in nothing upon which and in which we cannot ask the divine blessing. Apply this simple rule to the dancing question, and your feet will never be found in the slippery ways of the ballroom.—Anonymous.

SYMPATHY.

Of the power of sympathy the School Journal gives this illustration: "A teacher called up a little boy who seemed to be disturbing his neighbor, and while hearing a class, left him standing on the floor. After the class was dismissed she turned to the little fellow and felt sorry for him. She looked at him and through him to his surroundings. She bade him take his seat, and she could not but look tenderly at him. He leaned his head on his desk and began to shed tears. This infected the entire school. They felt the teacher was sympathizing with Johnny; they sympathized. It did all good, and yet no word was spoken." Of the voiceless intercession of Christ, one of our hymns says:

He shows his prints of love;
They kindle to a flame;
And sound through hall the world above
The slaughtered Lamb.

THE GIRL'S OPPORTUNITY.

Think of the opportunities for sweet service which comes to nearly every Christian girl. She finds them, first, in her own home. There is constant danger that the duties which lie closest shall be overlooked while the eye is watching farther off for services conspicuous and large. One writes: "It is the greatest pity that so many who are constantly active outside are quite useless in the family. Sweetness of temper and unselfishness at home, a readiness to put one's self out and lend a helping hand in all the little details of daily life, would not interfere with Sunday-school teaching and Christian work." Surely the place which should first of all be sweetened with the perfume of your ointment is your own home. Let the blessing of your cheerful love and your thoughtful, unselfish ministry fall first upon your weary mother, your burdened father, your tempted brother, upon the children in the household, on guests who drop in, on servants who help in domestic duties. "The house was filled with the odor of the ointment." Every house in which dwells a Christian young woman should indeed be filled continually with the odor of the ointment of her sweet life of love.—J. R. Miller, D.D.

THE UNCEASING MELODY.

Like some pink shell that will not cease
Its murmur of the sea,
My heart sings on without release,
This anthem full and free;
"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace
Whose mind is stayed on Thee."

The music of the melody
Has floated down the years,
A soul-subduing harmony,
It elevates and cheers;
And like the voice of Deity
It dissipates all fears.

Beyond the sounds of early strife,
Beyond the frown and sigh,
Beyond the world with discord rife,
It lifts the soul on high—
To find a calm and restful life,
By faith in Christ brought nigh.

There perfect peace surrounds the soul
Whose trust on God is stayed;
While pressing onward to the goal,
It hears, all undismayed,
The deep notes of the music roll
Through sunlight and through shade.

And this is why, without release,
My heart sings full and free,
The anthem that will never cease
Through all eternity;
"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace
Whose mind is stayed on Thee."

—Helen Chauncey, in Parish Record.

TEMPERANCE.

A POWERFUL EXHIBIT.

The World's Fair is a great institution. It is filled with most rare and costly exhibits, in immense variety and unrivalled in splendor. Go into all departments, and wonder and admiration pervade the mind. But there is one great omission—one strange defect. There is no especial exhibition of the effects of the rum-traffic as sustained and authorized by the general government. Why not grant the friends of prohibition the use of a few acres of space in which to show the world the progress that the United States has made in legalizing the manufacture of malt liquors and the results of liquor-selling under a licensed system of control. Surround the exhibit, if necessary, by a high iron fence, with elevated seats inside for visitors. Then set the show in motion. Introduce the bleary-eyed, staggering, stupid, sodden, half-crazed drunkards of all ages, especially the young men of our land whose brains are inflamed with the fumes of beer and whisky. Let them reel, and stagger, and stumble, and swagger and fall, swearing and rolling in their filthiness, under a government license that makes them more brutish than the beasts of the field.

But this is only a portion of this exhibit. Bring in and turn loose the wife-slayer, the heart-smasher, the home-breaker, the gambler, the grave-robber, the prize-ring pugilists and drunken sports from the dens of infamy and companions of high and low-down prostitutes. Bring all in from the gambling hells, race-horse tracks, along with all the wild, raving, ranting, drunken lunatics, jail birds and dead-beats. Have in one corner of this dirty den a place to pile all the clubs, axes, hatchets, knives, revolvers and shot-guns that were used by these drunken fiends in murdering fathers and mothers, husbands and wives, children and neighbors, even the babe at its mother's breast, all of whose blood was spilt by America's legalized rum power.

The seats on one side of this cage are to be occupied by all the governors and legislators of each State, and the Congress and Senate and President of the United States; and with them are to be seated all preachers and elders and praying church members who voted to license the rum traffic. On the other side, the seats are to be occupied by the broken-hearted, widowed mothers; young wives with crushed and bleeding hearts, with babes in their arms clothed in rags; children holding to the tattered garments of mothers, crying and begging for bread; fathers with bowed heads and sad hearts; fair, sweet girls in prayer to God to remove the curse which has forever blighted their homes, once so bright and fair.

Then let the President make an address to the gazing multitudes. Let him tell them of the pride with which he points to the visible fruits that have grown from one of America's great industrial enterprises—the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating drinks. The seal of the nation is stamped with its approval upon every brewery and distillery in this great and glorious Christian nation. With this seal is granted the lawful right to provide the material that produces the wonderful exhibition which we behold. It gives the saloon-keeper power to legally steal the clothes from off the backs of the praying mothers, and the bread from the mouth of the starving child; even to draw away the unsuspecting girl from her mother's side, and rob her of the dearest jewel on earth—her virtue; to decoy into their gilded dens her father, and hand out to him the breath of hell, and fire his soul with the spirit of damnation, and send him home to abuse mother, to kick and cuff the wife of his own bosom, and the children of his own blood. The legalized rum power grants the privilege to seduce from the side of a doting father, a loving mother, a darling son, and lift to his mouth the wine cup, and thus stain his pure lips, which were often pressed with a pure, sweet kiss, which sprang from a loving mother's heart.

If the speaker, in his character as manager of the exhibition, has time, he may lift the pall from the 100,000 drunkards who die annually under the effects of this legalized liquor traffic; he may show the bloody weapons with which its victims have murdered wives, children, sisters and mothers, and have killed themselves while under the influence of rum and remorse. What an array!

One more look and we close the exhibit. Behold that almost innumerable company of weeping wives, those starving children. See the misery depicted on the countenances of both old and young. Some are praying, others are begging. Some are trying to hide their nakedness by drawing around them a few dirty rags. Hearts go back to homes forever wrecked. Ears listen for the footsteps of a darling boy who never comes. All the misery and poverty that you see over yonder among those innumerable, sad-hearted, homeless wanderers are the fruits of the rum power.—Christian Leader.

THE CONSISTENT KING.

The King of Donkeyland having called for a report from his officers as to the results of the law against the traffic in strong drink which had been for some time in operation in his realm, was informed that the statute was a failure. "It has not stopped the traffic, your majesty," said the Lord Chamberlain. "The business goes on much as before, and alas, it is making us a nation of hypocrites." "Do I understand that an earnest and honest effort has been made by my officers to enforce the law?" asked the king. "Yes, your majesty; the government has done its best, but violations of the law are very common. It is the sense of the people that, since the law cannot be enforced, it ought to be repealed, that we may at least avoid being hypocrites." "I shall accept your reasoning and act upon it," said the king. "Let the book in which this law is written be taken to the market place and there burned." "O king, live for ever; thou art truly wise," cried the officers and the people. So on an appointed day the book was brought to the market place and cast into the flames by the king's own hand. "And now, bring me the other books—the laws against murder, and robbery, and extortion, and all the other prohibited things. These, also, are frequently broken, I am informed. Prohibition evidently does not prohibit, but let us not be hypocrites." So all the law-books were burned up, and each man in Donkeyland did according to his own sweet will.

Moral.—Logic is logic.—Hamilton (Can.) Templar.

"As to the question of the attitude of Christians toward the secret orders, two or three things seem to me very plain. One of them is this: that the whole movement of things on the line of secrecy is thoroughly antagonistic to the movement on the line of Scripture and Christianity."—From address of Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D.D., pastor First Congregational Church, Chicago, to Christian Conference April, 1890.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Paul's determination.—vs. 22-24. Paul was now at Miletus, a city of Asia Minor, about forty-five miles from Ephesus, where for three years he had preached the Word of God, and planted one of the seven famous churches so particularly mentioned in Revelation. His desire was to be in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, the anniversary of the descent of the Holy Spirit, but he could not go without a parting charge to the church he had founded with so many prayers and tears. From his address on this occasion we learn several important points for all evangelists and ministers of the Word to consider who would be successful in winning souls. (1) That it was "in all humility" that he preached God's message. He had no systems or theories of his own to promulgate. When he pointed men to Christ he was very careful not to stand in the way himself. (2) He "kept back nothing that was profitable," even the most unpopular truths. (3) He both "taught publicly and from house to house." This seemed a slow method, but it was sure, and helped more than anything else to give him his wonderful hold on the hearts of the people. (4) He "testified both to Jews and Greeks." There was no respect of persons with him. He saw in every human being, of whatever color, race, or station, a soul for whom Christ died. Here we have the true elements of pulpit power. And now he was going to leave them for Jerusalem, the city that had crucified Jesus and stoned Stephen. He was going in perfect ignorance of what should befall him there. All he knew was that the Holy Spirit bore witness in every city through which he passed that "bonds and afflictions" awaited him. Paul was no stranger to these things. At Philippi and Ephesus he had been "shamefully entreated," scourged and imprisoned, but these solemn warnings, received from various sources (see chap. 21: 10, 11), implied that something worse was to befall him: and so it proved, for his way to martyrdom at Rome lay through Jerusalem. "But none of these things move me." What a rebuke to Christians who let themselves be moved away from the defence of the Gospel from fear of unpopularity or putting themselves to a little extra trouble. "Neither count I my life dear unto me that I might finish my course with joy." With this supreme object ever before us, old age becomes beautiful; death loses all its terror.

2. A faithful shepherd.—vs. 25-27. It was his final parting with these beloved friends on earth, and therefore this address to the elders of Ephesus has all the solemnity of "last words." "I am pure from the blood of all men," Paul declares. Why? "For I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God." He had kept back nothing through fear of man or from motives of policy. Let all ministers who refuse to preach against unpopular sins, especially against the Baal-worship of Masonry, on the plea that their whole time must be given to saving souls, take to themselves this rebuke, for in thus shunning to speak all God's message they run a fearful risk of appearing before him with the blood of souls on their garments whom they allowed to perish unwarned.

3. The charge to the elders.—vs. 28-31. "Take heed" (1) "to yourselves." Whoever seeks to show the way of life to men must not only know that way perfectly himself, but be very careful to walk therein and not turn aside. The smallest failing is noted in a clergyman when it would not be noticed in another man; and so they need to keep a double watch on themselves and shun everything which has the smallest appearance of evil. (2) "To all the flock." A pastor's duty is preeminently to feed the sheep. Many people seem to think that a minister's special work is to preach to the unconverted, but this is more the mission of an evangelist. We learn (1) that a true pastor has his commission direct from the Holy Spirit. (2) That he is a spiritual overseer, whose eye must be on every part of the field at once, and who must know every lamb and every weak member of his flock so as to feed with special care those who might otherwise perish from neglect, and who, no less than their stronger brethren, are a part of the heritage which the Chief Shepherd has "purchased with his own blood." In his second epistle to the Thessalonians, Paul prophesies of a great apostasy through the coming in of false teachers which he here calls "grievous wolves." They have nothing in common with the harmless sheep, for they come "to kill and to destroy." "Also of your own selves." This point is of sad and important significance. These false teachers were not to come from the outside world but from the church itself, and not from the laity but from their own ranks. Paul closes by a reference to his own example. He had coveted no man's goods and even labored with his own hands rather than burden the poor of the flock. So their duty was in like manner to support the weak, and not live like the Pope of Rome on money wrung from the poor. The world says "Blessed are the receivers," but our Lord says "Blessed are the givers"—they who have within them his own divine spirit of self-abnegation and self-sacrifice.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Protestantism in Germany shows steady increase, notwithstanding the numbers in which members of the Reformed church emigrate to the antipodes and America.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Evangelical work in the Chicago churches, under the management of Mr. Moody, is a large and important feature of the World's Fair summer. Many talented strangers have been, and are now, engaged in preaching the Gospel in theaters, tents and other places, as well as in the churches, giving an appearance of activity throughout the city seldom seen in religious circles during the warm season. The Congregationalists are largely interested in this gratifying work. Similar activity is reported at other places.

FREE METHODIST.

—Owing to pecuniary difficulties, Orleans Seminary, at Orleans, Neb., has been sold to the citizens of that place for a Methodist Episcopal church seminary.

—Rev. B. R. Jones is slowly, very slowly, recovering from his protracted illness, which came near proving fatal. In the meantime his duties as editor of the Free Methodist have been ably performed by corresponding editors. His absence, however, has greatly increased the cares of the publisher and Mrs. Mary C. Baker, the efficient office editor, and so a halt was called for one week, during which the publication of the paper for July 26 was suspended. We trust that this forced vacation may result in great benefit to all concerned.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Lucy Ames Walker, sister of Bishop E. R. Ames, died recently at Athens, Ohio, in her ninety-second year.

—Bishop Merrill will have an article on "The evolution of political parties" in an early North American Review.

—The death is announced of Rev. Dr. I. N. Baird, of Pittsburgh conference. He was a native of Virginia; born in 1816, and entered the traveling connection in 1838.

—As a result of a camp meeting conducted by Evangelist N. P. Peterson of Oshkosh, Wis., on the Osakis (Minn) charge, over 140 were at the altar and 100 joined the Methodist church, besides a few that went to other churches.

—Rev. L. McLean for over two years has labored in the interest of a closed Fair on Sunday. Now that the question is settled, he is ready and glad to engage in some other line of Christian work. He is a member of Central Illinois conference, and was appointed to the Sabbath work by Bishop Foster at its last session.

—Some ladies of the Methodist Episcopal church South, connected with First church, St. Louis, Mo., were mobbed by roughs, recently, while engaged in street missionary work. As they had permission from the authorities, there is natural indignation that police protection was not afforded.

—Northwestern University has established a chair of surgery and clinical surgery, and elected Dr. Christian Fenger of Chicago to that professorship.

—Northwestern University has let contracts for a new building for the medical and dental departments. The building will be located on Dearborn street, near Twenty-fourth street, on ground belonging to the university, and on which stands the laboratory of the medical school. The cost of the new structure will be $30,000.

—Bishop Vincent will ask the next general conference to say whether an episcopal residence is declared vacant by the expiration of the quadrennium, and whether a bishop once settled has to move unless he so desires.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The trustees of the Church of the Covenant and of the Brick church, New York City, two of the wealthiest Presbyterian churches in the United States, have decided upon consolidation. Under the proposed plan the Church of the Covenant will cease to exist.

—The Presbyterian churches of St. Paul, Minn., have received 266 accessions thus far as the fruit of the recent Mills meeting there.

—Rev. Dr. William Charles Roberts, senior corresponding secretary of the Presbyterian church, has been invited to Alabama for an informal conference with some of the leading Southern Presbyterians looking to a reunion of the North and South branches of the Presbyterian church.

—The Rev. Dr. A. W. Pitzer, Presbyterian, of Washington, D. C., was elected a member of the Advisory Council of the World's Religious Congress to be held in Chicago during the Fair in that city. He sent to the chairman, the Rev. J. H. Barrows, D.D., also a Presbyterian, the following: "I thank you for your courtesy and kindness in my appointment as a member of the Advisory Council of the World's Religious Congress, which I am constrained to decline. To invite the advocates and propagandists of all false and corrupt religions to meet the advocates of the Christian religion on terms of religious equality; to furnish the hall and congregations, and all the appurtenances of worship, seems to me to subject our divine Lord to unspeakable humiliation at our hands. I cannot be a party to this crucifixion in the house of his friends. Faithfully yours, A. W. Pitzer."

—The protest of Dr. Herrick Johnson and numerous other Presbyterians against the decision of the General Assembly in the Briggs case, leads the editor of the U. P. Christian Instructor to remark: "We are sorry that a man as distinguished as Dr. Johnson has taken the position occupied by him on this question. He showed himself to be more or less in sympathy with Prof. Briggs in his trial before the Assembly, and in this protest seems to endorse, at least in measure, one of his most destructive heresies—namely, the errancy of the original manuscripts of the Bible. . . . He is a professor of the McCormick Theological Seminary at Chicago. His attitude on the subject of inspiration, as well as his sympathy with Prof. Briggs, indicates that our Presbyterian brethren need to be on their guard in relation to that theological seminary, as well as in relation to Lane and Union."

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—The Catholic Champion, a Protestant Episcopal paper, is authority for saying that there are a hundred places in that church where there is daily mass. This fact is evidence of a tendency toward catholicism of the Roman type, which is not relished by earnest Christian people.

SALVATION ARMY.

—General Booth has been holding gigantic meetings in Switzerland and Germany; in spite of bricks, stones, cyclones, thunderstorms and police restriction, God gave wonderful victory and crowds got blessed. When he arrived at Barmen to hold a meeting there was such a terrific storm that the cabby refused to drive the General. He, however, like a good soldier, buttoned his coat, turned up his collar, pulled down his hat, and was soon busy leading his meeting. While he was holding a meeting at Herisau the police came in at 9:55 P. M. and demanded that the meeting be closed. Commissioner Booth Clibborn sent the following message to the chief of police: "I am too busy with a great work; I cannot stop, as Jesus is delighted to save souls after 10 o'clock." At 10:17 they were back to close the meeting, but during the delay seven more souls had got saved.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—An officer in the church reports the composition of membership in America as follows: Males, 39,383; females, 61,164; total, 100,547, or, in round numbers, two-fifths are males.

WALDENSES.

—It is now an assured fact that a colony of the ancient Waldensian church is settled in Burke county, N. C. They have purchased twelve thousand acres of land, have their own minister, and are warmly welcomed by the American residents of that community. Eight hundred more people are expected in October.

Y. W. C. A.

—The Young Women's Christian Association of this country held a summer conference at Northfield, Mass., June 22-29, for the purpose of gaining a more practical knowledge of the Bible, a deeper spiritual life and useful methods of Christian work. This was the first national meeting of the associations. There were 229 delegates present, representing 31 colleges. Among the workers present were Mrs. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, D. W. Whittle, Robert Speer, and others. The sessions were full of interest.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The report of the discovery on Mt. Sinai of a manuscript containing the Syrian text of the four Gospels is confirmed. It is in Curetonian Syriac, and consequently older than the ordinary Syrian version, dating back, it is thought, to the sixth century. The discovery was made by a Cambridge woman, Mrs. Agnes Smith Lewis, who describes the find in the Sunday-School Times of April 22.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CAMPHOR POISONING.

Camphor is a household remedy put to many purposes. The medicinal uses are principally in headache, cold in the head, and in nausea and fainting. In such cases camphor in solution is held to the nose, and the vapor inhaled. As long as it is used in this way it can do no harm; but, unfortunately, many people take it internally, in some form or other, and often run some risk in doing so.

Camphor as a medicine is generally used by laymen either in the form of the spirit of camphor or as camphor water. But few know wherein these differ; hence, one of the greatest dangers attending the drug. Spirits of camphor is made of camphor ten parts, alcohol seventy parts, and water twenty parts; the dose of this is from five to ten drops; whereas camphor water, as now usually made, is water filtered through cotton moistened with a strong tincture of camphor; the dose of this is from a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful. It is easy to see how unfortunate it would be were one to mistake the spirit for the water of camphor, and take it in the usual dose of the latter.

In overdoses camphor excites symptoms referable to the brain. There is giddiness and sleepiness, and, in extreme cases, fainting, delirium, convulsions and profound stupor occurs. Considering how wide its use, it is reasonable to suppose that deaths sometimes occur in consequence of poisonous doses of camphor, which are attributed to other causes. Just how much is required to kill is not known; but one author states that 30 grains have caused death in an infant, and 164 grains in a woman. Of course, the greatest danger attends its use in children. All things considered, camphor is an agent which should be limited to external use and to inhalations, unless ordered by physicians.

HOW OUR FOREFATHERS SLEPT.

In the earliest times the whole family slept in the common hall. The first improvement was the erection of the solar or upper chamber. This was above the hall, or a portion of it, or over the kitchen and buttery attached to the hall. The arrangement may still be observed in many of the old colleges of Oxford and Cambridge.

The solar was first the sleeping-room of the lord and lady, though afterwards it served not only for this purpose, but also as an ante-chamber to the dormitory of the daughters and maid servants. The men of the household still slept in the hall below; later on, bed recesses were contrived in the wall, as one may find in Northumberland at the present day. The bed was, as a rule, except for the ladies of the house, merely a big bag stuffed with straw. A sheet wraped round the body formed the only night-dress. But there were also pillows, blankets and coverlets.

The early English bed was quite as luxurious as any that followed after, until the invention of the spring mattress gave a new and hitherto unhoped-for joy to the hours of night. The second step in advance was the ladies' bower, a room or suite of rooms set apart for the ladies of the house and their women.

For the first time, as soon as this room was added, the women could follow their own avocations of embroidery, spinning, and needlework of all kinds, apart from the rough and noisy talk of the men.

GOOD COMPLEXIONS.

A good complexion is counted invaluable by fashionable society, but is sometimes exceedingly hard to get and keep. Doctors tell us that women are willing to suffer pain in order to look beautiful and have a good, clear complexion. Now if the daughters of fashion are willing to suffer pain in order to be made beautiful with the beauty of this perishing world, should not the King's daughters and sons be willing to suffer the trial of their faith for Jesus' sake, that they may be made beautiful with the beauty of holiness? Is not the incorruptible ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price, of more real value than all the ornaments of the world? It is said of Daniel and his three friends that after they had lived simply on pulse and water for ten days, their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh than all they who had eaten of the king's meat. So, if we desire to have beautiful countenances, we list up with the glory of God, we must first have beautiful souls. To attain beauty of soul, we must be willing to take the simple, narrow, humiliating way that Jesus trod. We must endure the cross and despise the shame. If we keep submitted to all the divine will, our Lord will presently say, "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee."—Anonymus.

FARM NOTES.

CUTTING AND CURING HAY.

The process of cutting and curing hay is one that should be directed by a high degree of intelligence, for the reason that a considerable amount of the food of animals during the winter months is dependent upon it; and not only the animals belonging to the farm, but those that are kept in city stables.

Regarding the time for cutting hay, while there is yet some diversity of opinion, the sentiment in that direction has very much changed within the past twenty-five or thirty years; there is now a feeling that grass should be cut much earlier than formerly, when little regard was paid to the time of cutting, that being regulated more by convenience than the economical demands of the case, and, as a result, hay was hard, woody and undesirable.

Where hay is hard and woody, it is either largely indigestible, or else the process becomes so laborious that too much of its substance is required in the process.

But in case of some animals like the horse, where it has been supposed that a small portion of coarse fodder is necessary for their health, a well matured timothy is considered more desirable than any hay out a little before maturity.

During recent years the question of the digestibility of animal foods has received much attention, and those foods that are most easily digestible, and to the greatest degree, are best, other conditions being equal.

It has been found that most grasses and clovers are richest in nutrient, digestible elements when about in bloom or just before the process of seed formation; so that as soon as the seed commences to form the best elements are extracted from the other parts of the plants for that purpose, leaving a large proportion of cellular tissue. These points are sufficient to show the importance of, and reason for, cutting grass for hay at a proper season.

Grass of a low grade of quality, that would be almost worthless if cut out of season, when properly cut may become desirable fodder; on the other hand, the best kind of grass may be so neglected in cutting in season as to make hay of little or no value for feeding purposes.

As a rule, an animal is a very good judge of the desirability of any kind of hay; and the fact that animals will almost invariably select early cut and well-cured hay in preference to that late cut, which they will leave in the manger unless driven to eating it by absolute hunger, is a reason sufficient to lead the thoughtful farmer in the proper course to pursue.

Regarding the curing of hay, much judgment is required; it may be over-cured, to as great injury as from under-curing. Hay may be so completely dried as to reduce it to a hard, strawy condition that is exceedingly distasteful to animals. One of the principal points to be observed is to be careful and eliminate every particle of exterior moisture; and then the grass should be thoroughly wilted and so dried as to harden, so to speak, the juices it contains; but it should not be so very dry as to hinder a close packing in the mow. As a rule, if hay can be made without, the less handling it undergoes, the better the hay; but if so thick that turning becomes necessary, let it be done as carefully as possible, that the hay be broken no more than is absolutely necessary.

Another important point is to plan work so that hay may be carted in the middle of the day when it is warm; in this way the process of curing is much facilitated, and the hay will come from the mow in much better condition than if the work is delayed until the falling dew dampens it.

Much hay that would otherwise be of value is ruined by being carted so late as to absorb such a quantity of dew as to make it grow mouldy and musty.

Hay that appears to be a little green when handled in carting in the heat of the day will complete the curing process in the most satisfactory manner.

If partially cured hay is caught by showers as it is sometimes liable to be, it should be thoroughly dried before any attempt is made at carting, for a small amount of water in a mow of hay may work much mischief.

Hay may be made even in a partially cloudy day by working upon it carefully, keeping it in the air, if the air is dry; it will more completely retain its original color when thus cured, and is highly relished by cattle.

Haymaking is a labor that may be made successful or a failure, according to circumstances.—Wm. H. Yeomans, in the N. Y. Observer.

WATERING HORSES.

A writer in the Country Gentleman states that the digestion of food may be very much interfered with by mistakes in watering. This should always be done before feeding, and never soon after. The water is absorbed by the intestines with great rapidity. A few minutes will suffice to absorb three or four gallons of water, and this dilutes the salivary secretion so as to supply all the water needed for the digestion of the food and no water will then be needed soon after feeding. This avoids the washing of undigested food from the stomach into the intestines, where it ferments and produces much gas, and causes those frequent colics that on the whole reduce the usefulness of the work horses fully one-half.

The Pacific Coast Anti-secrecy Convention is to be held at Canby, Oregon, August 15, 16. Rev. P. B. Williams, the efficient secretary on the coast, has charge of all arrangements. His address is at Portland, Ore. Let all who can attend. The official call may be found on the eighth page of this issue.

Bank failures continue to be frequent, but after all, they are by no means so disastrous to their patrons as one might suppose. We notice that in most cases bankers are well-fixed as to their assets; so that the trouble attending their liabilities is mostly temporary, and owing to the difficulty of obtaining ready money upon their securities. Very few of the recent failures may be considered permanent or conducive to a withdrawal altogether from business; and it is alleged, with a great degree of probability, that the fright and hurry of depositors to obtain their money lead them to bring on the catastrophe which every honest bank or banker would wish to avoid. Money is scarce, and sales of property for cash are slow; but with the exercise of a little forethought and consideration there need be few causes for a financial panic.

The labor question in various localities is almost as unsettled as the financial situation. In Pennsylvania, the conference between the Amalgamated Association and the iron manufacturers practically ended with an agreement no nearer than at the beginning. Altogether twenty thousand men are idle pending a settlement. A Denver dispatch reported ten thousand men in that city out of work in consequence of the closing down of the smelters, silver mines, etc., and that there were twenty-thousand more in other cities of the State. The striking Kansas coal miners propose, with the assistance of the Populist State officers, to attack the operators in the courts, alleging that the coal companies have formed a trust or combine to keep wages down and to fix the price of coal. In view of the open sympathy expressed by the Kansas State authorities for the striking coal miners in Southwestern Kansas, the operators have taken steps to secure protection from the Federal courts. And in other parts of the country there is unrest, idleness and a threatening belligerency among the workingmen.

The World's Fair was kept open on Sunday last, in order to save the directors from punishment for contempt of Judge Stein's (local) court, which had granted an injunction upon them, in the Clingman case, which requires them to keep the grounds open on Sabbath. The total admissions during that day were only 18,637, the smallest number in attendance on any previous one. There need be no surprise manifested, however, if the Fair is no more closed on the Lord's day during its continuance. The grasp of the one-man power is upon it, and a local judge can defy public opinion with only half a law on his side.

PHILO CARPENTER.

Times are dull, and business is depressed. For this reason, recently, the captain and owner of one of our lake vessels, about to start out in search of a cargo at some other port, had the temerity to undertake to sail with one less man in his crew than the Seamen's (secret) Union had prescribed as a complement. For it is understood that the Czar of all the Russias has precisely the same autocratic power in his empire as that enjoyed in a less degree by the Seamen's Union of Chicago. Our lake captain was watched by its emissaries, and on the eve of sailing his vessel was boarded by a gang of ruffians from the Union who assaulted his men and threatened him with dire consequences. Fearing more trouble, he even dared to call in the police to preserve peace on his own craft, and had the audacity to order the arrest of his assailants. Affairs have come to a pretty pass when a vessel-owner and commander dares to do as he pleases under the laws of his country, while the secret lodge tells him not to do so!

The morale of the controversy between France and Siam, and the possibility of its bringing on a very general war between the greater nations of Europe, is discussed in another column. The cause of the present trouble and the localities involved may be thus summarized: France controls the narrow province of Annam, which lies along the coast east of Siam and extends to the west along the northern border. Up to a recent date it was understood that the boundary line between the two nations lay considerably east of the river Mekong; but France looked with covetous eyes upon certain productive provinces belonging to Siam, west of the Mekong, and attempted to obtain forcible possession of them. In one of these aggressive assaults upon Siamese territory, it would seem that one French officer was killed and another wounded. France then sent out gunboats, which were resisted and several lives were sacrificed in the conflict. Thus hostilities were inaugurated.

A correspondent in the State of New York tells us that "Writers of Masonic expositions have been derelict, and have not given the whole truth. I am told by a Mason that Masonry is so bad that if the whole truth were told it would not be believed. This is, perhaps, the reason that Masons are so cautious about giving it, and indulging in hints and garble facts. To state the whole truth would discredit themselves." On this point, Edmond Ronayne's "Master's Carpet," (pp. 328, 329) says: "Ministers of our churches go into those dark dens of infamy and sin called Masonic lodges, join themselves to this very same Baal-peor, solemnly swear to maintain and support the wicked religious philosophy of which it forms an important part, use whatever influence they possess in inducing others to follow their example, and when questioned on the subject by even one of their own congregation, they either give a haughty, defiant reply, or else positively lie to hide their wickedness." "It is false," writes ex-Pres. J. Blanchard (Doesburg's Exposition, p. 153), "that the candidate is 'uninfluenced by the mercenary motives' (when he joins the order). 'It is false that there ever was a lodge at Jerusalem 'dedicated to the Saints John,' etc., and lies told in joke, and sworn to, add blasphemy to falsehood.' It seems as if lying is a prominent characteristic of Freemasonry.

SKETCH OF PHILO CARPENTER.

Philo Carpenter, whose portrait appears on this page, was descended from English ancestry and New England parentage. His father, Abel Carpenter, settled in Western Massachusetts in 1787. Philo, the fifth of eight children, was born at Savoy, Mass., February 27, 1805.

Until he reached his majority he remained at home on his father's farm, enjoying a sound constitution and receiving a good common-school education, supplemented by a few terms at the South Adams Academy, while his home training resulted in habits of morality, industry and economy.

On two occasions, as a commercial traveler, he visited Richmond, Va., and other points in the South. Subsequently he removed to Troy, N. Y., where he found employment in a drug-store, with opportunities to pursue the medical studies to which his inclinations led him.

It was in this situation that he experienced conversion and united, in March, 1830, with the First Presbyterian church of Troy.

The return of a cousin who had explored the country between Detroit and St. Louis on an Indian pony, and his report of what he had seen, and of a favorable opening at Fort Dearborn, led Philo Carpenter to come West. So, in 1832, he shipped a stock of drugs and medicines to Fort Dearborn, took the short railroad then built to Schenectady, N. Y.; thence he journeyed by boat on the Erie Canal to Buffalo, where he secured passage on a lake steamer, the "Enterprise," to Detroit. From there he traveled to Niles, Mich., by stage; from Niles to St. Joseph, Mich., on a lighter; and, after a disagreeable delay, he reached Fort Dearborn, July 18, 1832.

At that time there were then here, outside of the fort, less than 200 inhabitants, mostly Indians and half-breeds, who lived in poor log-houses on both sides of Chicago river, near its mouth.

The cholera was raging fearfully among the soldiers, and Mr. Carpenter at once entered upon the work of their relief.

The first evening after his arrival, with an officer of the fort and a Methodist brother, he held a prayer meeting. On the 19th of August he was chosen superintendent of the first Sunday-school. (See Cynosure for July 13, page 8.)

Mr. Carpenter opened the first drug-store in the village, in a log-house on Lake street, near the river; and as the population rapidly increased, his business prospered, and he had to remove to a larger store, also built of logs. Subsequently he bought a lot on South Water street, and built a frame store, between Fifth avenue (then Wells street) and La Salle street.

In 1833 he built a frame residence on La Salle street, opposite to the court house. In the spring of 1834 he was married to Miss Ann Thompson, of Saratoga, N. Y., and settled down in his new home. Seven children were the fruit of his marriage, two of whom, Mrs. Cheney and Mrs. Rev. Edward Hildreth, survive him.

He sold his drug-store in 1843 and gave his attention to dealing in real estate, investing all his spare funds in the business, and accumulating large and valuable tracts in and out of the city.

Among others was Carpenter's Addition to Chicago, between West Kinzie, West Madison, Halstead and a line between Ann and Elizabeth streets. About 1840 he moved his residence to the West Side, built a fine house between Randolph, Washington, Carpenter and Morgan streets, in the center of the block now occupied by the massive buildings of the New York Biscuit company's bakery. It was long the most prominent house on the West Side. Mr. Carpenter was a pronounced Abolitionist, and his house was the retreat for absconding Negroes on their way from Southern slavery to Canada and freedom. The number of those who escaped through his kindly offices was about 200, and not one of them, it is reported, was ever recaptured or returned.

In 1865, owing to his wife's ill-health, he removed to Aurora, Ill.; but she only survived the the change for six months, leaving him to travel through life alone for twenty years longer. Returning to the city, he resided here until his death, August 7, 1886.

In the words of one who knew him, he was "a pioneer of the best things"—prayer meetings, a Sunday-school, the First Presbyterian church, the first temperance society; circulated the first temperance pledge, and delivered the first temperance address. He was also one of the first officers of the Chicago Bible Society, in 1835. He took, also, great interest in the early educational affairs of the village and city, and was for ten years a member of the Board of Education, and endowed the Carpenter school with $1,000 with which to purchase text-books for indigent children.

The First Congregational church of Chicago (now Dr. Goodwin's) was founded in West Chicago, May 22, 1851, and the names of Philo and Ann Carpenter stand first and second on its roll of members. To the various enterprises of this church, from time to time, he was a liberal giver.

Later he aided in establishing the Congregational Herald, in company with Chas. G. Hammond and others; and in 1855 he was one of the incorporators of the Chicago (Congl.) Theological Seminary, of which he was for many years a director and chairman of its executive committee.

His connection with our reform began subsequent to the foregoing events of his useful life, but he entered upon his opposition to secret societies with great and undying zeal. In early life, before he came west, his indignation had been aroused by the abduction of Morgan in New York by the Freemasons for exposing their secret rituals. The foulness of the crime and its attending circumstances, and the general evil character of secret oath-bound organizations, led him to suggest the establishment of a paper to oppose these injurious societies. In this enterprise he donated money for the publication of the first number of the Christian Cynosure, and provided headquarters for its publication and distribution at a cost of $20,000. This is the present headquarters of the N. C. A. He also bought, for gratuitous circulation 1,000 copies of Finney's book on Masonry, and wrote and distributed tracts of his own on the subject; thus to the close of his life he continued the anti-secrecy war, and when he died he provided for its continuance after his body should return to dust.

The memory of the just is blessed.

THE WISE AND THE FOOLS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The human family is divided into five races: The Caucasian, the Mongolian, the Malay, the African and the American. These are divided, according to their nationality and language, into Chinese, Japanese, Turk, Russian, Italian, German, Spaniard, Frenchman, Englishman. These are divided again into the educated and ignorant classes, the rich and the poor, officials and private citizens. But the Bible divides all men into two classes—the righteous and the wicked. To these two classes Solomon referred when he said: "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise, but the companion of fools shall be destroyed."

I. The distinguishing characteristic of the two classes—"wise men" and "fools". The Gospel is called "the wisdom of God," and those who accept of it are made wise unto salvation. They have received the righteousness of Christ, which is imputed to them by faith, and all their sins are pardoned. They have received the Holy Ghost, by whom they are created anew in Christ Jesus. The love of Christ is shed abroad in their hearts. They love him because he first loved them. The law of God is written upon their minds. They delight in the law of God after the inward man. They delight to do his will. They do all things for his glory. They have that wisdom which is from above, which enables them to choose the best means for the best ends. They are wise men.

All out of Christ reject God as the end of their lives; they do not and cannot keep his law; they do not wish to retain God in their knowledge; they desire not of his ways. They are fools.

You go through our city hospital. You find some old and some young, some educated and refined; others illiterate and rude; some happy and comfortable; others unsociable and distressed. There will be white and black, male and female, rich and poor. But all are alike in this: they are sick. Go to any prison, and you find criminals old and young, male and female, black and white, educated and ignorant, beautiful and refined and attractive, and vicious, abandoned and repulsive; red-handed murderers, petty thieves, gamblers, adulterers, blasphemers and Sabbath-breakers. Some are lazy and indolent; others are active and energetic; some are vicious; others are kind and tender; some are dangerous; others are harmless. But all belong to the class known as law-breakers. Go through the "secret empire," and you find some guilty-edged, others only gilt-edged; some endanger life and property, while others have no disposition to invade the rights of any man. You find the Jesuits, a society of foreigners, disloyal to our country and plotting to rob us of our civil and religious liberty; the Mafia, an oath-bound gang of ruffians and brigands, who do not hesitate to shed innocent blood; the Highbinders, an order of assassins which strikes down the unsuspecting; the Endowment House, which commits murder in the name of the Lord; the Clan-na-Gael, which uses murder as a weapon, and Masonry, which has murdered men in the dark. These are very different from the Orangemen, the Knights of Labor, Sons of Temperance, and the G. A. R. But all are alike in the element of secrecy, and that is the badge of Satan's kingdom.

During the war there lived in the rebellious States, rich and poor, drunkards and temperate people, educated and ignorant, strong and weak, those socially high, and the low, the bright and the dull, the pure and the filthy. But all were alike rebels.

So in the world you find those physically and mentally strong, and also the weak; the moral and immoral, the active and prosperous, and the indolent and dependent; those whose lives are beautiful and pure and good, and those whose lives are repulsive, vile and wicked. But all are alike in this—they do not love God; they do not believe on Christ; they have not the Holy Spirit; they dislike God's law, God's house, God's people; they are fools.

You go through the camp of an army. You find soldiers of great and small stature, old and young, of high rank and low, cavalry, infantry and artillery, quick and slow, intelligent and thoughtless. But all are alike in wearing the uniform, in the oath of allegiance taken, and in their readiness to obey orders and endure hardships. So in the church—the Lord's army—you find old and young converts, male and female; some with a gift of organizing, others with a gift of planning, others with an executive talent. But all true believers are alike in having on the whole armor of God, in having consecrated themselves to Christ's service, in being led by the Spirit of Christ, and in being ready to endure hardness as good soldiers of the cross of Christ. They are wise men. Hence the Saviour said that those who hear and do his sayings are like the wise man who built his house upon the rock. And those who do not are like the foolish man who built his house upon the sand. The five virgins who trimmed their lamps and put oil in their vessels were wise. The five who took no oil in their vessels were foolish. The only wise people in the world are found in Christ, with Christ, like Christ. All the rest are fools.

II. The way we become likened to and identified with either class by companionship. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise, but the companion of fools shall be destroyed." "Birds of a feather flock together," is the old adage. "A man is known by the company he keeps." A man who consorts with gamblers will become one himself, by the law of association. A man who joins the lodge and follows it up will become like them. A man who frequents the saloon will soon become like those who belong there. Hence David said, in the First Psalm:

"That man hath perfect blessedness
Who walketh not astray
In counsel of ungodly men,
Nor stands in sinners' way,
Nor sitteth in the scorner's chair."

That indicates the gradual decline. First he walks with the wicked; then he standeth; then he sitteth. At first he keeps company with the moral and virtuous, only they have no religion. Then he goes to the lodge and to the saloon and to the gambling den, with the drunkard, libertine and profane swearer. And at last he joins those who scorn religion and the God of truth.

"Vice is a monster of such frightful mien
That to be hated needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

On the other hand, the man who reads only the best authors and keeps company with his superiors, the intellectual, cultured and refined, will be elevated. The man who keeps company with God's people will through them receive the spirit and become like them. Hence we are to separate from the lodge, the saloon, the gambling den, and join the church, the Bible society and the National Christian Association, and in them find our sphere of action, our companionship and life in Christ.

III. The effects. The end of the gambler, the drunkard, the libertine, the profane swearer, the Sabbath-breaker, and the murderer, unless converted, is distress in body and mind here, and hereafter eternal destruction from the presence of the Lord. "They shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." On the other hand the wise inherit eternal life. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament forever and ever."

Boston, July 15, 1893.

FOUNDATION PRINCIPLES.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

In considering the relation of civic government to religion, much confusion arises from attempts to contrast laws civil with laws religious; whereas the real distinction is between laws civil and ecclesiastical. Civil law is that which the state must enforce in securing the rights of citizens. Ecclesiastical law pertains to the doctrine, worship, government and discipline of the church. The Bible nowhere sanctions the enforcement of church law by civil penalties.

We would oppose any attempt to compel people by state law to build churches or support any ecclesiastical system.

We protest against the union of church and state; but we are in dangerous error if we attempt to separate civil law from morals or religion.

ion. Every civil law that is right and just must be moral, and every moral law must have God at one end and man at the other. Each of the Ten Commandments is a civil law. Each belongs to the state as well as the church. Government cannot ignore any one of them without trampling upon the rights of some citizen.

The law which punishes theft or murder is not only a civil law, but also moral and religious. Religion, in its true sense, is that which binds or relates us to God.

We believe it is anarchy for civil government, or any system, to recognize any other supreme standard of law than Christ and his moral system. Men may plead the eternal fitness of things, or the greatest good to the greatest number, or that honesty is the best policy, but the last analysis proves that the foundation of all morality is not expediency merely, but in the eternal commandments of Christ. His law must be recognized, or there is nothing to determine right from wrong. No Christ, and there is no authority for virtue—no standard for virtue—no definition of virtue—no virtue. Virtue must even be under the dominion of law, and that law must be the Decalogue. For that it is the one perfect law is not only the testimony of God's Word, but of all human experience, and of the ablest jurors of all the centuries.

Bloomington, Ind.

EX-PRES. J. BLANCHARD.

HIS TESTIMONY AGAINST MASONRY.

There have been civil and ecclesiastical pests ever since there was a government and religion; and Freemasonry is one of those pests. The Cains of humanity have rejected Christ and worshiped nature, and Nimrods have denied justice and practiced oppression. But both are combined in the lodge.

That the very body and constitution of Freemasonry defies and sets at naught all law and authority but its own is as clear as language and as certain as Masonic authority can make it. If it be said that sects and sectaries favor their own members against law and justice, that is a good reason why such sects should be reformed, and a strong additional reason why that sect should be destroyed whose constitution protects crime, perverts the law of God for its own sinister use, and makes treason to all lawful authority justifiable by loyalty to itself. Thus we see that the lodge, in common with all false religions on earth, denies, neutralizes, sets aside the law of God; nay, seizes it for its own use and converts it into lodge law. Omitting Christ, it omits God, who is only revealed in him, and thus sets aside the only legitimate foundation of civil government. And if, in the words of Hooker, "The seat of law is the bosom of God, and her voice the harmony of the world," we have in this hateful order the antagonist of all law, and the extinction of all harmony; for harmony is as impossible in the lodge as in that dark world where the only restraint is what wicked passions impose on each other; and which can only be kept together by surrounding it with an impassable gulf.—Ex-Pres. J. Blanchard's Analysis of the Master Mason's degree, in Doesburg's Exposition, pp. 349-350.

WAS WASHINGTON A SECEDING MASON?

That the tenor of his farewell address is decidedly in condemnation of secret societies is undeniable, whether he referred to Freemasonry or not. The following, from "Giddin's Almanac of 1831," copied from the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, contains important evidence. Edward Livingston was the General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States and the great Masonic champion of his day, and Andrew Jackson was also a high Mason. In view of Washington's non-affiliation and his farewell address there can be little doubt that General Jackson and Edward Livingston considered Washington a seceder. The following is the article referred to:

Who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington?—When General Washington retired to private life, Congress passed resolutions giving thanks to this great man. Only three men were found in Congress at that day, that voted against these resolutions. One of these three is now dead, and we do not wish to disturb his ashes. The grave should cover the foibles of all men. But there are two men now alive, whose names are on the journals of Congress, denying the poor pittance of a vote of thanks to Gen. Washington. We ask who these two men are?

We have asked this question without expecting an answer from those to whom it is addressed. But there is no reason why our readers should not be gratified with the fact. Let the journals of Congress reply—"They are Andrew Jackson and Edward Livingston!"—Penn. Intelligencer.

WAS WASHINGTON A PERJURED VILLAIN?

Washington and Seceding Masons.—The editor of the National Observer lately delivered a course of Anti-masonic lectures at Catskill and Hudson, N. Y. One of these lectures was on the oaths of Masonry, showing that these oaths are null and void from the beginning, and unlawful; and that the eternal salvation of those who have taken them depends upon their repenting of and renouncing them. These points he established to the satisfaction of large assemblies of citizens, and of professing Christians, who heard the lecture.

We give a short extract from this lecture, for the satisfaction of seceding Masons who are styled "perjured villains" by their opponents; and it must console them to discover that if they are perjured, George Washington was ten-fold more perjured than they are, since his oath, which follows, and which he violated, was a lawful and constitutional one, lawfully ordained or prescribed, lawfully administered, and lawfully taken or received by him.

THE EXTRACT.

Let us look, for a moment, at the oath of allegiance, as taken by George Washington:

"I, George Washington, do take Almighty God to witness that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to our most Sovereign Lord, King George the Third, and him will defend to the utmost of my power, against all conspiracies and attempts whatever, that shall be made against his person, crown and dignity; and I do faithfully promise to maintain, support and defend to the utmost of my power, the succession of the throne, in his Majesty's family, against any person, or persons, whatsoever; thereby utterly abjuring any allegiance or obedience to the person taking upon himself the style and title of Prince of Wales, in the lifetime of his father, and who, since his death, is said to have assumed the style and title of King of Great Britain and Ireland, by the name of Charles the Third, and to any other person claiming or pretending a right to the crown of these realms. And I do swear that I do reject and detest as un-Christian and impious, to believe, that it is lawful to murder or destroy any person or persons whatsoever, for or under pretense of their being heretics, and also that un-Christian and impious principle that no faith is to be kept with heretics. I further declare that it is no article of my faith; and that I do renounce, reject and abjure the opinion that Princes excommunicated by the Pope and Council, or by any authority of the See of Rome, or by any authority whatsoever, may be deposed or murdered by their subjects, or by any person whatsoever; and I do promise, that I will not hold, maintain or abet any such opinion, or any other opinion, contrary to what is expressed in this declaration. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, and of his only Son, Jesus Christ our Redeemer, profess, testify and declare that I do make this declaration, and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words of this oath, without any evasion, equivocation, or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted by the Pope, or any authority from the See of Rome, or any persons whatsoever; and without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration, or any part thereof, although the Pope, or any other person or persons, or any authority whatsoever, shall dispense with or annul the same, or declare that it was null and void from the beginning."

Now, then, let me see the American in this assemblage who will rise up and declare George Washington a perjured villain for drawing his sword against the monarch, whose person, crown and dignity he had so solemnly, in the name of the ever-living God, sworn to defend!

He swore to maintain the person, crown and dignity of George the Third, and yet he did not hesitate when George the Third lent his name, his person, his crown and dignity to the vile purposes of tyranny and oppression, as Freemasonry did, when she decreed the murder of Morgan, to buckle on his armor, and go forth to the field of battle, for the prostration of that tyrant, his crown and his dignity!

He swore to defend, to the utmost of his power, the succession of the throne in the family of George the Third; and yet he did not hesitate to exert himself to the utmost of his power to destroy that succession, to cut it off, both root and branch!

He swore that it was no article of his faith, that princes like George the Third could be deposed or murdered by their subjects, or by the authority of the Pope, or by any authority whatsoever; and yet he drew his sword by the authority of the American Congress of '76, to depose George the Third, so far as power extended to these States, then the province of George the Third—and had he come in contact with that monarch on the field of battle, would have killed him or seen him killed, with the same feelings that he killed, or saw killed, or instigated and exhorted, by all the powers of his mind and body, his fellow-soldiers to kill any or all, if necessary, of those who were sent hither by George the Third, to subjugate our fathers.

He swore, too, that he took the whole of his oath, which I have just recited, without thinking that he could be absolved from it by any authority whatever; and yet he absolved himself from it, and violated every clause of it; and where, I repeat it, is the American in this assemblage, or elsewhere, that will dare to brand him, on this account, as a traitor and a villain? Where is the man, or rather the miscreant, who will have the hardihood to bestow upon the name of the father of his country, the immortal George Washington, the foul epithets of "perjured apostate,"—"abandoned outcast,"—"detestable wretch," as we are styled who have, I fear not to say, as virtuously and as justly violated, and renounced forever, in the sight of God and man, our unlawful, vicious, all-corrupting and blasphemous obligations?—Giddin's Almanac for 1832.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

There are a great many secret societies which have strange names; and some whose names are unknown to outsiders, but whose members use certain letters as symbols or initials to express their character.

About these societies we know but very little. The men who join some of them are sworn not to tell their secrets, and we have never felt it duty to take such oaths, for our Master said, "Swear not at all." Besides, if we found out anything good we should want to tell of it; and if it was bad we should perhaps think it duty to confess it; and so we prefer to make no promises and tell no lies.

It is very true that many good men belong to such societies, and people say if the societies were bad, such good men would not join them; but it is just as true that many bad men also belong to them, and if the societies were very good these bad men might not like them so well. But really, neither of these arguments prove much, because none of the men knew anything about the societies before they joined them, and all of them are sworn not to tell what they have found out since. So if the men are ever so good, or ever so bad, they are bound not to expose the good or the evil they may see, or in any way reveal the secrets of the orders to which they belong.

I never like to open my mouth and shut my eyes at the same time. When my mouth is open I keep my eyes open, too; when my eyes are shut I think it is time to shut my mouth also. Rats and mice sometimes get into places they do not know much about, and often never get out again alive. I prefer not to go into a place till I know what I go in for, and how and when I can get out again. And I do not make promises to people till I know what they are. So I do not join such secret societies, and I do not advise other people to join them.—Gathered Gems.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A disappointed "four hundred".—Avenues for summer outings.—A new science.—The duplicating of town names.—The Sunday question.

The woman who knows what it is to get everything in readiness for an expected guest that fails to arrive, especially if the guest is one whose social standing necessitates an extra amount of painstaking preparation to make him or her satisfied and comfortable, can but feel a sad sympathy with Newport's unfortunate "four hundred," who having, metaphorically speaking, brought out their best china, and assumed their very smartest "bib and tucker" in anticipation of the coming of Grand Duke Alexis, have been disappointed at the last moment. Probably the Czar never knew when he sent orders for the immediate return of the Russian ships what pangs of dismay it would send to so many fair bosoms, or he might have been more considerate. But to the Autocrat of all the Russias the dividing lines of social rank in a republic like ours must be very nearly invisible, so that even if he had known what trouble he was making fashionable Newport, he would have been as indifferent to it as if they were so many of his Jewish subjects whom he was sending into exile by his imperial fiat at a moment's notice. It will be remembered that two years ago this same "four hundred" were all agog with excitement, expecting Prince George of England, and he also failed to materialize. These foreign royalties do not seem over anxious for the ordeal of toadying and snobbery through which they are sure to pass as soon as they land on our shores; and who can blame them?

Meanwhile, people who never expect nor desire to entertain grand dukes or princes may congratulate themselves on their immunity from all such anxieties. Every summer the ways grow more numerous in which one can enjoy a modest outing. It may be only a ride on the electric cars, but that is not a source of enjoyment to be despised, and anyone who has tried it on our lovely suburban roads, keeping his eyes open to every object of beauty and interest, may see as much to reward him—nay, more—than the foreign tourist who simply does Europe, guide-book fashion, and whose recollections of what he has seen are as jumbled-up and heterogeneous as the souvenirs of famous places which he brings home in his trunk. We have had writers to give us their impressions of life as they saw it from all sorts of conveyances—mule-carts, canal-boats, steam-cars; why not the electrics? Here is a field altogether unoccupied, just waiting for a second Thoreau to show people the treasures of beauty that are lying at their very door. For those with longer purses and a desire to get away from "the madding crowd," summer resorts are opening up in "the land of Evangeline," overhung by memories of Longfellow's magic poem as by a golden mist; where the old Acadian simplicity still reigns, and the waves roll in softly on summer nights, and tell no tale of storm and wreck, or the breaking hearts that watched some little fishing smack sail away on those northern waters that never again came back.

Then for those philosophically inclined there are the summer schools nearer home, whose rapid rise and marvellous growth are among the wonders of the century. I am glad to see that Chautauqua has organized a Society of Christian Sociology, with Dr. Richard T. Ely for president, the object of the society being to apply the teachings of Christianity to economic problems. Political science has been rightly named "the dismal science," for this reason: that the sunshine of Christian law has been so rigidly excluded from all treatises dealing with this subject. Another move in the same line is the chair of "Social Science and Humanity" which Pres. Angell, of the Mass. S. P. D. A., is trying to have established in one of our leading universities.

Rhode Island, by the way, has a law now prohibiting fox-hunts; so the Anglo-maniacs of Newport must amuse themselves in some other way not quite so "English". The idea of stout men—and, what is worse, women—turning out with dogs and horses to hunt a poor little trembling fox to its death! I would like to have the sport reversed just for once, and let them see how they would feel with a grizzly bear or Bengal tiger after them; provided, of course, for I don't believe in the society with the long name excluding even two-legged animals from the sphere of its kindly vigilance, they could be rescued just in time not to come to any material harm beyond the fright.

Jay Gould's family are going to build a memorial church in Roxbury, costing a quarter of a million of dollars, and with this inscription on the corner-stone, which cannot but strike a devout mind as well-nigh blasphemous: "To the glory of God and in memory of Jay Gould." N. B.: This is not Roxbury, Mass., but Roxbury, New York. The duplicating of names by towns and cities in different States often leads to inconvenient results, especially with careless mail clerks. Our forefathers gave to the early New England settlements the loved and familiar names of places where they were born in fair English counties beyond the sea. And in like manner their descendants, going westward, have done the same thing, not realizing what their indulgence in a very natural sentiment might cost the stranger who makes such a mistake as did a friend of mine, for instance, who was carried to Worcester, Mass., instead of Worcester, New York, through the neglect of the railroad officials to give him correct information. As he was a professional man, and every moment of his time was precious, his disgust was only equalled by his surprise when the spires of "the second city in New England" rose on his vision, and he realized that he had been actually carried a hundred miles from his destination. To name a humble village hamlet after a big city is like the mistake of naming an unfortunate infant after some noted man. The probability is that both will have to bear the burden of their names without any corresponding greatness to support it. Mediocrity has its rights—one of which is not to be made ridiculous by a name too big for it.

It is amusing to see how the papers which were so earnest for Sunday opening have backed down from their position since they discovered that "the dear people," whose interests they have so much at heart, do not care after all to visit the World's Fair on Sunday. Their abuse of Wilbur F. Crafts and other defenders of the Sabbath has availed them little. Very successful Gospel meetings have been held for some time past at Grove Hall, in this city, for the car-men, under the auspices of the Boston W. C. T. U. Mrs. Daniel Powers, whose name is so well known to Cynosure readers, writes to the Traveller that "from the first a thoughtful interest was manifested and some were deeply convicted". She also adds this little incident, which I commend to the attention of "all whom it may concern": "A Boston clergyman, who was a Lord's-day patron of the road, after having preached to these men, heard one of them say: 'It is a fine thing for you to come and preach to us, and then have us drive you to church.' It was an accepted rebuke, and, said that gentleman, 'I have never since stepped on a car on the Sabbath.'"

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

—The resignation of Chief of Police McClaughrey, of this city, was caused by his refusal to aid Mayor Harrison in the promotion of professional gambling. It is a misfortune; but the Major "steps down and out" without a blot on his official escutcheon, or a stain upon his fair personal fame.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 26, 1893.

Church statistics are often surprising, even to the members of the church to which they relate, and, owing to the decadence of narrow bigotry among Christians, they are always interesting to all who rejoice at the steady and healthy growth of Christianity. In a sermon preached last Sunday, Rev. Dr. Domer presented some figures concerning the Lutheran church which will doubtless be as new to most people elsewhere as they were to a large majority of Washingtonians. He started with the statement that the growth of the Lutheran church in the United States during the last decade had been at the rate of 67 per cent, and that the number of Lutherans in the world equalled all of the other Protestant denominations combined. In Europe that church has 23,586 pastors, 30,051 churches, and 44,165,000 members; in Asia, 290 pastors, 351 churches and 113,000 members; in Africa, 414 pastors, 549 churches, and 122,976 members; in America, 5,096 pastors, 8,408 churches, and 7,107,800 members, and in Oceania, 141 pastors, 322 churches, and 103,700 members. The Lutheran church naturally has its largest membership among the Germans, 32,000,000 of its members speaking that language; but it also has a large membership among those who speak other languages. For instance, 5,300,000 Swedish, 2,500,000 Norwegian, 2,300,000 Danish, 2,048,000 Finnish, 1,250,000 English, 1,113,000 Hungarian, 624,000 Livonian, 480,000 Courlanish, 272,000 Estonian, 70,000 French, 70,000 Icelandic, and 48,000 Bohemian. The doctor had a word for the American beer-drinkers that ought to reach them all. He said: "I wish to brush away a misunderstanding in the minds of some people in this country who think that the German Lutherans are a beer-drinking and besotted class of people. That is a mistake. The Americans drink a great deal more beer than the Germans, and statistics will show it."

The prospect for any distinctly moral reform legislation by the Fifty-third Congress, soon to assemble in extra session, cannot be considered especially bright, as the average member of Congress needs a very little excuse for not doing what he has no desire to do; and from present indications financial and tariff legislation will dwarf everything else and will furnish a ready-made excuse for the neglect of bills intended to aid in the march of moral reform.

The absence of new laws might be excused, if those already upon our statute books were rigidly enforced, which they certainly are not in Washington. There is a law in force here prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors, yet it is a common thing for children to be found upon our streets in a state of intoxication, and no arrests are made. Children have recently been under treatment in our hospitals for alcoholism, and a messenger boy under thirteen was picked up on Pennsylvania avenue helplessly intoxicated. These things make it plain that the law against the sale of intoxicants to minors is being constantly violated; but, notwithstanding extraordinary efforts on the part of the local temperance people, no arrests have been made for such violations.

A national quarantine has been, by direction of President Cleveland, established at Brunswick, Georgia, Surgeon General Wyman, of the Marine Hospital Service, having reported the failure of the local authorities at that place to enforce the quarantine regulations against a yellow fever infested vessel. This action was taken under the National Quarantine act of February 15, 1893, and is generally approved here. It seems that Georgia has no State board of health.

Everything is unusually quiet in government circles just now. Secretary Carlisle is the only member of the Cabinet on duty. Treasury officials speak very hopefully of the financial outlook, and say that a large percentage of the national banks which have recently suspended will, in a short time, resume business, and that they have information from all sections of the country which leads them to believe that public confidence is being gradually restored.

The War Department has about come to the conclusion that Indians do not make good soldiers; and while those already in the service—about 700 in all—will probably be allowed to serve out their terms of enlistment, it is not probable that any further efforts will be made to enlist Indians in the army, at least not under present conditions. There is some talk of organizing an Indian auxiliary branch of the army, modeled on the British system in India. The present trouble, according to army officers, is that the rules of discipline in the army are entirely unsuited to the nature and habits of the Indians. *

REFORM NEWS.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Of all others, the World's Fair is the place to study human nature. The cultured and the ignorant, the clean and the unwashed, the pious and the profane, the rich and the poor, meet together, and with a freedom begotten of absence from ordinary conventionalities, and stimulated by on-rushing throngs, what is inside comes to the surface. At no place, presumably, on the Fair grounds is this more noticeable than at the N. C. A. booth. Certainly in no nook or corner of the thirty and one-half acres covered by the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building is there to be met a greater variety of expressions or deeper interest than where prophecy is fulfilled by the proclamation of the things done of them in secret upon the housetop. Expressions of surprise, accompanied with wonder at the insolence or hardness of a society daring thus to trench upon the sacred precincts of the initiated, are quite common among craftsmen. Others, who are friendly, entertain fears for the personal safety of those who dare invade the secret conclaves and then publicly proclaim what they swore ever to conceal and never reveal. I have been courteously treated by very many members of different orders, but not by all. The "young bloods" are especially free in the use of such epithets as "liar," "villain," "perjurer," "fool," "fanatic," "crank," etc., and one young Royal Arch went so far as to express a willingness to assist in suppressing such an exhibit by force.

Among the first who called was a gentleman, with his son, from England. He asked as to the origin, objects and plans of the N. C. A., and the influence of secret lodges in America on our civil and religious institutions; selected samples of our tracts, took a Cynosure, and moved quietly on. I was curious to know whether he took a like interest in other exhibits near, and noted his movements for a little time. He paused to read the signs of exhibits along the aisle for some distance, but made no stops for investigation, so far as I could see.

An amusing incident of the day was an encounter between two Pythian brothers. A member of the order became quite energetic in denunciation of your agent, and because I insisted that acceptable worship must recognize Christ as the one and only mediator between God and man, he called me a fanatic, a fool, a narrow-minded bigot, etc., and denied positively that the use of Christ's name was prohibited. A gentleman standing in the company of listeners, said: "That is going too far, when you denounce this man and call him a narrow-minded bigot for telling the truth. I am a Pythian, and I don't propose to expose the secrets; but what this man says about the rejection of Christ is correct. I was selected as chaplain in our lodge, and because I insisted on using only Christian prayers, it created so much disturbance that I resigned my office. Now, sir, when you call a man a narrow-minded bigot for honoring Christ, you are yourself the most narrow-minded bigot imaginable," etc. The discussion waxed warm, and, with the other poor "cowans", I had only to listen, and heard how brothers Pythias and Damon love one another.

The 25th and 26th insts. brought many friends with words of cheer to the N. C. A. booth; among them, Rev. Mr. Myers, of Columbus, O., and Dr. Hanna, of Monmouth, Ill., who paused to give greetings and a hearty God-speed to the work.

Strict fidelity requires me to report the presence of many candid members of secret orders, and some who are not sweet or chaste in their words. While explaining the system of Masonry to some young men, by means of my charts, I noted a middle-aged gentleman who gave close attention. Addressing him personally, I said: "You have some knowledge of this system, I presume?" to which he replied affirmatively. "If I mistake not, you have taken thirty-eight degrees in Masonry," indicating his standing on the chart. He assented. I said to those who were listening: "This man is one of the rulers in the secret empire. He is in a position to make it pay. You gentlemen who are in the lower degrees have simply two things to do—obey orders and pay the bills. This gentleman and his associates give the orders, and make the assessments, and ride in easy carriages at the head of your public processions, while you trudge along on foot."

Quite a spirited discussion followed, in which the Christless worship of the lodge was referred to, when the 38-degree brother said: "Masonry made me a Christian. I was an infidel when I joined the lodge, and found Christ and learned to love and honor him in my initiations." This brought a second brother to the front, who said: "Here, here! give me your hand! That was precisely my experience."

Thus reinforced, the two made a vigorous assault, which I met as best I could, and then made some inquiry about their Christian experience. I found that both were Unitarian Christians (!) and both declared that the lodge was in every way far superior to the church. This brought a third brother into the ring, who spoke for Christ and his bride. Things were becoming decidedly interesting, and No. 1 and No. 2 withdrew, muttering all sorts of imprecations, while No. 3 remained to say: "My friend, you are right. I have been there, and know that the whole thing is of the devil. Good men are deceived and betrayed, but they don't stay in the lodge when they learn what it is. Those men are the kind of Christians (!) who are at home in the lodge."

A young man from Pennsylvania wore the K. T. badge. I said: "Did you enjoy the 'fifth liberation' from the skull of a dead man?" "It's a miserable swindle, from beginning to end," was his prompt reply. "I was down in the city last night, and a Sir Knight, so drunk that he couldn't walk straight, appealed to me for money to hire a bed, and reminded me of my obligation to a brother Knight. He wanted it to buy whisky, I have no doubt. The whole business of these secret orders is a swindle, and I wish I had never seen the inside of one of them."

On Thursday afternoon Brothers J. P. Richards and J. M. Hitchcock, N. C. A. directors, were among the friendly callers, and each remained for a time and took a hand in the conflict. I was much helped by their presence, and hope they will find time to give their impressions of the work to their readers. Your representative is not above criticism, and I trust not too willful or egotistical to profit by advice or suggestions from his brethren.

Friday's engagements were frequent, and at times quite spirited. My first opponent was a business man of extensive travel, and well-advanced in years and in the secret orders. His religious creed was briefly told: "Death ends all." He recently buried a son, an only child; and as he told the story of his bereavement the father's love got the better of his atheistic creed, and his eyes moistened with the tears of affection. I tried to show him that his boy was not, like his coach-dog, a mere brute to rot in the earth; but he insisted that he had no proof that the lifeless body of his son, who died suddenly while sitting in his chair, was in any respect different from the body of his dog, or that there was any hope of his meeting and knowing the one any more than the other beyond the grave. It was sad indeed to listen to his skepticism as he denied God, and his Son, and immortality, in tremulous accents. He had not always been without hope, but his pilgrimage over the "rough and rugged road" of Baal-worship had quenched the last spark of light in his soul. A disbeliever in a future state, a rejecter of the Scriptures, and a scoffer at religion, a defamer of the church and a blasphemer of his Maker, he was going to his grave and to the judgment with the record of over thirty degrees of Masonic diabolism charged to his account. When I directed his attention to the likeness of Chas. G. Finney and his testimony, he replied: "I have heard him preach, and knew him well; and a bigger hypocrite and scoundrel never lived," etc. I replied that my personal acquaintance with Mr. Finney had given me a very different opinion of the man, but he insisted that Mr. Finney was a perjured villain, a liar, etc.

Omitting a number, I will mention the case of a young man from Michigan, who "squared himself for a fight" and threw down the gauntlet by affirming that "nine-tenths of the ministers belong to the secret orders". Like most of his kind, he soon began to berate church members and extol the lodge, and became intensely bitter in denunciation of the church and the ministry. It seemed time to call a halt on that line, and so I reminded him of his former statement that "nine-tenths of the ministers belonged to the lodge" and "now you say they are hypocrites, which is equivalent to saying that the men whom you bring forward as exponents of the lodge are hypocrites; and if your best men, as you say, are hypocrites, what about the second and third best? Are they hypocrites, or something worse?" He seemed puzzled, and a "brother," standing by, came to his relief by saying to me: "You're too sharp; this is your business, and it's no use arguing with you;" and, taking the arm of his brother they made a hasty retreat.

These are dark spots, but there is a brighter side to this work. Scores express surprise and gratitude that something is being done to counteract the lodge influence, and gladly receive tracts and whatever light and information I have to give. If the friends interested could only spend a few hours at the booth and see for themselves the importance and opportunity providentially given for reaching all lands, I am confident that each would try to spare something towards meeting the expense inevitable in supplying the necessary literature.

I will add one other case. An alumnus of Delaware College, and a minister, called with his intelligent Christian wife. Both had been deceived and led into the secret snare, and both were heartily sick of the whole business. They remained half an hour to speak and hear the truth, promising to call again before leaving for their Ohio home. They were familiar with the facts in the late disgraceful affair at Delaware College, and said that the college secret fraternities were at the bottom of it all.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"GRAND MASTER WASHINGTON."

CHICAGO, July 24, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Worshipful Masters and other Masonic zealots, who observe the bust of Washington, with those of Grant, Adams and Webster, and the quotation of Washington in condemnation of secret "combinations," often wax fierce in their denunciation of the Association for robbing them of the glory and prestige derived from the fame of Grand Master Washington.

One of these "Worshipfuls", after reading the quotation from Washington's Farewell Address which hangs on the wall of our exhibit, declared with emphasis that the quotation had nothing to do with Masonry, but in express terms referred to secret political associations.

To the question whether he claimed Freemasons were better fitted mentally and morally to hold office than non-Masons, seeing what was coming, he impudently declared that he thought they were two to one more intelligent and competent on an average than non-Masons. Possibly one or two listeners agreed with him, but the majority evidently did not, and the rejoinder that statistics prove that of the voters in the United States four-fifths are non-Masons, while Freemasons held fully three-fourths of the offices, or fifteen times their proportion, satisfied the crowd that Masonry is a secret political combination, and the Worshipful was glad to take a new tack, by asserting that Washington was not only a Mason but Master of a lodge, which was promptly denied. He then asserted that he knew he was, and could bring the testimony of 100,000 other Freemasons that Washington was Master of a lodge. The challenge to produce even one Mason that knew any such thing, since he could not have been living in Washington's time, was not accepted, while Washington's own words in his letter to Rev. G. W. Snyder, of Fredericktown, Md., written less than fourteen months before his death, proved conclusive. Freemasons were ever then claiming him as "Grand Master Washington," and even his intimate friend, Rev. G. W. Snyder, believed the report and sent him "Robison's proofs of a conspiracy" and expressed the hope that he might prevent the spread of Illumism and Jacobinism among the lodges over which he presided. The following is Washington's reply:

"MOUNT VERNON, 25th September, 1798.

"The Rev. Mr. Snyder,

"Sir:—Many apologies are due to you for my not acknowledging the receipt of your obliging favor of the 22d ult. and for not thanking you, at an earlier period, for the book you had the goodness to send me.

"I have heard much of the nefarious and dangerous plot and doctrines of the Illuminati, but never saw the book until you were pleased to send it to me. The same causes which have prevented my acknowledging the receipt of your letter, have prevented my reading the book hitherto; namely, the multiplicity of matters which pressed upon me before, and the debilitated state in which I was left, after a severe fever had been removed, and which allows me to add little more now than thanks for your kind wishes and favorable sentiments, except to correct an error you have run into, of my presiding over the English lodges in this country. The fact is, I preside over none, nor have I been in one more than once or twice within the last thirty years. I believe, notwithstanding, that none of the lodges in this country are contaminated with the principles ascribed to the society of the Illuminati.

"With respect, I am, Sir, your ob't humble servant,
"GEO. WASHINGTON."

As Jared Sparks, the custodian of Washington's books, papers and letter-copying book, certifies to the absolute accuracy and authenticity of this letter, Freemasons may as well destroy their beautiful pictures of Grand Master Washington in full regalia.

But their institution was founded in, and has always been sustained by, fraud and deception. Grand Master Solomon, Grand Master Hiram Abiff and Grand Master Washington are lodge inventions, and, as Dr. Aydelot said, "Masonry is a lie all over."

Even as early as 1781 Freemasons knew officially that Washington not only was not a Masonic officer, but would not like to be addressed as a Masonic brother, and it is certainly a most remarkable providence of Almighty God that this remark could not be concealed.

I quote from Gov. Joseph Ritner's official communication to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, presented March 8, 1837, at the special request of that body:

"An action of trover was brought by the officers of St. John's Lodge, the successor of King David's Lodge, to recover those records from Dr. Benjamin Case, who claimed to be Master of the lodge, in the progress of which they were proved to be the original records, and Dr. Case was ordered to restore them to St. John's Lodge, or pay $300 damages. The money was paid, and the records retained for the good of the country. This is the extract:

"Regular lodge night, held at the house of Mr. James Tew, Wednesday evening, the 7th February, 1781-5781."

"A motion was made, that as our worthy brother, His Excellency, General Washington, was daily expected amongst us, a committee should be appointed to prepare an address, on behalf of the lodge, to present to him. Voted that the Right Worshipful Master, together with Brothers Selxas, Peleg Clark, John Handy, and Robert Elliott, be a committee for that purpose, and that they present the same to this lodge, at their next meeting, for their approbation.

"At a lodge, held by request of the Right Worshipful Master, February 14th, 1781-5781."

"The committee appointed to draft an address to our worthy Brother, His Excellency General Washington, report, that on inquiry they find General Washington not to be Grand Master of North America, as was supposed, nor even Master of any particular lodge. They are therefore of opinion, that this lodge would not choose to address him as a private brother,—at the same time, think it would be agreeable to our worthy brother to be addressed as SUCH."

"Voted that the report of the committee be received, and that the address be entirely laid aside for the present."

Surely this ought to satisfy any candid man that the father of his country despised lodge togery instead of parading in it. EZRA A. COOK.

OBITUARY.

APOLLOS AUSTIN

died at his home in Clayton, Wis., July 7, 1893.

He was born in Highgate, Vt., January 9, 1810, and came to Clayton in May, 1850, buying a farm and building a house upon it, in which he ever afterward resided, and in which he died.

Nine years ago last January his loving wife went home to heaven, to await the coming of those whom she left behind; and ever afterward her husband was a lonely man, waiting for the time to come when he might join her there.

A few days before he died he said that he had no fear of after death, for God had, for Christ's sake, accepted him long ago; but he dreaded the pain and sickness.

On the verge of eternity he selected the preacher of his funeral sermon and the hymn which he wished to have sung at his grave.

He leaves two sons and three daughters. With his son Frank he had made his home; the other is E. N. Austin, of Chicago. The daughters are: Mrs. A. J. Gillett, of St. Paul, Minn.; Mrs. J. E. Hughston, of Clayton, Wis., and Mrs. S. Curtice, of Neenah, Wis. J. E. H.

THE A. P. A. AND ROMANISM.

When Paul commanded the devil to go out of the Philippian damsel (Acts 16: 16-18), it was not because she did not speak the truth, nor because the truth ought not to have been spoken; but when for many days she followed them, saying: "These men are the servants of the most high God, who show us the way of salvation," Paul was grieved, and turned and said: "I command thee, in the name of Jesus, to come out of her." He could not afford to be honored by one who had a devil, and the Gospel preached under such influences would be dishonored rather than exalted. When the devil takes to the advocacy of any cause we may be very sure that he has "an axe to grind," and, if he cannot be silenced, we should, at least, stand aloof from all his efforts. Truth and righteousness never gain anything by such advocacy.

The American Protective Association is a secret society, having, for one of its leading objects, opposition to Romanism. On this ground, mainly, it makes its appeal to all Protestants and patriots. This object, if pursued in a right manner, with right motives, and in a right spirit, is a most important one, and has the sympathy of the most earnest and faithful of all Protestant Christians. The false teachings and mere human traditions that the Romish church inculcates as Christian doctrines are greatly to be deplored, and its arrogant claim to supremacy is to be steadfastly resisted.

But when ungodly men, using un-Christian methods, take advantage of this righteous opposition to popery, and especially when they resort to falsehood and fraud to inflame the public mind, we may be quite sure that the movement is not of God, and that he will not be honored by our participation. Satan cannot cast out Satan, nor will he ever reprove sin, except as a cover for some deeper iniquity. "Giving the devil his due" is both justice and wisdom.

But we know that the Roman church bitterly opposes Protestants, who are only heretics in her sight, hates the Protestant religion with a pious hate, just as she did 500 years ago, and keeps the Inquisition yet in existence for the punishment of heretics. Perhaps for these reasons Protestants need to be careful, discreet—"as wise as serpents, but as harmless as doves," waiting for deliverance from the evils that threaten our religion and government through papal influence, but discarding all the secret, lying methods of the so-called "patriotic orders." It is better to meet Rome and the secret societies squarely face to face with all honorable open methods, without compromise to the world, the flesh or the devil, but trusting in the power and might of the Lord Jesus Christ to vindicate his cause and deliver his people from the hands of his enemies.

RITUALISM IS ROMANISM OR PAGANISM.

Some idea of the growth of the Ritualistic element in the Established Church of England may be gathered from the fact that the "Church Union," which is the representative body of the High Ritualists, has thirty-four thousand seven hundred and sixty-one members, of whom four thousand two hundred are in the priesthood. Twenty-nine bishops of the Church of England belong to the Union. On the day of its last meeting, in a thousand churches in England "the Holy Eucharist was celebrated in behalf of the Union."

Is ritualism in England going to land the kingdom in Rome? The tendency is certainly in that direction, and the wise and cool heads of Britain are discussing the situation with great earnestness as one of peril. For in that country the union of church and state is so formulated that as one goes the other must, unless the combination of the two is violently broken. "I would urge," writes Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, "an avoidance of all tampering with the bastard Romanism which is called Ritualism, or High-Churchism, and which abounds, alas! all over England. It is simply Romanism slightly diluted—popery disguised with a thin veil. Wherever you have a 'priest' instead of a preacher, an 'altar' instead of a communion table, wax candles instead of the sunshine of divine truth, ceremonial instead of sound doctrine, sacraments instead of saving grace, intoned liturgies instead of earnest, heartfelt prayers, splendid music instead of spiritual worship, gorgeous vestments instead of Gospel truth, tradition and 'the church' instead of 'as it is written,' and crossings instead of Christ, there you have Romanism, no matter what it is called."

The Roman Church in the United States, manipulated by the Pope at Rome and Mgr. Satolli at Washington, proposes, this coming autumn, to send out the Paulists to evangelize the American people and coax them to become Roman Catholic. It is an ad captandum work, this proselyting scheme, because it requires no conversion of soul, no change of heart, no reformation of life—only a blind submission to the errors and dogmas of a spurious Christianity that is sending its votaries to perdition because it is a league with sin. How any true Christian can fellowship Romanism or Ritualism, whether in the lodge or the church, is one of the mysteries of Satan when he puts on the regalia of an angel of light to deceive the fools of earth.

In the North Division of Chicago is an Episcopalian church, whose eucharistic services are openly advertised as "masses," and partake of the genuflections, intonations and symbols of Romanism. Yet this church is tolerated by the Episcopalian Bishop of Chicago, who allows the services of his own cathedral to partake largely of the Ritualism of the English church, which Mr. Guinness declares is only Romanism disguised. How long will it take the Paulist "fathers" to scoop the whole "Protestant" Episcopalian church, with all its Romish tendency, into the bosom of the Pope?

We all know the connection of Masonic Ritualism with pagan mysteries and worship. Like Romanism, also, it has priests instead of preachers, altars instead of communion tables, candles instead of the sunshine of divine truth, ceremonial instead of candor, and a religion that is "not Christianity, nor even a substitute for it."

Thus we see that Ritualism leads either to Romanism or Paganism, and both lead to perdition.

MEN AND CATTLE.

The war-cloud in the East is already larger than a man's hand. The conflicts that have already taken place, together with the threatening declarations of France, make it quite probable that there is to be a war with Siam; and it is not impossible that the great nations of Europe will be drawn into the conflict.

Already it is suggested that as Great Britain has far greater commercial interests at stake, her sympathies will be with Siam and against her hereditary enemy. Germany and Russia would be all too ready to take sides, and the scenes of carnage may be transferred from Asia to Europe. The great armies, like hounds in the leash, are ready and waiting to fall upon and destroy each other.

But without stopping to inquire into the merits of the controversy, it is safe to say that the wrongs which call for vengeance, whether they be the acts of France or Siam or of both, are the acts of the rulers of these countries, and not of the soldiers who do the actual fighting. Suppose the King of Siam and his immediate advisers have done a great wrong. It is morally certain that they will not have to suffer for it. The men who will be pierced by the bayonet and torn by shot and shell will be those who have had nothing to do with bringing on the war. Suppose the French government, as represented by President Carnot and his ministry, have undertaken a causeless and inhuman conflict, yet no one supposes that they will be called to suffer. It is only the French soldier who shall be pierced by bullets, or die of malaria, that bears the penalty of the crime that he had no hand in committing.

Suppose England, Germany and Russia are drawn into the strife, and their great armies go out to butcher each other; it will not be the fault of the men who make up the rank and file of those armies, but rather of the rulers who send them and keep them in the field. Of these soldiers it may be said:

"Their's not to ask the reason why,
Their's but to do and die."

No one can reconcile this with natural justice. Every principle of equity demands that the principals and not the subordinates are the ones who ought to suffer the penalties of crime. But all war, whether offensive or defensive, is carried on in this manner. It wholly ignores the principles of equity.

There is only one theory on which any war can be justified. If this theory is not tenable, then all militarism must be condemned.

The theory is, that the rulers own the people, and especially the armies, and that the way to punish the rulers of any nation is to kill and destroy the men who make up their armies. According to this theory, these men have no rights. No one has any rights but the men who constitute the government.

Suppose two ranchmen on our Western plains have each 100,000 cattle. They fall out about a line-fence, or a stream of water. Each, to punish his adversary, commences killing his adversary's cattle, or, perhaps, sets the cattle to killing each other. Tens of thousands are gored to death, and then the two men meet and settle their strife. Now no one thinks of the cattle as having any rights in this matter. Their owners' rights are the only ones considered. When these are adjusted, there is peace.

But men are not cattle. Each soldier, however humble, has a right to life and to justice, and that must be something terribly wrong that inflicts on him the penalty of death for an act for which he has had no responsibility.

KNIGHT TEMPLARISM REBUKED BY A SIR KNIGHT.

"Sir" E. G. DeLap is a Knight Templar in Mississippi, and one of the Committee on Correspondence of the Grand Commandery of that State. At the last session of that august body he presented the report of his committee. As reported by the Voice of Masonry, he acknowledged that some of his comments might seem to be cranky or dyspeptical, and yet claimed that he simply gave voice to convictions of half a century's growth and observation in the light of God's Word, as it strikes him. He professed regret at the loneliness of his situation in inveighing severely against commanderies attending divine service in uniform, but denied the charge that he considers all who do not concur in his views as fools. He characterized such service as "armed piety," "uniformed piety," "dress parade religion," "battalion religious gatherings," and "whited sepulchre devotion," and yet declared that "these matters are to be adjusted between us and the Judge of all the earth, to whom we are all alike amenable," and that "the light of eternity will demonstrate who is in the right."

Continuing in this spirit of submission, he quoted, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" and then asked, "Do men gather the humility and meekness inseparable from a state of saving grace from the ostentation, arms and pomp of this sort of devotion?" He thinks there can be no humility and no holiness in the heart of a Knight Templar in uniform in the house of God, and hence he opposes his appearance there equipped. "We do not," he adds, "object to these things in the ceremonies of the order and the ritualistic work in the asylum; but we do object to the prostitution of God's house to the display of these gaudy trappings. There is no devotion in it, not a whit, and the desire to honor God is not an appropriate element in the desire to engage in this sort of thing."

Still further, he says: "It would have been a move in the right direction," if a certain Grand Commander had "asked for a commission of lunacy to look into the sanity" of Sir Knights who desired and were refused his permission to attend church in Templar uniform.

Again, "Sir Knight" DeLap denounced Templars who attend church in uniform, as follows:

If these doughty Crusaders, their admirers and abettors, had any real wish to enter the earthly courts of God's Tabernacle for purposes of worship and devotion, their "nodding plumes and swords would be laid aside for the time as being utterly out of place in God's house and entirely repugnant to the worship of the 'Prince of Peace.'" Call us uncharitable, censorious, and quote the first verse of Matthew 7th as much as you please, but don't try to induce us to confess ourself a fool by believing that there is a single element of good in the practice. The fact that Mississippi engages in the diabolical practice of desecrating God's house annually, in uniform, makes no difference. This writer takes no stock in it and would, if he could, abolish it from Maine to the Rio Grande, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is an abomination in the sight of God; an enemy of righteousness, a child of the devil and an immigration agent for hell!

Naturally the Masonic fraternity and press are as badly "stirred up" by their candid Commandery brother as the Jews at Jerusalem were over Paul's supposed defilement of the temple, and with no better reason. See Acts 21: 27-39.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP AGAIN.

In the editorial notice of the World's Fair exhibit in last week's Cynosure, ninth page, third column, it was intended to say that the quotation from Grosh's Manual of Odd-fellowship, page 90, appears only in the old edition of 1869, and not in the newer edition of 1882.

While this "reverend" author, in the last edition of his Manual, leaves out this clause: "What regeneration by the word of truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship," doubtless because our use of it as footnote 17 in "Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated" had tormented him, he does not abate his claim as to the religious character of the order and he defends the use of lodge regalia in the same words as a quoted in Note 8 of Revised Odd-fellowship as follows:

If our regalia and emblems tend to increase our benevolence, and stimulate us to greater activity in well-doing, then is their manufacture no idle work, their cost no useless expense.

This quotation is on page 66 in the new edition, instead of 56 as in the old edition. On the same page (66 new edition) Grosh says: "The cost of our decorations has been employed in giving needed labor, and by that labor honorable subsistence, to hundreds and thousands of industrious men, women and children," and he goes on to compare this expense to Mary and "the pound of ointment of spikenard very costly," to justify lodge show and extravagance. All the words in italics in these quotations are italics in the Manual.

Of late the liquor men have seemed hard pressed for a defense. Can they not successfully use their old argument as to the great number employed in the manufacture and sale of "hell-broth" to help their "vested rights" howl.

It is true that in order to pay for his lodge regalia many an Odd-fellow, Knight Templar and Knight of Pythias uses money that is due the merchant, grocer and butcher, but here stands a valiant defender. He is doing it all to give regalia manufacturers work, and in many cases he is giving his wife work, too, sometimes over the washtub, to get means to feed her lodge-decorated husband.

MASONRY AND "BOOZE."

"The Rechabites" is a secret order founded on 2 Kings 10: 15, Jer. 35: 2-10, and is classed among the temperance organizations of the day, and open to the same objections as other secret societies of its class. In this country it is neither prominent nor extensive.

No doubt many worthy persons have been induced to take its secret obligations as a means of effecting much good in the temperance cause, which is the plea of the Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, etc., but this is only a piece of sophistry designed to swell the lodge membership for social purposes, which could be equally well done without enveloping the order with an air of mystery and exciting the curiosity of the unlearned in its behalf.

In the Australian Keystone a gentleman who signs himself "A Mason and a Rechabite" writes that as a combination of the two he is sorely troubled in mind because of the large quantity of alcoholic drink which he saw consumed at a Masonic banquet table. He hesitates to sit in judgment on their actions when the limit of propriety is not exceeded; but he is free to ask his brethren, "in the very best feeling, do they consider that if it was not for the anticipation of our supper table (where more attention is paid to the 'black bottle') we would have many visitors to assist us in our Masonic work and grace the proceedings with their presence?" And he significantly answers the question: "I think we would have very few to visit us."

This candid brother has noticed, when occasionally visiting sister lodges, "many brothers who were not acting up to one of the cardinal virtues—temperance in all things. I do not write this for the purpose of observing 'the mote' in my brother's eye; far from it; but to ask them, one and all, are we acting Masonically in spending such large sums of money in strong drink when so many of our Freemasons' charitable institutions are languishing for want of funds?"

It is evident that this open-hearted gentleman has not yet learned the complex rule of Masonic charity—that Masonry is not in any corporate sense a charitable institution, but that its eleemosynary funds are raised solely from individual contributions by members to whatever object, and in whatever amounts, personal inclination prompts them. The mystery of "lodge charity" consists in the fact that "it costs two dollars to give away one."

So far as temperance is a prevailing virtue in any Masonic lodge, very much depends upon the character of those who belong to it. If they are all Rechabites or other pronounced temperance men, that lodge will be tolerably clear from the drink-habit; but if it covers a majority of saloon keepers and "good fellows" about town, a Masonic banquet means a good deal of imbibition.

The trouble is, that in Masonry there is no "landmark" fixing the amount of liquor to be drank at a fraternal banquet!

GLADSTONE AND IRISH HOME RULE.

Ex-American Consul-General John C. New, who has returned to Indiana from his recent post in London, thus expressed his views of Home Rule for Ireland to a New York reporter:

"Outside the lower half of Ireland and one or two districts in Liverpool and an odd district scattered here and there in other parts of England, nobody cares a copper for Home Rule. Gladstone himself is a selfish and vain statesman. The Home Rule issue was a stepping-stone to satisfy his ambition for a return to the premiership. Gladstone has a majority of about forty in the House of Commons for the Home Rule bill, but it can never pass the House of Lords, and therefore Gladstone and his followers remind me of the French king who marched up hill with his army only to march down again. His ambition has been satisfied now, and he knows that there is no more chance for Home Rule in Ireland than if he had never been born.

Mr. New undoubtedly speaks from Tory suggestion, and has perhaps overdrawn his statement; but there are persons in America, as well as in England, who believe that the true interests of the Kingdom require that Ireland should remain in her present political position.

Judges in the lower courts of South Carolina have declared the new State law regulating the liquor traffic unconstitutional; yet the governor is assiduously enforcing it. Such a law, giving the State entire control of the sale of liquor, naturally produced a contraband traffic in it by unprincipled persons; and now the authorities are busily engaged in ferreting out these unlawful grog-shops, and creating intense excitement and opposition. This condition of affairs indicates an early repeal of the obnoxious law, which, it is evident, cannot be maintained without destroying the public peace. If it should lead, however, to actual prohibition of the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits within the State, it may yet prove a blessing in disguise.

A Masonic journal has a request that in the coming session of the Grand Lodge of that jurisdiction, "the proceedings will be conducted with the decorum suitable to such an important assemblage;" and then lets light upon the ordinary usages of that majestic body: "Members from the country expect to find Grand Lodge a pattern for their imitation. . . . Instead of which they complain that the proceedings are of such a noisy character as would not be tolerated in any well regulated private lodge. They complain that they have to listen to brethren wrangling with each other and using language to each other which would not be used with impunity outside of the lodge. To have the best portion of the meeting spent in unseemly altercations, and then the business hurried through, is simply intolerable." But there is something to be said in favor of that Grand Lodge, which had a close following in the august British Parliament, last week, when the closing sections of the Irish Home Rule bill were under consideration. As one paper describes it, it was a "hand-to-hand conflict, beside which Donnybrook Fair pales into insignificance, and the members fought right and left, like so many cats and dogs."

But, brethren, you should never let Your angry passions rise;
To quarrel and fight, or even fret,
Is neither good nor wise.

Coincident with the publication of the sketch of Philo Carpenter in this issue of the Cynosure, comes intelligence of the death of Rev. Jeremiah Porter, D.D., who, with Mr. Carpenter, founded the First Presbyterian church of Chicago, and was its first pastor. At the ripe age of 88 years he closed a long and active Christian career at Beloit, Wis., on Tuesday week. His death was sudden and resulted from general debility. Like Mr. Carpenter, he was zealous and alert to the necessity of Christian living and working, and was foremost and earnest in the reforms of the times. Like Mr. Carpenter, too, he was an enthusiastic Abolitionist, and on one occasion, while pastor of a church at Peoria, was protected by his parishioners from the assaults of a proslavery mob. A sketch of his eventful life will appear later in the Cynosure.

An Eastern correspondent writes: "As an anti-Catholic, anti-secret, anti-liquor and anti-'ring' reformer, with twenty-five years' observation, reflection, study, investigation and experience, . . . I most earnestly urge the reader to obtain 'more light,' immediately, from the Christian Cynosure and from all the rituals and other anti-secret and anti-Catholic publications now offered to the public by the National Christian Association, which is exposing and opposing all the secret societies composing the sly and crafty secret empire of the United States."

Some surprise and, in certain circles, great satisfaction will be manifested when it becomes known that Rutgers College has dismissed eight freshmen who persisted in cultivating muscle rather than brains. They proved deficient in their studies, and their classes no longer know them.

OFFICE ECHOES.

A carpenter and contractor said that he had arranged with his men to have every Saturday for seeing the World's Fair, if they wished it, during the summer. This arrangement was made before it was decided to close the gates on Sunday. It was done at a time when the secret trades-unions were claiming to represent the laboring people, and threatening to tear down the gates if they were shut. This carpenter said that they did not need the Fair open on Sunday, and did not want it open.

We were glad to greet that indefatigable worker, Bro. Fenton, for a short call. A few Sabbaths ago, after listening to a sermon, he spoke to the pastor and gave him an anti-secret tract, and his own address, with the remark that he should be pleased to have a call from him. In a few days the pastor called. He said: "It must have been the good providence of God that led you to give me that tract. You did not know that I was a Freemason. I had had my doubts about the institution; but now I see that it is my duty to renounce it."

The report, for the month of June, of Rev. P. B. Williams, Secretary of the Oregon Department, is "hard to beat." He delivered twenty-four anti-secrecy lectures to good houses. These addresses were delivered in fourteen different places—including such places as Portland and Oregon City.

How many of the Cynosure boys and girls read the poem in the Cynosure entitled "Marion"? It relates a true incident of an 18-year old boy of one of the Massachusetts regiments. His name was Marion Grant. That war was an awful scourge, permitted by God because of our treatment of the slavery question. Are the boys going to do differently by the liquor and lodge evil?

THE HOME.

BEYOND.

Never a word is said
But it trembles in the air,
And the truant voice has sped
To vibrate everywhere;
And perhaps far off in eternal years
The echo may ring upon our ears.

Never are kind acts done
To wipe the weeping eyes,
But, like the flashing sun,
They signal to the skies;
And up above the angels read
How we have helped the sorer need.

Never a day is given
But it tones the after-years,
And it carries up to heaven
Its sunshine or its tears;
While the to-morrows stand and wait—
The silent mutes by the outer gate.

There is no end to the sky,
And the stars are everywhere,
And the time is eternity,
And the here is over there;
For the common deeds of the common day
Are ringing bells in the far away.

THE WHEELMAN'S STORY.

He was the man who played the steam engine for a printing press in an office not far from the Bible House. I had never really separated him in my mind from the printing press whose great wheel it was his business to turn from morning to night, or from the proof sheets which during two or three years he had been wont to bring me during the noon hour.

One day he stood before me, his blue blouse and overalls streaked with oil and printer's ink, and a smutch of ink under his left eye, and asked if he might say a few words. With a sigh I turned to hear some plea for help, as I supposed, for his poverty. Then he told me his story in the queer, rough Turkish spoken by those whose native tongue is Arabic. He said:

"I am going back to my country, and I want you to know about our village. I went up there from the south at the time of the famine. We could get nothing to eat and I reached the village in the mountains beyond Sert one day when they were harvesting. I helped them and found that they needed a blacksmith, so I offered to stay. Two days later was Sunday, and the people were vexed because I would not work. They thought me a pretty poor blacksmith not to be willing to work on just the day they could spare time to have things mended up. I told them that I was a Protestant and would not work on Sunday. They were very angry, and some wanted to turn me right out of the village. Protestantism, they said, is a contagious disease, which, when it once gets into a village, spreads until it has turned all the people away from praying to the saints and all other good Christian usages. But the head man told them that they were fools to send away a blacksmith at that time of the year and said I would stay, but keep my Protestantism to myself. So he told me that if I ever spoke Protestantism to any one in the village, he would flog me until my toe-nails dropped off.

"All right," I said, "only I want to tell you that this is the holy day set apart for religion. All of you, as Christians, ought to keep from working on Sunday."

"I suppose you are right," he said; "but it is not our custom to be so particular here. There is nothing else to do on Sunday."

"It all began from that, for as I was reading my Bible the neighbors wanted to know what it was, and liked it so much that they used to come every Sunday to hear me read. Then one day I found a man out in a great lie, and told him that Christians ought not to lie.

"I never heard that before," said he.

"Well, it's so," I said; "and you ought to know what the Bible says about it."

"He asked me to come to his house and read him what the Bible says about lying. Pretty soon it was the custom to invite me to other houses, in the long winter evenings, to read the Bible.

"In the spring I was going one day with a neighbor to do some work outside of the village, when he got angry at his horse and swore awfully. I said to him: 'Yusuf, are you a Christian?'

"Of course I am. What makes you ask?'

"Because a Christian is a child of God, and a child of God ought to be ashamed of using God's name in such a way."

"That is so," said Yusuf; "but I never thought of it before."

"After we reached the place where we were to work, one of the others swore, and Yusuf rebuked him, saying what I had said to him. This made them all talk, and some of them complained of me to the head man. He came to me and said: 'Simon, you must shut up. We will not stand these Protestant notions of yours in public places. Read your Bible to people in the houses, if you like and they like; but if you talk Protestantism again outside, I will flog your toe-nails off and turn you out of the village.'

"Well, not to make a long story of it, now a number of the people have Bibles of their own; no one in the village works on Sunday; half of the village has stopped swearing, and the rest are ashamed of it; many are trying to stop lying, while six are followers of Jesus Christ. I am going back to the village now, and I wanted to ask you who have been my Effendi in all these years, to remember that village in your prayers. They will all look to me, who have been in a city so long, to tell them more about what real Christianity is. Sometimes pray for them and pray for me, that I may show them truth, and make no mistakes. I have learned a great deal from the preaching here, but I don't know very much, and they are so hard to teach. Pray for us."

The tears were in my eyes as I grasped my new-found brother's hand and bade him God-speed. And whenever I look upon the map of Turkey that hangs on the wall, and see the belt of the mountains southwest of Lake Van, on the borders of Mesopotamia, my heart yearns for the blessing of God upon that faithful servant of his, living in those mountains, who used to turn the machine that prints the tracts. I repeat the story not for its own interest alone, but in hopes that other prayers may go up to the Lord of such obscure, faithful servants, entreating his blessing upon that village, and the scores of others in this land of the method of whose awakening and reformation it is a type.—Rev. H. O. Dwight, Missionary of the American Board.

HIS NIGHT OFF.

My father played a queer trick on me the other night. You know I used to feel that I had done myself an injustice if I did not go to the theatre about five or six nights a week. It wasn't always the theatre, but if it wasn't that, it was a music hall, or a game of cards or billiards with some of the boys. Well, you know how I am situated as to my business. I work for my father, and I have to be at the office early in the morning, just as the rest of the family are sitting down to breakfast. In consequence, I get my breakfast, and leave the house before they are up. But I can't complain of that. I'm doing exactly what the man who had my place before me did. But that's neither here nor there. It's the evenings. I used to finish work about six, get dinner in the city, and go somewhere in the evening.

I had been doing it for six months, and when I look back I remember that about the only time I saw my mother and sister during that period was at Sunday dinner. Nothing unusual in that, of course. The same thing is true of hundreds of young men in town. But they haven't fathers like mine. He came to me one afternoon and asked me if I had an engagement for that night.

"Yes," I said, "I've promised to go to the theatre."

"How about to-morrow night?" he asked.

"Nothing on at present," I replied.

"Well, I'd like you to go somewhere with me."

"All right," I said; "where shall I meet you?"

You see, he leaves the office about an hour before I can get my work finished. He suggested Lenox restaurant, at 7:30, and I was there, prepared for a quiet lecture on late hours. But when he appeared, he said he wanted me to call on a lady with him. "One I knew quite well when I was a young man," he explained.

We went out, and started straight for home.

"She is stopping at the house," he said, when I spoke of it. I thought it strange that he should have made the appointment for the Lenox restaurant under those circumstances, but I said nothing.

Well, we went in, and I was introduced with due formality to my mother and sister. The situation was ludicrous, and I began to laugh, but the laugh died away. None of the three even smiled. My mother and my sister both shook hands with me, and my mother said she remembered me as a boy, but hadn't seen much of me lately. Then she invited me to be seated. It wasn't a bit funny then, though I can laugh over it now. I sat down, and she told me one or two stories of my boyhood, at which we all laughed a little. When I finally retired, I was courteously invited to call again.

I went upstairs, feeling pretty small, and doing a good deal of thinking. Then I made up my mind that my mother was a most entertaining lady, and my sister was a good and brilliant girl. Now, I'm going to "call again," as I have been doing quite regularly for the last week. I enjoy their company, and I intend to cultivate their acquaintance.—Evangelist.

WARNED OFF THE TRAIN.

"On the twenty-third of February, 1891," said an earnest mission worker, "myself and Sister H. started from Denver to Canon City, Col. Our baggage was checked for Leadville. We had a meeting on the train, and warned the people to flee from the wrath to come. Some ridiculed, others were interested. One of the men heard the hymns sung, and remembered them as the hymns he had heard in his childhood.

"We went on for some distance until the train whistled for Salida, Col., when a voice bade me, 'Get off the train.' I told the two sisters and a brother who were with me to get things ready to leave the train. We gathered everything up and hurried off with our things in our hands.

"We left our baggage with the ticket-agent, telling him we wanted to go on the next train, which left about midnight, and went out into the street. I did not know why we were to stop or what we were to do, but we went out and had a meeting on the street in the cold wind. Some of the people heard the word and invited us to come into the Methodist church. After the meeting a man took us into his store that we might warm ourselves. I then went with Sister H. into many of the saloons, and talked and prayed there.

"At eleven o'clock we returned to the depot, and asked when the next train left for Leadville.

"I do not know," said the agent; "the train you left went on twelve miles, and crashed into the down-coming train. We have sent out two wrecking trains, and do not know when the way will be cleared."

"I told him my story, and how I left the train; he looked over my railway passes; and we talked till three o'clock in the morning, when the train came back. Some of the people on board were hurt; but when the train was ready we got on again and started, and I had an opportunity to testify to the people of how the Lord had taken me from the train, and how I had thus escaped injury."—E. W., in The Christian.

TAN AND TALLY.

One sunny day in April, 1892, little Mabel, the daughter of a physician living at Lowander Park, San Gabriel Valley, in Southern California, was playing in the grounds near her father's house. Two fox terriers, Tan and Tally, shared with her the delights of freedom and exercise in the open air. These dogs had been the playmates of Mabel since her babyhood, and during the five years that made the sum of her life had been her almost constant companions.

As they frolicked together through the paths of the garden a peculiar sound in a bush near by arrested the attention of the child, and she peered into the branches to see what caused it. Instantly the horrid head of a snake reared itself before her, and the ominous sound of its rattles told the frightful danger that menaced her. Mabel stood perfectly still, as if fascinated. The gardener, at work a little distance away, screamed to her to run, and hastened to her rescue; but, hurry as he might, he would have been too late, had not the fox terriers, with quick knowledge of the danger that threatened the child they loved, thrown themselves before her, and worried the snake until the man could kill it with the spade that he had been using at his work.

The dogs knew their own peril. They had often shown great terror at the sight of a rattlesnake or the sound of his rattle when camping out with their master. All was forgotten. Natural fear was conquered in the desire to save what they loved better than life—the child whose baby sleep they had watched, whose first unsteady steps they had followed, whose childish play they had shared. When the mother came, in answer to the shouts of the gardener, she found her child unhurt; but at her feet, still faithful and loving, lay Tan and Tall in the agonies of death.

Only two dogs dying! But to the mother, holding in her arms the child they had died to save, their death meant the death of heroes. Never will the lesson be forgotten. It was not one of ordinary faithfulness. The sacrifice of life itself to save another from harm, Christ himself has declared to be the utmost that man can do to prove his love.—L. P. D., in Our Animal Friends.

HOW TO PROMOTE PEACE IN THE HOUSE.

Let each person remember that there are others in the house beside themselves.

That all, be they old or young, have a right to be considered as well as yourself.

That as there are differences of temper, disposition, and judgment amongst you, there should be bearing and forbearing.

Learn each other's tender point or peculiarity, and do all you can to avoid touching it.

When angry or cross, count ten before you speak, and then only in a whisper.

If others are put out, do all you can to soothe; provoke not, reply not.

Enter into one another's trials, sickness, pleasures or plans, and seek to share them.

Let sunshine into all your ways, works, and words.

Provoke not the children to wrath; soothe, cheer, guide them aright.

Praise when you can, and when you cannot, say nothing to wound or irritate.

Speak kindly to servants—do not lord it over those under you.

Let the servants do what is to be done, without waiting to be told to do it.

Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus. Phil. 2:2-8.—Selected.

POLLY AND THE TRAMP.

"Yes, Polly is a pretty bird, and as bright as she is pretty," said Aunt Abbie to us children, who crowded about the cage to admire the bird's bright plumage and pert manners. "Did I ever tell you?" she asked, "how Polly did me a good turn by frightening a tramp away?"

"No, Aunt Abbie," we all cried, and we gathered about her, anxious to lose no word of the story.

"Well, children," she began, "you know Uncle Daniel has lived with me for years. As he is old and feeble, he stays in the sitting-room, and reads or sleeps most of the time. When he is wanted I go to the door and call rather loudly, for he is hard of hearing, 'Uncle Dan, Uncle Dan, you are wanted.' Polly has heard these words so many times that she can repeat them as plainly as I can, and when anything unusual is going on she will scream, 'Uncle Dan, Uncle Dan, you are wanted;' but I never imagined this habit of Polly's would be of any service to me.

"One morning last summer I was alone in the house, and while I was clearing off the breakfast table I heard a loud knock at the back door. I opened it, and there stood the dirtiest, roughest-looking tramp I ever saw. He asked me for something to eat, and before I had time to make him any reply, he pushed past me, and, unwittingly, took a seat at the table.

"I never refuse to feed a hungry person, so I brought out what food there was in the pantry, and placed it on the table. Nearly all my eatables were down cellar, but I was afraid to leave the man alone to go after them, so I told him he was welcome to what was on the table. He glanced over the table disdainfully, and demanded something better.

"I was afraid to go down into the cellar, thinking he would either follow me, or rob the house in my absence; so I told him that was the best I could do for him.

"He brought his fist down on the table with an angry oath, and demanded a good hot breakfast.

"I was thoroughly frightened, and decided to run to the neighbors for help, when Polly, disturbed by the man's loud talk, came to the rescue by screaming, 'Uncle Dan, Uncle Dan, you are wanted!'

"An open door hid her cage from the man's view, and he threw one startled glance in the direction of the voice, and rushed from the house, thinking, no doubt, it was a child's voice calling some man about the place to my aid.

"My fear vanished with the tramp, and I laughed heartily at his sudden flight. No man was ever changed more quickly from an insolent bully to a crestfallen coward than he was by Polly's words.

"I gave her an extra lunch that morning, and I shall always feel grateful to her for saving me from an unpleasant, if not dangerous, situation." —Atlanta (Ga.) Journal.

TEMPERANCE.

THE CURSE OF THE AGE.

While licenses exist around,
Their wicked work is seen;
When blithesome children, boys and girls,
Seen sporting on the green,
Are called away from harmless play,
From all they relish dear,
And sent to bring the cause of strife,
The spirits or the beer,
Such fathers, mothers are bereft
Of much beside the gold—
Their peace, their child, their self-respect,
And all for drink are sold.

We plead with such from week to week,
To shun the downward course;
Our duty urges motives strong—
Alas, we find them worse.
How many spend the cost of bread
And wages hardly earned?
Or ask their neighbor for the "bit"
Withheld because it harmed?
The patent plea is ever raised,
"Should workmen lose their beer?"
They take the drink at work or rest—
"Why should I interfere?"

They're slaves of drink, the worst of slaves,
Still boasting they are free;
But drink they do, and drink they will,
Despite what man can see.
We turn in sorrow from the sight,
Their strifes, their cries bemoan,
And plead with One who knows it all—
Our faith survives alone.

GUILT OF THE TRAFFIC.

"The men who traffic in ardent spirits, and sell to all who will buy, are poisoners general; they murder his Majesty's subjects by wholesale; neither do their eyes pity or spare."—John Wesley.

"Round about the caldron go;
In the poisoned entrails throw.
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble—
Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, caldron, bubble."

—Macbeth.

Neil Dow, when asked how prohibition was carried in the State of Maine, replied, "We snowed the country knee-deep with temperance literature."

Nothing so effectually counter-works God's purposes of grace, bans the souls that he would bless, and destroys the bodies of mankind as the giant evil—intemperance. It is the ally of the devil, the enemy of all righteousness, the incentive to every sin and vice, to every crime and violence, to every cruelty and wrong. Like the dread apocalyptic vials of wrath poured out upon the earth, this fiery curse has spread with the virulence of no other plague that ever blasted the world, and has burnt over the earth with its scoratic rivers of fire. No land has been unscathed, from frozen sea to tropic strand; from insular Britain to its far antipodes. Entire races have melted away at the breath of this pestilence, like snow before the summer sun.

But the most dreadful darkness of this shadow of death, deepest and most dire eclipse of woe, has been in so-called Christian lands. There the air has been Full of farewells for the dying

And weeping for the dead, for, as in the great and terrible plague of Egypt, in almost every house has lain some slain victim of the traffic. Yet still the work of death goes on; still this wine-press of wrath is trodden out by "Christian" feet; still the Moloch fires of the distilleries redden the midnight heavens.

"Their worm dieth not on the holy Sabbath; on that hallowed day when all other things with any quality of goodness or salvation in them rest—the still-worm, twin reptile of the worm that never dies, works on with all the infernal energy of its kind. It works on while the people who live by its profits are singing psalms in the house of God! That still-worm works on like sin, and for the wages of sin. It works when all honest things are still and night hangs heavy on the world. It works on to feed the appetites it has kindled to life—appetites which ever become more imperious, crying out like the grave, 'Give! give!'

Therefore, God, who is forever and implacably opposed to sin, and wages eternal war against it, especially menaces with the most terrible maledictions of his wrath, this direst of all sins. The seven-fold curse of his eternal indignation is denounced against the agents, aiders, or abettors of this red traffic in blood—in the bodies and souls of men. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink" sounds the prophetic thunder of his holy Word.

This pernicious traffic, more than anything else, retards the progress of the Gospel, and erects a kingdom of darkness in the midst of Christendom, consigning millions of baptized men to a life of sin and misery and ignorance far worse than any in the realms of darkest paganism. It excludes men from the kingdom of heaven and makes them the heirs of wrath and death eternal. It everywhere creates and fosters crime and pauperism, irreligion and vice; causes physical and mental disease; shortens life, and often sends the soul into the presence of its Maker by an act of self-slaughter, or crimsoned with the guilt of murder. It is the cause of much of the Sabbath desecration, profanity and abounding wickedness that are the reproach of Christian civilization. By its malign influence, many who might be useful members of society and ornaments of the community, become its moral lepers and lazars, disseminating pollution and misery all around them. It makes of the streets of a Christian metropolis, reeking with their "immoral sewerage" of sinful souls, with their vile orgies, their haunts of vice and traps for virtue, a very pandemonium of profligacy and crime.

The waste of food, and its conversion into liquid poison caused by the liquor traffic, we contend, is contrary to the will of God, and is, therefore, sinful and immoral. It needs no labored argument to demonstrate this truth. It surely is self-evident to every candid mind. God created every herb and every tree, in all their vast variety and manifold excellence, to be food for man—to minister to the necessities and the enjoyment of the creatures he hath made. The great staples of nature—the cereal grains and fruits and vegetables of the earth—contain all the elements which are necessary for the uplifting of the body, and for its maintenance in a condition of health and vigor. Yet there is hardly a single production of the soil, which is fit for food, that man has not perverted from its proper use to the manufacture of poisonous and intoxicating liquors, which are injurious in the highest degree to both body and soul.

In this process all food-making elements are destroyed. The process of fermentation is literally one of putrefaction, by which the wholesome grain or luscious grape is changed from healthful food to death-dealing poison. Hence the hackneyed assertion that wine is a good creature of God, and therefore to be received with thanksgiving, is as false as it is common. The corn, in its golden gleaming, and the grape, in its purple bloom, are indeed his good creatures, which make glad the heart of man; but the alcoholic principle, which perverted ingenuity has tortured from them in the process of their putrefaction, and which is not found in the universe except as the offspring of corruption and decay, is in no sense a good creature of God, any more than the fetid gases by which its evolution is accompanied, or than the opium, strychnine, prussic acid, or arsenic, which man is able, chemically, to isolate from the vegetable substances with which they are held in innocent combination.—Rev. W. H. Withrow, D D, in Onward.

COMMENTS BY THOMAS WILLIAMS.

In order to understand this lesson well, it will be necessary to read what precedes it, beginning at verse 17 of this chapter. For a better knowledge of what is therein stated, the help of a good commentator, or teacher, will be found useful.

Paul's sentiments on the Jewish dispensation are fully explained in his epistles. He considered the Jewish ritual as no longer obligatory. Yet he did not wish to treat it with contempt, nor to offend his Jewish brethren who did not yet realize that the coming of Christ had abolished it. Infidel writers have condemned his conduct in this respect as compromising and time-serving; but as his object was not worldly interest, but to subserve the cause of Christ, it ought not to be severely criticized. He became "all things to all men," that by any means "he might save some." 1 Cor. 9: 22.

This conciliatory measure, however, as we learn from the lesson under consideration, had an effect far different from what had been intended. It was not to be supposed that Paul would, or could, refrain from speaking to a Gentile convert in the city; but his having been seen to do this was sufficient to raise an alarm when his former enemies were on the watch. Just before the seven days of purification had ended, he had been seen talking with one "Trophimus, an Ephesian," whom "they supposed he brought into the temple," probably from seeing there a person like him. On this ground, whether real or pretended, the alarm was given. Paul was seized and dragged out of the temple, and the door closed, to prevent other Gentiles from going in. The whole city was immediately in an uproar, and they began beating Paul, whom, doubtless, they would have killed, had not the Roman authorities interfered. But notice of the riot had been conveyed to Lysias, the chief officer of the Roman Band, who commanded 1,000 soldiers. This force was employed in keeping guard at the outer gates of the temple, to preserve peace during the public festivals. Lysias promptly came, with his soldiers, to the rescue of Paul; and, supposing him to be some great criminal (a notable Egyptian false prophet who had previously created a riot), he ordered him to be bound to two soldiers with two chains, and inquired into the accusations against him. But obtaining no satisfaction from the angry Jews, he commanded Paul to be brought immediately to the Castle of Antonia, from the steps of which, leading from the court of the Gentiles, the apostle was permitted to speak to the populace in his own defence.

The action of the Jews in this adventure of Paul is worthy of remark: They wanted the Gentiles to become Christians, but with a strange perversity they insisted on their coming into the kingdom only through the Jewish forms, forgetting that the death of Christ had broken down the partition between Jew and Gentile.

It was providentially ordered that Paul should be publicly attacked, arrested and placed in the castle for safe keeping, as it opened the way for his preaching to many whom he might not otherwise have reached with the glorious tidings of salvation.

The events of this lesson forcibly recall the words of the Lord in the vision of Ananias, referring to Paul (Acts 9: 15, 16): "He is a chosen vessel unto me to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: for I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." This was Paul's experience; and every soul that loves the Lord will have the experience which he has appointed it to undergo.

STERLING TESTIMONIES.

JOHN MARSHALL, Chief Justice, in a Letter to Edward Everett, July 22, 1833, said of Freemasonry: "That the institution ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

THURLOW WEED: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

CHARLES P. SUMNER, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion."

HON. SAMUEL DEXTER, in an Open Letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

GEN. HENRY SEWELL, a Companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this 'Perfect Rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its character appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion, deism, because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity, unsustainable; its titles, tulsome; its rites, barbarous and absurd; its oaths, extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken; and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Speech in the Senate: "Secret societies, sir? Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class or council, and bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow men. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrendering my own judgment to their judgments, and my own conscience to their keeping! No. No, sir. I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation. But my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men. I, therefore, know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish Government, pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community. . . . However combinations and associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying, afterwards, the very engines which had lifted them to unjust dominion."

WASHINGTON, to Rev. Mr. Snyder, Sept. 25, 1798, speaks of his illness, "which allows me to add little more now than thanks for your kind wishes and favorable sentiments, except to correct an error you have run into, of my presiding over the English lodges in this country. The fact is, I preside over none, NOR HAVE I BEEN IN ONE MORE THAN ONCE OR TWICE WITHIN THE LAST THIRTY YEARS."

JOHN MARSHALL: "I never did utter the words ascribed to me, nor any other words importing the sentiment they convey. I never did say, 'Freemasonry is a jewel of the utmost value, that the pure in heart and life can only appreciate it fully, and that in a free government it must, it will be sustained and protected.' The fact mentioned in the resolution, that I have been in a lodge but once, so far as I can recollect, for nearly forty years, is evidence that I have no disposition to volunteer in this controversy, as the zealous partisan which this language would indicate."—Letter to Hon. John Bailey, Oct. 18, 1833.

GOVERNOR RITNER, in response to a communication from the Legislature of Pennsylvania, prepared a vindication of General Washington from the stigma of adherence to secret societies, in which he proves from authentic documents:

1. That in 1768 Washington had ceased regular attendance on the lodge.
2. That in 1798, shortly before his death, his opinions were the same as thirty years before when thirty-six years old.
3. That he was never "Grand Master" or "Master" of any particular lodge.
4. That in 1781, as appears by the record of King David's lodge, Newport, Rhode Island, it was not agreeable to Washington to be addressed even as a private Mason.
5. That all the letters said to be written by Washington to lodges are spurious.

THANKS TO WASHINGTON.—Edward Livingston was the General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States and the great Masonic champion of his day, and Andrew Jackson was also a high Mason. In view of Washington's non-affiliation and his farewell address there can be little doubt that General Jackson and Edward Livingston considered Washington a seceded Mason. The following is an article published in 1830 in the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, which is an evidence of striking import:

"Who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington?—When General Washington retired to private life, Congress passed resolutions giving thanks to this great man. Only three men were found in Congress at that day, that voted against these resolutions. One of these three is now dead, and we do not wish to disturb his ashes. The grave should cover the foibles of all men. But there are two men now alive, whose names are on the journals of Congress, denying the poor pittance of a vote of thanks to Gen. Washington. We ask who these two men are.

"We have asked this question without expecting an answer from those to whom it is addressed. But there is no reason why our readers should not be gratified with the fact. Let the journals of Congress reply—"They are Andrew Jackson and Edward Livingston!"

Of all I wish to say of secret societies, this is the sum:

Secret oaths—

1. Can be shown historically to have often led to crime.
2. Are natural sources of jealousy and just alarm to society at large.
3. Are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions.
4. Are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government.
5. Are condemned by the severe denunciations of many of the wisest statesmen, preachers, and reformers.

6. Are opposed to Christian principles, especially to those implied in these three texts:

"In secret I have said nothing."

"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

"Give no offence in anything, that the ministry be not blamed."

7. Are forbidden in some portions of our Republic by the civil law, and ought to be in all portions. Many European governments hold Freemasonry under grave suspicion as a mask for conspiracies against throne and altar. In Prussia, Poland, Russia and Spain Freemasonry is prohibited by law.

8. Are forbidden to church members by some Christian denominations, and ought to be by all.—From address of Joseph Cook to Christian Conference, April, 1890.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

At a meeting of the Clearing-house Association Chicago banks were authorized to issue certificates in order to relieve the monetary stringency.

Ten thousand poor boys were taken to the Fair, given a dinner and entertained at Buffalo Bill's Wild West show.

For economical reasons it has been decided by the council of administration to keep only four of the Fair buildings open at night.

The women of California gave an informal reception to John W. Hutchinson, the famous singer of Abolitionist days.

Captain Bonfield thinks there is an organized band of youthful robbers working in the Fair grounds. Sixty-five of them have been arrested this month.

W. H. Irving, of Boston, committed suicide by filling his mouth with powder and applying a match. He left a note saying he was tired of life.

Cashier Noel, of the Calumet Electric Railway, was robbed of $1,000, bound by the robber and thrown in the office vault.

Judge Stein is much vexed because World's Fair directors failed to answer to the citation charging them with contempt, for closing the Exposition on the Sabbath.

The weekly statements of the State banks, made in response to the call of the auditor, show a heavy loss in deposits.

Wheat shippers of Chicago, who have 20,000,000 bushels in store, have determined to move it to the seaboard.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Nicaragua Ship Canal Association will be held in conjunction with the Waterways Congress.

Donald McNaughton, executive commissioner for New York at the World's Fair, died at the State building. He was 63 years of age.

The Salvation Army has opened camp-meeting at Lake Bluff and 1,000 people attended the initiatory services.

H. B. Nemitz, charged with larceny and embezzlement by the Swiss commissioner to the Fair, returned to the city in charge of officers.

FARM NOTES.

SELECTING SEEDS.

Owing to the facility with which farmers can supply themselves from the seedsmen, few save their own seeds now as they did in former times. It is so convenient to look over the assortments to be found in the seed stores and select what one wants for the garden for a small consideration that saving seeds at the right time is scarcely thought of by most families having gardens. Still there are in many cases manifest advantages in saving at least a portion of the seeds which may be wanted the next season, says the Southern Farmer. In this way one can feel certain of having for his various crops seeds which will grow and be true to name if proper care is taken in gathering, curing and preserving them from injury until wanted for use. Do not take seeds from the plant until perfectly mature. Select from the best stalks and spread for a few days in a dry room, and when they have been carefully cleaned, put in small bags, label and hang out of harm's way until planting time. It is a good plan to single out the plants from which the seeds are to be saved some time before the ripening and note such as are the most productive and vigorous.

FIELD NOTES.

The need of ice is now being felt by a great many persons. It is neither difficult nor expensive to put up a small amount of ice. Suppose you try it next winter.

Do not allow harvesting to keep the field of late corn from having a needed plowing. The last plowing destroys many weeds and usually increases the yield very materially.

Pastures which are infested with rag-weeds can be materially benefited by mowing the weeds late this month before the seeds have matured. Comparatively few weeds will ripen seeds if this is done.

Destroy noxious weeds along the roadside. Many of them are distributed and allowed to seed there and soon get out on the adjoining farms. District road supervisors should see that they are not allowed to mature seed.

The mower, binder and rake which have stood outside since harvest time last year are in poor condition and will need mending or will break down when you are busy. Lumber for making machinery sheds is cheaper than machines. —Orange Judd Farmer.

During the dog-day season, the drain of nervous and vital energy may be counteracted by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In purifying the blood it acts as a superb corrective and tonic, and enables the system to defy malarial and other climatic influences.

The Elevated railroad runs to Fair in 20 minutes, and the station is one-third mile distant. Write what rooms you wish and when.

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,

12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. It one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-Saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the written word, and preaches with an earnestness born of conviction.

HOME AND HEALTH.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

The habit of eating just before going to bed is a bad one, and causes troubled sleep, bad dreams and nightmare.

All cannot have the advice of an experienced hygienic physician, when sick; but those who can should not be slow to avail themselves of the privilege.

The bald spot which so many have on the top of the head is caused by overheating the head, or by doing the hair up so as to strain the roots of the hair. The hair should be well brushed daily and washed once a month. Do not keep it done up at night if you want it to remain luxuriant.

A really good complexion is impossible while one is suffering from a bad liver. So the best way to improve a red or pimpled countenance, is not to cover the skin with cosmetics, or even to apply various outward remedies, but to correct the diet, bathe frequently, dress loosely, take as much out-of-door exercise as possible, and so cleanse the springs of the being, and the natural result will be a clear and beautiful complexion.

Do not use your eyes to very strong artificial light if you wish to retain your eyesight. Electric and gas lights have injured more eyes than were ever harmed by the lack of illuminating agents in the past years. Blindness, and weak, and near-sighted eyes are vastly in the increase. All the bad habits of society help spoil the eyes, but too strong light is doubtless the most mischievous. Moderate your lights, use shades, and give your eyes a rest when they feel weary.

The wide leather belts, worn so much now, are very unhealthy; especially when worn tight. The internal organs are injured by having a tight, hard belt around them, and it is a very frequent cause of dilation of the stomach, a common and distressing complaint. Military officers frequently suffer from the effects of their belts, to which a heavy sword is often attached. The kidneys are propped up as well as the stomach dilated by this very unwise habit. No belts should be worn that are at all thick or stiff.

Sick-Headache yields to BEECHAM'S PILLS.

THE WORLD'S CONGRESS, NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

OCTOBER 5TH, AT 2 AND 7:30 P. M.

The uncertainties respecting the Sabbath opening of the World's Columbian Exposition have delayed announcement respecting our Congress. While there is still a measure of doubt, it now seems certain that the authorities desire to close on the Lord's day, and there is reason to believe that they will succeed in their wish. We are accordingly arranging for the meeting to be held, God willing, in the Art Hall, on the Lake Front, at the time above indicated. We desire that all our friends pray that the way may be opened by the Holy Spirit for the most effective gathering yet held on this question. We also request that all who can plan to visit the Exposition in early October should do so that they may be with us on the afternoon and evening of the 5th.

For the Committee,

CHARLES A. BLANCHARD, Ch'n.

The Pacific Coast Anti-secrecy Convention is to be held at Canby, Oregon, August 15, 16. Rev. P. B. Williams, the efficient secretary on the coast, has charge of all arrangements. Rev. D. N. McInturff, D.D., of Eugene, will speak on the question of Prohibition; Rev. Roland D. Grant, D.D., on the Evils of Secret Societies. Rev. M. S. Riddle, Woodburn, Ore., gives his views of "Secret Societies from the Standpoint of a Member." Other speakers are named.

The total paid admissions of adults to the World's Fair grounds, last Sunday, were 15,381; of children, 685; in all, 16,066. Those admitted on passes—employees, exhibitors, etc.—

were 17,881. Grand total, only 33,447. Exhibits were for the most part closed or covered. All but one or two of the State buildings were locked up; the restaurants and most of the other concessionaries were shut to the public. It was a dull, profitless day on the grounds.

Next Monday there will assemble at the Memorial Art Palace, on the Lake Front in this city, a Peace Congress, which is to remain in session one week. The topics to be discussed, and the number of allotted speakers, can hardly fail to make its sessions one of the most interesting of the World's Fair Auxiliary Congresses.

Times are hard, if we may judge from the suspension of great industrial enterprises. But strikes and quarrels with employers on minor matters will not tend to mend the financial and commercial situation. Honest industry at living wages is better than a whole summer of voluntary idleness and no income to meet expenses.

The August number of the Voice of Masonry prints an oration by a Grand Orator of the fraternity, of which it says editorially: "There are expressions in this oration which should not be accepted as correct; and it is hoped that the readers of same will discover and reject them." Judging by this extract from this oration and an editorial in the same number of this magazine, entitled "Masonry is for Time and Eternity," the reader will at once see why the editor does not endorse the orator. The latter says: "There is no Christ in Ancient Craft Masonry. It simply seeks to fit a man for time, and leaves his welfare for eternity to that grander, nobler and holier institution, the church of Christ. It does not teach piety but morality." . . . "No man ever did, or ever will, get to heaven on Masonry." The wonder is that the Voice of Masonry ever admitted this oration into its pages.

A cherished friend objects to the views of ex-Consul-General New, recently published in the Cynosure, respecting Mr. Gladstone and home rule in Ireland. He especially dissents from Mr. New's estimate of Mr. Gladstone, whom he describes as "selfish and vain" and whose arduous labors in behalf of Ireland are attributed to a desire to "gratify his ambition," which certainly ought to be satisfied with the high honors which he now enjoys. "Let us remember," continues our friend, "that Gladstone is 83 years of age—a period when vanity and ambition have generally lost their charms; and all should know that his pen, even yet, amid his onerous duties, is often used in the defense of truth and righteousness. To those who know what home rule is in Canada, in Australia, and in each single State of this Union, it is evident that Mr. New has overdrawn his statement, as you suggest." Certainly Mr. Gladstone is not easily overrated as a statesman or philanthropist.

"Higher criticism," not satisfied with attacking the Christian's faith in his Bible, has now begun an assault upon his prayers. A journal, whose editor ought to know better, makes this statement:

The word "Amen" does not mean "Let it be so." In that case the word would simply be an additional prayer. "Amen" means "It shall be so".

Webster's International Dictionary defines "Amen": "An expression used at the end of prayers, and meaning 'so be it'. At the end of a creed it is a solemn asseveration of belief. When it introduces a declaration, it is equivalent to truly, verily. . . . To say Amen to is to approve warmly, to concur in heartily or emphatically, to ratify, as 'I say Amen to all.'" The right use of the word is found in Psalm 16:48: "Let all the people say Amen"—thus earnestly sanctioning the praise expressed in the previous context.

We have always believed, however, that is the best of our prayers to which the Lord can say Amen—as he only has the right to say—"It shall be so."

A number of the friends of the free coinage of silver met in convention in this city, a few days ago, to give expression to their respective views upon the present financial situation. Most of the delegates seemed to sustain the merits of the Sherman silver law, which requires the purchase of a stipulated amount of silver bullion per month for coinage, and used every argument in its favor that can be urged. Congress met on Monday of this week to discuss this and similar problems that touch the needs of the hour. What will be the result of this special session it is too soon to predict; but the silver miners and their political allies will leave nothing undone to perpetuate the existing laws relating to silver coinage.

Quoting from Macoy's Encyclopædia and Dictionary of Freemasonry (Masonic authority), in the Cynosure for July 20, we stated, when speaking of the Scottish Rite 33-degree "Sovereign Grand Inspector-General," that "the number of Inspectors in a kingdom or republic must not exceed nine". Attention having been called to this as a discrepancy, we turn to Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry (another Masonic authority), p. 770, where we find the following: "On their first organization the supreme councils" (composed of Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General) "were limited to nine members each. That rule continued to be enforced in the Mother Council" (United States, 1801) "until the year 1859, when the number was increased to thirty-three". Sixteen of these are officers in the Supreme Council; the most puissant of whom is the "Sovereign Grand Commander," the highest in authority in the Scottish Rite—whose word is law, and whom his council is bound to "reverently regard" under a torturing obligation, confirmed by drinking wine out of a human skull.

THE MOTHER OF MASONRY.

The most depraved religions of history were the kindred nature-worships of the ancient Semitic nations of Asia Minor and the contiguous Egyptians. Chief among these in depravity was that of the Phœnicians, who corrupted and paved the way for the downfall of the Jews. The descendants of the votaries of these religions have now practically disappeared from the earth except the Arabians, and they have turned to the still vicious Mohammedanism. Rawlinson, in describing the Phœnician religion, cites the following account by an able scholar and writer—Dr. Dollenger—"the least sensational of the historians of religion," as justly and moderately drawn. It is a fit warning to Masons and their jacks, the nature-worshippers of the present day, who are teaching the same doctrines by symbols, precepts, and traveling the same road to ruin.

"In earlier times Baal had been worshiped without an image in Tyre and its colonies; but for a long time now his worship had grown into an idolatry of the most wanton character, directed by a numerous priesthood, who had their headquarters at Tyre. . . . His statue rode upon bulls, for the bull was the symbol of generative power; and he was also represented with bunches of grapes and pomegranates in his hands. As the people of (Western) Asia distinguished, properly speaking, only two deities of nature, a male and a female, so Baal was of an elemental and sidereal character at once. As the former, he was god of the creative power, bringing all things to life everywhere, and, in particular, god of fire; but he was sun-god, besides, and as such, to human lineaments, he added the crown of rays about the head peculiar to this god. In the one quality as well as to the other he was represented at the same time as sovereign of the heavens (Baal-samen), and of the earth by him impregnated. . . . The Canaanitish Moloch (king) was not essentially different from Baal, but the same god in his terrible and destroying aspect, the god of consuming fire, the burning sun, who smites the land with unfruitfulness and pestilence, dries up the springs and begets poisonous winds. When the prophet says (Jer. 32:35), 'Such as in the valley of Ben-Hinnom built high places of Baal, to lead their sons and daughters through the fire of Moloch;' and again, 'The Jews had built high places to Baal, to burn their children by fire as a burnt-offering to Baal' (chap. 19:5) there is no mistaking the essential identity of the two. Besides the incense consumed in his honor, bulls also were sacrificed to Baal, and probably horses, too; the Persians, at least, sacrificed the latter to their sun-god. But the principal sacrifice was children. This horrible custom was grounded in part on the notion that children were the dearest possession of their parents, and, in part, that, as pure and innocent beings, they were the offerings of atonement most certain to pacify the anger of the deity; and further, that the god of whose essence the generative power of nature was, had a just title to that which was begotten of man, and to the surrender of their children's lives. The sacrifices were consumed by fire; the life given by the fire-god he should also take back again by the flames which destroy being. The Rabbinical description of the image of Moloch, that it was a human figure with a bull's head and outstretched arms, is confirmed by the account which Diodorus gives of the Carthaginian Kronos or Moloch. The image of metal was made hot by a fire kindled within it; and the children, laid in its arms, rolled from thence into the fiery lap below. Voluntary offering on the part of the parents was essential to the success of the sacrifice; even the first-born, nay, the only child of the family was given up. The parents stopped the cries of their children by fondling and kissing them, for the victims ought not to weep; and the sound of complaint was drowned in the din of flutes and kettle-drums. Mothers, according to Plutarch, stood by without tears or sobs; if they wept or sobbed they lost the honor of the act, and their children were sacrificed notwithstanding. Such sacrifices took place either annually on an appointed day, or before great enterprises, or on the occasion of public calamities, to appease the wrath of the god. The primitive custom is traceable in the myth of Theseus and the Minotaur. The Cretan monster, with human body and bull's head, to whom young men and maidens were sacrificed, was the Moloch who had come from Phœnicia, and the overcoming of him by Theseus was the destruction of the bloody rite. Thus, too, the rape of Europa into Crete from Phœnicia, through means of the bull, was a symbol of the colonization of that island by Phœnicians. The bull on which Europa sat was the sun-god, and she, herself, the moon-goddess, Astarte.

"Another form of Baal was Melkarth, 'the city king,' tutelary god of the city of Tyre, whose worship was carried far and wide by the colonies, proceeding thence to the shores of the Mediterranean. This protector of Tyre was the Phœnician Hercules, god alike of sun and fire (whence a perpetual light was kept upon the altar), a racing and hero-leader of the people's expeditions. From him have the Asiatic features of the contest with the lion, the self-immolation by fire on the pile, and others, passed over into the Greek Saga of Heracles. . . .

"In the Astarte of the western Asiatics we recognize that great nature-goddess, standing by Baal's side, regent of the stars, queen of heaven, and goddess of the moon, the mother of life, and goddess of women's fecundity. Under the name of Astarte she was the guardian goddess of Sidon, and not essentially distinct from the Baaltis of Byblus, and Urania of Ascalon. The Greeks and Romans sometimes take her for Juno, as she was the supreme female divinity of the Asiatics; sometimes for Aphrodite, on account of the licentious character of the worship sacred to her; and again, for Selene (Luna), for she was pictured as the goddess of the moon, with horns, representing the lunar crescent.

"As highest goddess, or queen of heaven, Astarte was (as above observed) accounted by the Greeks as Hera (Juno); yet they also recognized in her something of Athene, Aphrodite, Selene, Repea, Artemis, Nemesis and the Moirai. In fact, she came nearest to the Phrygian Cybele. Sceptre and spindle in hand, she wore rays and a mural crown on her head, and the girdle, too, an ornament only beseeeming Aphrodite-Itrania. Her golden statue rode next to that of Baal-Zeus, in a chariot drawn by lions; a precious stone, placed upon her head, illuminated the whole temple at night. She was considered as one with Atergahs or Dercetey, who was honored under the form of a fish on the coasts of the Philistines. A combined worship was offered to the two, Baal and the goddess. Their temple at Apheka was so exceedingly rich that Crassus spent several days in weighing all the gold and silver vessels and precious things that were contained in it. These gifts were the combined offerings of Arabia, Babylonia, Assyria, Phœnicia, Cilicia and Cappadocia, and therefore of all the people of the Semitic tongue. In the court of the temple there were sacred beasts in a tame state in great numbers, and also a pond containing holy fish. Priests and temple ministers were present in such numbers that Lucian counted above three hundred employed in one sacrifice; besides these there were troops of flute players, Galli, and women frenzied with inspiration. At the spring festival, called by some 'the brand feast,' by others, 'the feast of torches,' which was attended by streams of visitors from every country, huge trees were burnt with the offering suspended on them. Even children were sacrificed; they were put into a leathern bag and thrown the whole height of the temple to the bottom, with the shocking expression that they were calves, and not children. In the fore-court stood two gigantic phalli. To the exciting din of drums, flutes and inspired songs, the Galli cut themselves on the arms; and the effect of this act, and of the music accompanying it, was so strong upon mere spectators, that all their bodily and mental powers were thrown into a tumult of excitement; and they, too, seized by the desire to lacerate themselves, inflicted wounds upon their bodies by means of potsherds lying ready for the purpose. Thereupon they ran bleeding through the city and received from the inhabitants a woman's attire. Not chastity, but barrenness, was intended by this act, whereby the Galli only desired to be like their goddess. The relation which they thenceforward occupied towards women was regarded as a holy thing, and was generally tolerated.

"Thus terrible were the practices which Phœnicia, in Eth-Baal's time, introduced among her southern neighbors (the Jews), by whom they had been previously, if not absolutely, unknown, at least indulged in rarely and in the deepest secrecy. Under Ahab and his sons, Ahaziah and Jehoram, Baal worship became the state religion of Samaria; under Athaliah it was for a time the state religion of Judah. The pure cult of Judaism—the one hope of the world—contracted a well-nigh indelible stain from the proselytizing efforts of Jezebel and Athaliah and their furious persecutions; the heavenly light passed under a thick cloud; and it required prolonged convulsions through the whole of the East, the downfall of Israel and Judah, and the long purgation of the captivity, to undo the effects brought about 'with a light heart' by a royal bigot, and his cruel daughter and grand-daughter."

Such was the religion from which Masonry derives its origin or example. But why was it chosen as a paragon? Was it in expectation that purity might come from corruption, or that like would produce like, according to the law of nature? That the modern prototype does not surpass the original in virtue or benefit is proved by every-day occurrences published in the Cynosure; by Levington's "Key to Masonry," (out of print), for the incipient stages of Masonry; the "Key to Masonry" in the last edition of "My Experiences with Secret Societies" for the present stages; and "Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry," which alone contains necessary and significant auxiliary degrees.

The Pope, with knowledge gained from the confessional, in his Encyclical against Freemasonry accuses them of "trying to revive, after eighteen centuries, the manners and institutions of paganism," and of "trying to pull down the foundations of morality and become co-operators of those who, like some others, would like to see that become lawful which they like," and adds that "it is nothing but to urge mankind into the most abject and ignominious degradation." All facts accord and form an indisputable chain of evidence.

SOWING AND REAPING.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The Apostle Paul said with emphasis: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

I. Reaping follows sowing as effect follows cause.—The seed has a germ-cell. Contact with the soil causes that life to put itself forth and incorporate other substances, adding cell to cell, until the limit of its life has been reached. Satan sowed the seed of sin and depravity in the hearts of our first parents. Every human being born into the world ever since is a new cell to the race of fallen humanity. Jesus Christ is the germ-cell of Christianity. Every convert is a new life-cell added. On Pentecost 3,000 were added. To-day there are 450,000,000. This process will go on until all have been incorporated in the body of Christ. Where there has been sowing there must be reaping. A gossiping woman was reproved by her bishop. He requested her to take a cup of thistle-seeds and scatter them along the highway. Then he asked her to go and gather them up; but she protested that that was impossible. So, he said, it is impossible for you to recall your idle words. Dr. Taylor said: "You may as well think of staying an avalanche midway in its descent from the Alpine ridge, so saving the village in the valley from destruction, or of stopping the bullet midway in its flight from the musket to the heart of him who will be destroyed by it as to think of arresting the consequences of the evil which you once have done. A man, let us suppose, has written an infidel book, or a book whose sole design was to destroy the purity and corrupt the modesty of youth. In course of time, however, he becomes himself a convert to the Christian faith, and has the assurance that all his sins, the writing of the book among the rest, are forgiven. But he cannot recall the past. He cannot take back that book. It has circulated, it may be, by thousands. Its poison has gone into many hearts. It has made many skeptics, who are living and propagating its abominable errors; or it has tainted many souls, who are doing their very utmost to carry out its principles and destroy the sanctity of our home-life and the solemnity of the marriage vow. Yet its author cannot put a stop to all this. The thing has gone from him and is now no more under his control. Or, again, one gathers around him a host of companions, who are largely moulded by his influence. He teaches them intemperance. He introduces them into haunts of sensuality and impurity. He shakes their faith in the Word of God and leads them on to glory in their shame. But after awhile he is taken, in God's providence, to some other city, where Jesus lays hold of him by his grace and brings him to his feet. He is converted, he is forgiven, he is himself renewed and sanctified; but he cannot undo the mischief of his former evil influence. That is working still."

II. The harvest is like the sowing.—"Men do not gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles." Like produces like. By the grafting process the crab may be made to bear a luscious apple. But the seed always produces fruit after its kind. Wheat and tares grew in the field after the husbandman and his enemy had sowed the seed. The young man who sows his wild oats will reap the harvest. The upright shall not go unrewarded. Abel's works were good; Cain's were evil. One was a martyr for truth; the other a murderer. Two young men start out with equal prospects and equally equipped. One is honest, temperate, industrious; the other dishonest, intemperate and trifling. The first rises till he is the head of a great business; the second ends his inglorious career in the workhouse. Two young men go through college with equal honors. They receive the unstinted praises of their friends in the theological seminary. As they enter the ministry their gifts and intellectual furniture are the same. But in the work one is irascible, suspicious and overbearing; the other is kind, confiding and generous. Though equally industrious and capable, the one loses and the other gains friends daily. The one forfeits the goodwill of his constituents and is retired as a useless and unprofitable servant; the other gains new friends and grapples the old ones with hooks of steel, and is promoted. Two professing Christians are prospered in business. They both add house to house and field to field. One yields to the grasping spirit. He lessens his contributions to the Lord's cause. He withdraws his hand and shuts his eyes against his needy brother. He becomes a victim of covetousness. The other cultivates the grace of liberality, which is twice blessed—blessing him that gives and him that takes. He daily becomes like the Giver of all good. A. T. Stewart built a gigantic fortune on the blood and tears of the poor. His body had no sepulcher and his property has been devoured by the scavengers of the legal profession. Peabody gathered a fortune by doing good, and he used it in doing good. "The memory of the just is blessed; but the name of the wicked shall rot."

The interval between the transgression and its penalty may be long, but it will surely come. "Because sentence against an evil deed is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the children of men is set in them to do wickedly." God called Abraham, and his seed are to this day a separated people. But the calf that Aaron made was the seed of idolatry, that bore fruit all through the 400 years of the judges. The calf that Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, set up gave an idolatrous cast to all the after-history of Israel, and wrought the nation's deportation in the Babylonian captivity. After the return they kept God's law, and the shouts of the vintage and harvest-home resounded through the land. But they rejected the Messiah, and for 1,800 years the chief products of the soil are thistles and briars and weeds; the chief animals fleas, bedbugs and scavenger dogs; and the chief people wild Arabs and Bedouins. Scotland has had the Bible for 300 years, and though a rocky island, has been made a fruitful garden. Spain has been without the Bible for three centuries, and, though having far greater natural resources, is a barren wilderness and an effete kingdom. Dr. Morris carried the Gospel to China in 1807, and there are now 50,000 native communicants. But England carried opium there, and hundreds of thousands of Chinese are slaves to the terrible opium habit. Dr. Moffat carried the Gospel to Africa, and Livingstone and Stanley have opened the way to the Congo and the heart of the dark continent. But the rum that was carried there, along with the missionaries, has destroyed more souls than the Gospel has saved. France revoked the edict of Nantes and expelled 400,000 Huguenots. In this she slit her veins and let out her best blood. The bad blood remaining produced the Reign of Terror. Robespierre and the mountain party set up a strumpet as a fitting goddess for the reasonable to worship. Since then the nude in art and licentious literature have grown. The riots in Paris, occasioned by the collision between the students and the police, are the fruits. The deism of Voltaire was the bomb-shell with lighted fuse in the powder magazine, causing the explosion of the Reign of Terror. Then deism went to the German universities and produced the "higher criticism". This came to America and appeared in the heresy of Briggs in Union Theological Seminary and the vagaries of Smith in Lane, which have so disturbed the Presbyterian church. But the worship of the lodge is deistic, and that has invaded the church. If the lodge remains in the church it will produce in them a French Revolution.

In 1620 the Mayflower brought freedom to New England. At the same time the Dutch vessel brought slavery to the James river. Slavery grew in the South and freedom in the North for two hundred and fifty years. The South was blighted; the North was blessed. The fruit of slavery was the war of the Rebellion. "If Sir John Hawkins, in the day when he went Negro hunting on the coast of Africa, could have foreseen Gettysburg he would sooner that his ship and all on board had gone to the bottom than that he should have done any thing to produce such terrible results."

III. The harvest is more abundant than the sowing.—One grain of wheat will produce a hundred. One Canada thistle will soon fill a field. In the fable, the man who sowed dragons' teeth soon had a harvest of armed men. If we sow to the flesh we reap corruption; if we sow to the Spirit we reap life everlasting. If we sow to the wind we reap the whirlwind. Ignatius Loyola, in the cave of Mauresa, in Spain, conceived the scheme which resulted in the organization of the Society of Jesus in 1540, and to-day a network of Jesuitical organizations covers the new and old world, a standing menace to our civil and religious liberties. In 1717 Freemasonry was organized in London. The Jesuits are the authors of the rites of the lodge. This is history. Masonry is a child of Jesuitry. The Mafia of New Orleans is the unhallowed offspring of Jesuitry; the Clan-na-gael of Chicago is its bastard child. The Chaldean army invading the land of Israel was not so great a danger as Jesuitry in our midst. "The people love to have it so, but what will ye do in the end thereof?" Rev. Wm. Carey was not the father of foreign missions; but he organized the mission work. To-day there are 300 foreign missionary societies. They are led by King Jesus. He is observing the military maxims: "Seize the strong centers of the enemy;" "Hold the important outposts of the enemy;" "Keep an open line of communication between the centers and outposts." England and America are the strong centers. They control the world. They are Christ's. China, Japan, India, the Congo, the Sandwich Islands, are the important outposts. Christ is taking these. Direct and speedy communication is kept up between London and Calcutta, New York and Hong Kong, Washington and Honolulu. Christ will soon have the world in his kingdom of grace.

One hundred and four years ago this nation adopted a secular Constitution. Sabbath-breaking, intemperance, speedy divorce, anarchy and political corruption are the harvest. Twenty-nine years ago the National Reform Association was organized to maintain national Christianity and have it embodied in our fundamental law. Disfranchising the members of the Endowment House, the law that ends the Louisiana lottery when its charter expires, Congress decreeing that the gates of the World's Fair shall be closed on Sabbath and the sentiment of the people compelling the directors to respect it, and the affirmation of the Supreme Court of the United States that "this is a Christian nation," indicate that the tide is rising. The Constitution and administration of our government will yet be made conformable to God's law. The King of kings will be honored in our land. Our nation will then be an object lesson for all nations. "The kingdoms of this world will be the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."

Boston, July 24, 1893.

THE MOODY INSTITUTE.

The training school for Christian men and women over which Mr. Moody presides, located near the corner of Chicago and LaSalle avenues, is a positive force for good.

The object of this Institute is not alone to discover, encourage and develop new material having gifts for Christian work, but to revamp and stimulate others long in the service to greater activity and efficiency.

For more than a quarter of a century, or ever since the great evangelist commenced his life-work, he has prayed not only for a multiplication of laborers in the harvest, but has had a profound and deepening conviction that something should be done for the practical qualification of these workers.

With many excellent theological seminaries for equipping young men for the ministry, Mr. Moody has felt that these schools were deficient, in that they did not instruct their students how to use to best advantage their furnishings. To supply this deficiency—and not to antagonize the seminaries—was organized the Chicago Evangelistic Society, under whose auspices is conducted this school for training men and women for practical Christian work, whether it be the ministry of the Word, singing the Gospel, missionary work at home or abroad, superintending the Sunday-school, or other Christian service.

In September, 1889, the Institute was inaugurated, with buildings of its own, at 226 and 228 LaSalle avenue, for the women's department, followed by the completion and dedication of the men's department in January, 1890. Already these buildings have been enlarged and are yet insufficient for the growing demand for the advantages here furnished.

Beyond a superintendent for each department, with the necessary number of music instructors, the school has no regular corps of teachers. The chairs of mere "theological dogmas," and "prosy platitudes," in this Institute, have had to give way for the department of "successful expedients."

Mr. Moody's unlimited acquaintance on both sides of the water, and his relations to the most successful workers and instructors, enable him to keep the school well supplied with the greatest variety of fresh practical instruction. Among the many who have thus far been selected to teach and lecture before the classes are Rev. A. T. Pierson, who was called to the pulpit of Mr. Spurgeon just before and subsequent to his death; Professors Morehead and White of Xenia, Ohio; Dr. Gordon, of Boston; Dr. Smith, of Edinburgh; Pasteur Theodore Monod, of Paris; Dr. Pierson, of North Carolina; Rev. John McNeill, of Scotland, and many others of equal note; while Superintendent Torrey and Mr. Moody hold themselves in constant reserve.

The instruction to men and women in common is given largely in the forenoons, that the afternoons may be devoted to study, visitation and practical Christian work. As the successful teacher of botany or geology would accompany his class to the fields of flowers or rocks, to demonstrate in practice what has been acquired in theory, so do these teachers go with their pupils to the meetings held in the churches, theatres, halls, tents, etc., to show them the most successful methods of soul fishing. Music is made an important factor in all this preparatory work, and the services of the most competent teachers of vocal and instrumental music have been secured, that all with natural tastes and talents for music may be thoroughly equipped as leaders.

There is at present time at the Institute a galaxy of well-known musicians, authors, instructors, evangelistic singers, etc., consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Prof. McGranahan; Mrs. Pierson, Prof. W. Coffin, Dr. Towner, Mr. Stebbins, Mr. Burke, Mr. Jacobs, Mr. E. C. Miller, and several others. To assist in the conduct of the evangelistic meetings held throughout the city there is employed the Oberlin Male Quartette; the Kimball, also from Oberlin; the Institute Male Quartette, and the Torrey; while the Institute is capable of improvising any number of male or mixed quartettes, duets or solos. The congregational singing in the Institute lecture-room is most soul-stirring and inspiring. All the instruction given in the Institute, whether musical or religious, is free to any who care to receive it.

The programs of meetings held under the auspices of the Institute, in different parts of the city, each week, and which may be obtained at the Institute, will serve as a general outline of what it purposes doing. J. M. HITCHCOCK.

A NEW MASONIC WOMAN'S LODGE.

If determined effort and hard work on her part can accomplish it, Mrs. Erna Pritzker, wife of Dr. L. J. Pritzker, will have a woman's Masonic lodge here in a very short time.

Mrs. Pritzker's husband's office is at 509 South Jefferson street, and there Mrs. Pritzker can be found a great deal of the time. She is a German, intelligent and entertaining, and a good conversationalist. She is firmly imbued with the idea that she can start a Masonic lodge entirely for women in this city. She says she has already partly procured the consent of about ten or twelve ladies to co-operate with her in this. She must, however, have twenty before they can be installed. She is working hard to make up this number, and hopes to soon be able to do so.

Should Mrs. Pritzker succeed in organizing the woman's lodge here, it will be the first and only one of its kind in this country. There are two Masonic lodges composed entirely of women in Spain—one in Seville and the other in Madrid. There are also several of the same kind in France, but in no other countries. The lodges in Spain and France have been very successful, and the members own their own hospitals and lodge halls and are free from all debts. Princesses and women from the best and noblest families in Spain belong to them.

A letter was received by a prominent Mason, who lives in New York, but is now in this city, from the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Spain, in which he states that women lodges should be organized in this country. They would be a great factor for good, the letter says, and the women should do all they could to start the work.

Encouraged by this, Mrs. Pritzker has been working hard to organize a lodge. She has the hearty co-operation of Emilio J. M. Nagues Guerrero of Spain, who is in Chicago at present. Mr. Guerrero is one of the highest Masons in Spain. He is the delegate to the Masonic congress, which convenes in this city August 14, from Spain, Great Britain and Ireland, Italy and Egypt. Should the lodge be established before August 14, Jacques Ochs, of New York, who is high in Masonry, will install it.

The woman's lodge will pay a stated sum into the treasury each month, which will be used to succor poor or friendless people who need it. The organization will be of a purely benevolent character.

The order of the Eastern Star, which is composed entirely of ladies, has no connection with Masonry, although many believe it has. This order was at one time a branch of the Masonic lodge, but now it is entirely separate and distinct and its principles and the laws governing it are different. There are many of these lodges in this country.

Mrs. Pritzker is handicapped in her work to some extent by the fact that she is not well acquainted with many women in this city. She would like to have any woman who would like to join to call on her and help her with the work, and ask others to join.—Chicago Mail, July 29.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The sunny and the shady side.—The Maharajah.—The irresponsibility of the press.—A modern Samson.—The smokers' victory.—Another lodge pastor in trouble.—A New England Catholic pilgrimage.

No expression is more common, at least in the newspapers—writers of established reputation generally avoid it as shopworn—than the "sunny" or the "shady side of life," applied in the former case to people under forty-five, and in the latter to those who are nearing or have crossed the half-century line. But it is too heathenish a way of looking at existence to be adopted by a Christian, whose life, like a peach on a garden wall, ought to show a more and more "sunny side" to the world until death plucks it. Whether we are thirty or ninety, it is proof sufficient that we are on life's shady side where the sunshine does not touch or but feebly glints on us, if our souls still retain the green and acrid juices of early selfishness, or have shrivelled up in the east wind of worldly cares instead of ripening for their eternal destiny under the slow bitter-sweet discipline of the passing years.

And why do we talk of the "old times," when we really mean the new times, inasmuch as they were nearer the beginning than our own? Here is another popular mistake, but one that I am afraid has grown too venerable by long usage ever to be ousted from its place in common language. I suppose the Egyptians, when they were building the pyramids, talked of the old days, and dreamed not that they were living in the very youth of the world before

"Six thousand years had made her heart a-cold."

Boston does not entertain a real live Maharajah every day; so the newspapers at the Hub may be pardoned for giving him and his party more space in their columns than his actual importance, measured from an Occidental standpoint, would seem to warrant. Baron Hirsch, who, report says, is going to visit us, fills a much larger space in the world's eye than the many-wived and beturbaned Jajajit Singh, but it is more than likely that there will not be as much said about him. Perhaps, after all, what keeps Emperor William and other royal notabilities from visiting the World's Fair is a very reasonable horror of falling into the clutches of "the four hundred." If they ever see American newspapers, I am sure I have hit on the right reason.

"Have thin Cleveland did not go fishing," was the wonderful "news" recently wired from Gray Gables to an interested, or supposed to be interested, public. The Associated Press must be decidedly hard up for matter when it is obliged to descend to such petty personalities—or worse; for the silly lie that it lately sent broadcast over the country, that Miss Borden had gone to Taunton and delivered herself up to the authorities, had all the malice of the pit in it; as also another press dispatch which reports her as walking the streets "unconcernedly," while failing to state any earthly reason why she should walk otherwise than unconcernedly. Now that she has been so triumphantly acquitted, one would think that poor Miss Borden, tried longer and more hardly, perhaps, than any other woman in Massachusetts since the days of the Salem witchcraft, might be allowed at least the privilege of walking through the streets of Fall River like any other citizen, without being made the subject of newspaper comment.

Sandow, the Prussian athlete, who has just completed his engagement in this city, must give, to all who have seen him bend a four-inch iron pipe-stem double, and then bend it back, and break heavy chains at a single blow, a more vivid idea of the Biblical Samson carrying off the gates of Gaza and pulling down the pillars of the Philistine amphitheatre to overwhelm in a common destruction himself and his country's enemies, than they ever possessed before. In ancient days, when wars were decided by the physical strength of the combatants, Sandow would have been "a mighty man of renown," and perhaps figured on the page of history as the founder of some royal dynasty. But now he is simply a "performer" who entertains the thoughtless crowd with his marvellous feats. Here is one instance of the effect of "environment," the word that Prof. Drummond has made so fashionable, on a man's life and career.

The smokers have won the victory, and people who neither want to smoke themselves, nor be smoked, must boycott the West End cars and walk, or else submit with what grace they can to the decision of the directors. The personal rights of the smoking minority must on no account be invaded; as for the rights of the non-smoking majority, that is evidently not worth a minute's consideration in the eyes of the West End company, many of whom, it is to be presumed, are actuated by a touch of "fellow-feeling," being fond of the weed themselves. The protest against allowing smokers to render more than half the seats unfit to be used by ladies, children and decent men, was signed by 5,200 names, including among them many well-known in lines of philanthropy and reform, ministers and leaders in the W. C. T. U. The smokers took alarm at this, realizing that if they did not bestir themselves, culture and brains might win the day for decency, and led by the Record, a scurrilous little sheet, began to get up counterpetitions, one of which was signed by nearly all the city hall officials. This tells the story.

The tongue of scandal is busy with the name of another Congregational pastor—this time of Rev. N. B. Thomson, of Brocton, Mass., who stands accused of sustaining improper relations with a lady of his church. The church trial has not as yet settled the matter, though it has developed much heated and bitter feeling, and done incalculable injury to the cause of Christ. He is a man prominent among the Knights of Pythias, and the local lodge in Brocton is reported as "strongly in his favor." Until within a short time he was chaplain of the third uniformed regiment of K. of P. and wears the emblem conspicuously displayed while preaching. He is also a Freemason. If Mr. Thomson is another instance of "a lodge minister gone astray," he has plenty of brethren of the mystic tie who will leave no stone unturned to clear him.

That E. L. Gunn, whose defalcations are being mourned by so many Connecticut people, was an active church and Sunday-school worker, the papers are all very careful to tell us; but if he was also, as is very probable, high up in the Masonic order, they give no more information than in the case of the forger E. D. Winslow, who was even higher up than Pastor Lovering, whose intoxicated condition when conducting a marriage service, recently, made an unsavory theme for the newspapers. There is a deliberate and set malignancy in the way the papers run by lodgemen will hold up to view the church connections of forgers and embezzlers and be as silent as the grave on their relations to Masonry.

Don't say that superstition has died out in New England even if no one now believes in witches, or hangs an old horseshoe over the door as a protection against their evil spells. The people of St. Patrick's church, Roxbury, Mass., are intending to celebrate the feast of the Assumption by a pilgrimage to the miracle-working shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre, in Canada; and on August 14, a special train will leave Boston, containing over 500 American Catholic pilgrims to the new Mecca, to gaze upon—what? The astute priests of Rome probably know. Their poor dupes and Protestant outsiders don't; but some of the latter have irreverently said that the "relic" instead of bearing prima facie evidence that it is really a part of the wrist of St. Anne, looks a good deal more like part of the shinbone of a certain animal which shall be nameless. The Transcript quotes from the New York Sun a sneering allusion to Prof. Simms' late lecture in Music Hall, and the resolutions passed against Satolli, under the caption, "Are there more idiots in summer than in winter?" As the pilgrimage takes place in August, the Transcript, with its Jesuit staff, must not blame the intelligent reader, with this fact before his mind, if he is inclined to answer, "Yes."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2, 1893.

"Once a missionary, always a missionary." I heard an aged minister who has devoted the greater portion of a long life to missionary work abroad use those words many years ago, and they were recalled to mind by the announcement that Rev. Theodore S. Wynkoop, who has been pastor of a Washington church for something like fifteen years, had resigned to accept the secretaryship of the North India Bible Society, with headquarters at Allahabad, India. Mr. Wynkoop was a missionary in India for several years before he came to Washington. Other cases have at various times come under my observation, of the return to missionary work by individuals after long intervals spent in other branches of Christian work, and sometimes in secular work, and I am about convinced that "once a missionary, always a missionary" is almost, if not quite, absolutely true. Add "at heart," and it becomes, I believe, an absolute truth.

The opponents of the liquor saloon among our churches and temperance organizations have adopted a new plan of battle, which promises to produce better results than any of its numerous predecessors. Some time ago an anti-liquor league was organized, all opponents of the liquor traffic being invited to become members. One of the principal objects of this league is to see that no liquor license shall be granted, except in compliance with the law; and in order to carry out that plan the league investigates, through its own agents, one of whom is kept constantly on duty in the office where applications for license are filed, every application for a liquor license, particularly as to the location of the saloon and the identity and genuineness of signatures on the application of the residents on the square upon which it is located. The result has already become astonishing, having made it plain that fraud has been used to obtain licenses in numerous instances. It has been deemed best that the results of the work of the league shall be kept secret until the beginning of the new license year, November 1, next, when the new liquor law, enacted by the last Congress, will, in accordance with the decision of the local court, go into effect. There are excellent grounds for the belief that facts already in the possession of the league will be amply sufficient to prevent the renewal of the licenses of a large number of rum-sellers now doing business, even with the officials disposed to always give the liquor men the benefit of any doubt that may arise. The league proposes to point out to the officials every application upon which there is a violation of law, and to demand that it be rejected, no matter what influence may be behind the man who makes it.

The largest Sunday-school in Washington has thirty-five Chinese among its scholars, and on Monday last they gave a complimentary excursion and picnic to their teachers. The party went to the shore of Chesapeake Bay, and those who accompanied them say the amusements introduced by those Chinese for the enjoyment of their teachers were unique, and that the teachers were greatly pleased with everything except the music on Chinese instruments; they could not appreciate that.

While there is the widest possible divergence of opinion among Congressmen as to what financial legislation ought to be adopted by Congress, it is regarded as a hopeful sign that nearly all of them express the belief that an agreement will certainly be reached that will be approved by a majority, and which will be satisfactory to the country at large. What that agreement will be can only be guessed at just now, but the opinion appears to be gaining ground here that it will provide for the use of both gold and silver as money, slightly increasing the present ratio of 16 to 1, and many expect that authority for an issue of bonds, in the discretion of the President, will also be provided for. But the last is, in the opinion of your correspondent, very doubtful, because of the general prejudice, outside of strictly financial circles, against an increase in the public debt. The attempt will be made to confine the legislation of the extra session to finance, but the impression here is that it will not succeed. *

REFORM NEWS.

REV. H. L. KELLOGG AT ROCKFORD, ILL.

Rockford, Ill., July 31, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I spoke twice here yesterday, and have four more meetings this week and next; one in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, and the others in churches. Notices were read in the M. E. and Congregational churches, yesterday, of meetings opposed to secret societies.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

[From the Rockford (Ill.) Morning Republican, July 31.]

Rev. Henry L. Kellogg, of Chicago, late corresponding secretary of the National Christian Association, delivered a sermon on the position of the Swedish Lutheran church as to secret societies, at the Zion Lutheran church last evening. Mr. Kellogg is opposed to secret societies in any form, and he bitterly denounced them last evening. If Mr. Kellogg has correctly interpreted the Scriptures, a lot of mighty good men are aboard a through train, bound for eternal perdition. Among other things he said:

Taking his text from Matthew, chapter 4, verse 10: Christ's answer to Satan's last temptation on the mountain, he went on to show that the devil was still engaged in the dark and damning design of leading mankind to worship him in one form or another in preference to the true God. "It is written that thou shalt worship God only," was the Saviour's answer when Satan offered him the world if he would but bow down and worship him. So rock-rooted should be our faith to-day and so fortified should we be with reasons for the faith that is in us. Turning away from God is the worst offence man can be guilty of in the sight of him, and yet that is what those who join secret societies are doing. The altar in the lodge-room is but one of the devil's devices to supplant the altar of the church and to lure unsuspecting ones into worshipping other than the one true God. The directories of all large cities show an average proportion of about three altars in the lodge-rooms to one in the house of God. These societies are but snares of Satan to entrap the young men. They are but a verification of the Biblical prophecy that Satan comes as an angel of light under the guise of temperance, benevolence, insurance or good fellowship they come blinding the eyes of the unwary to their true character, and the speaker was glad to find that not only the Lutheran but many other evangelical churches were taking a decided stand against the growing evil.

On Friday evening, Aug. 4, Mr. Kellogg lectured at the Y. M. C. A. Hall in Rockford, on "Why Secret Societies Should be Avoided and Discouraged." He reviewed the murderous character of the Clan-na-Gael and the Farmers' Alliance, and the general injury wrought by the lodges upon the state, the church and the family, presenting the testimonies of many well-known and esteemed public men against secret societies.

THE EASTERN SECRETARY IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 3, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—This city is putting on new life, as the time for the re-assembling of Congress draws near, and the daily papers contain much speculation regarding the political and financial situation. The question under consideration is how may the present unsettled condition of affairs in the country be righted, so that the wheels of business and government may revolve as usual? Opinions regarding this question are as diverse as the reasoning of men. Nobody knows. Some think that they know. All may have an opinion. Some say that the Sherman bill is responsible. Probably as many are equally confident that it is not. The whole Democratic party is blamed by others. In my judgment, there is a combination of reasons.

I notice that people are much like sheep, in some respects. One is frightened; the alarm is given; and soon the whole flock is running. One joins a lodge, and a company follow. If men were as much interested in securing their treasures in heaven as they are here on earth, what meetings there would be!

The papers here report the future outlook bright. It would seem that without the assembling of Congress, and the repeal of the Sherman bill, public confidence is being restored. The gold in the Treasury increases every day. Crops are reported abundant. Whether the assembling of Congress will make things better remains a matter of speculation.

That the general prevalence of the Spirit of Christ in the hearts of men will make them better, I know; so for this I labor. God has blessed me in mission work here during the past two weeks. I have assisted in meetings that are being held every night working for the conversion of sinners. God has honored my preaching of his Word in the conversion of some. What a blessed privilege to be a co-worker with him who owns and controls the universe!

Last week, by request, I assisted in conducting the funeral services of one whose life was given to mission work among the lowly. Sister Charity Hall, as she was familiarly called, spent sixty years of life here, and has now passed "through the valley of the shadow of death." Being of Quaker descent, she was naturally opposed to all ostentatious display, and, of course, the lodge system. At the funeral several testimonies were given to her devoted Christian life. Her remains were conveyed to their former home, near Mount Pleasant, Ohio, for interment. Can it be said of us, as of this sister, that the world is better because we live?

I had planned work in New England, and but for the unexpected care of repairs on the N. C. A. building I should have been at the East now.

W. B. STODDARD.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

IS IT FAIR OR MANLY?

The church is assailed and the ministry censured most vehemently by lodge devotees, with only an occasional protest from the watchmen on Zion's walls. The "craft" assume the right of censorship, and use the largest liberty in making comparisons between church and lodge fidelity and charity, invariably placing the munificence of the mystic brotherhood above the brotherhood of Christ. The more violent have no scruples about calling the ministry mercenaries, dead-beats, hirelings and hypocrites, and church members bigoted, narrow-minded and fanatical, and yet these accusers of the brethren protest against the kindest criticism and grow "red in the face" over any unfavorable utterance from the pulpit. They call it persecution, a wanton or flagrant insult to the dignity of their venerable or benevolent orders, as if it was their sole prerogative to question the motives or impugn the integrity of men seeing things differently from what they do. This looks unfair, and unmanly.

To deny a man, or body of men, the right of self-defence, is cowardly, and to slander men because they express their honest convictions, is contemptible. The "untutored savage" scorns to scalp his enemy without giving him a chance to fight for his life; but the "Grand Sachem of Red Men" in Michigan hurled his "tomahawk" in merciless rage at the Bride of Christ when defending his "wigwam" at the N. C. A. World's Fair booth. One would naturally suppose that pseudo sachems, priests, prelates and princes in civilized states, would be as magnanimous in the treatment of their opponents as the native Modocs; yet it does not appear, in comparison, that bogus savages are more humane or respectful of the rights of others than are their swarthy brethren, whose rude manners and wild, weird performances they emulate, and so imperfectly imitate, in public demonstrations.

Are not such assaults identical with the request and protest of two "exceeding fierce" ones "coming out of the tombs," crying out "saying, what have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" Matt. 8: 29.

Casting out devils was a very unpopular business in the "country of the Gergesenes," so much so that the "whole city came out to meet Jesus," and "besought him that he would depart out of their coasts;" and since "there is nothing new under the sun" it is no marvel that reproving sin, or casting out devils in Christ's name, is not popular with men who reject "the man of God" and revel in gilded theaters, saloons and lodges. They wrest chapter 13 of 1 Corinthians to their own destruction, and while dwelling upon "long-suffering charity" they seem to overlook the "rejoiceth not in iniquity," and to have dropped the eight consecutive woes of Matt. 23 entirely out of their creed.

By what divine or human authority do men claim exemption from "meeting the measure which they measure to their fellows?" Such conduct is neither fair nor manly, in the judgment of your fellow laborer.

OTHER MATTERS.

I went in good season Sabbath morning, hoping to hear Bro. D. L. Moody in Haymarket Theater. I was unable, however, to gain admission, for the room was already packed and many were standing on the street. The crowds were anxious to hear the Gospel from the world-renowned evangelist, and were promised an opportunity at 12 o'clock if they went to the Empire Theater, near by. I did not seek this opportunity, but joined a little band gathered in a neighboring mission hall in the study of God's Word.

The interest in our exhibit at the Fair has grown apace during the week. The fine portraits of Joseph Cook, D. L. Moody, E. P. Goodwin, A. J. Gordon, Joseph E. Roy, Wendell Phillips, O. P. Gifford, Charles G. Finney, Howard Crosby, Charles Sumner, John Wesley, Col. Geo. R. Clarke, and others, attract attention, and thousands read their testimonies who knew nothing of their sentiments on secret societies, and never before heard of the N. C. A. or its work.

My work is largely to call attention to what others have said, distribute literature, answer questions and reply to such objections as are made by the craft. A much wiser and abler man than your agent would find ample opportunity to use all his knowledge and tact in meeting and repelling the charges of the opposition; but, doing the best I can, I have not as yet been driven to the wall. Perhaps I am not wise in my methods, but, in spite of all that I can do to keep men quiet, they will get excited and say very hard things about seceders, churches and ministers; and when I tell them frankly that I have never belonged to any of their clans they still persist in charging me with violating obligations and betraying secrets, etc.; assuming that free speech is a thing of the past and only to be exercised at present by free men and outsiders only by their permission.

It is sad to note the tenacity with which some men cling to their miserable clans, and the subtleties to which they resort. A few examples from scores of these may interest your readers.

A well-dressed, middle-aged man said: "I am a Presbyterian elder, and a Knight Templar." A little later he said: "The K. T. are doing more for the world than the church is. I put my lodge above my church. It is a higher degree in

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PROTEST FROM THE Y. P. S. C. E.

Boston, Mass., July 23, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church of Boston protests against President F. E. Clark and the Montreal International Convention of the Y. P. S. C. E., for bowing to Rome, as follows. The paper was offered by the pastor, Rev. J. M. Foster, and unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

"The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church of Boston protests against President Clark and the Montreal convention for bowing to Rome."

This paper was offered by the pastor, Rev. J. M. Foster, and unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

At the annual convention of the Y. P. S. C. E., held in Montreal, Can., this month, Rev. Sumantrao Vishnu Karmarkar, Bombay, India, said, in the course of his address: "There is a remarkable correspondence between Romish worship and Hindu worship. Romanism is but a new label on the old bottles of Paganism, containing the deadly poison of idolatry. Often the Hindus ask us, when seeing the Romish worship, 'What is the difference between Christianity and Hinduism?'

In India we have not only to contend with the hydra-headed monster of idolatry, but also the octopus of Romanism." The Romanists of the city were incensed at this, and those of the baser sort formed a mob and assayed to attack the convention. The militia interfered and protected the Endeavors. But what staggers our Protestant faith followed. President F. E. Clark arose and disavowed all responsibility for the attack made upon Romanism by the native convert from India, and the whole convention arose and cheered his sentiment.

It is also stated that some of the unions made application to the Bishop of Montreal for the privilege of lodging in the convents during the sessions—a request which he declined with thanks; therefore,

Resolved, That the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church of Boston express its fullest sympathy with Rev. Sumantrao Vishnu Karmarkar in his conflict with Roman idolatry in his native land, and our hearty endorsement of the sentiment he expressed respecting this ancient, hoary-headed foe of civil and religious liberty wherever found.

Resolved, That we express our surprise and indignation that President F. E. Clark and the whole convention should bow and apologize in such a patronizing way to this mother of harlots, whose hands are reeking with the blood of 60,000,000 martyrs, and whose false doctrines and corrupt practices make it the system of iniquity conceived by Satan for deluding mankind and leading them down to hell.

Resolved, That we disavow all complicity with those unions that asked to be lodged in a Roman Catholic convent. This was criminal indifference to the safety and purity of their members. In a convent Maria Monk was deflowered. In a convent Barbara Ubryk was incarcerated in a living tomb for twenty-one years because she resisted the criminal assaults of the father. In these convents thousands of women and girls are robbed of their virtue by unwedded priests. In these convents Protestant girls are held as victims until they bow and yield their bodies to superior force. "Spirited away from their homes and placed in durance vile, some of them have never been heard from again since they entered the walls of these institutions, the sole purpose of which is to make, out of the young and rising generation, converts to Rome."—(Rev. I. J. Lansing, D.D.)

Resolved, That these resolutions be published as our testimony

"For the cause that lacks assistance,
'Gainst the wrongs that need resistance."

A VOICE FROM RUSSIA.

LIBAN, Courland, Russia, }
July 3, 1893. }

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—For the sake of a noble cause, you are requested kindly to insert the following in your worthy paper:

The second congregation of Baptists in Liban is in a most distressed state, being greatly in need of a chapel. There is a considerable crowding in of people, and the means of the small company of seventy members are very scarce, so that there is no possibility of their building a chapel.

In order to remedy this calamity, two young members have promised to the Lord to dedicate three years of their labor in order to be able, if possible, to offer as a token of gratitude, a thousand roubles ($550) to the Lord's cause.

They are both of Lettish nationality and natives of Courland; both strong and healthy, aged 22 and 26 years (the oldest a joiner by profession), and both are willing to accept any work or service offered to them, and to do the same with all the faithfulness and devotedness required.

Should anybody be willing to help these young men, or either of them, to the carrying out of their noble intention, the same is hereby respectfully requested to give the necessary information—all terms included.

Besides their native tongue, the Lettish, they both speak German, and the younger one has even a spare knowledge of English. Please direct to "A Gift of Love" is the work of a loving heart. It contains a text of Scripture for every day of the year with the addition of an appropriate thought in poetry of prose all bearing on the theme of love. The work must have called for a great amount of patient toil. But it has not been spent in vain, for the volume will prove a blessing to many a soul. To use it day by day for a year thoughtfully and prayerfully, must result in a rich growth in love on the part of the user. LODGE SERVICES IN CHURCHES.

While it is now popular with numerous churches to invite a lodge of some secret oath-bound society to attend occasional special services in their sacred edifices on the Sabbath, the true Christians are waking up to a sense of the inappropriateness of such performances, and we trust that the light will continue to shine upon the practice until it shall become disreputable and cease.

R. E. Stewart, writing to the Associate Presbyterian Magazine of Chesley, Ontario, for August, considerably objects to this mingling of secular and Christian services, in which the church pays undue honors to pagan or Christless lodges. In support of his position he quotes the following notices from the Delphi Journal:

The Masons and ladies of the Eastern Star are cordially invited to worship at the Methodist Episcopal church on Sunday, June 25. This is the Sunday nearest St. John's day.

Rev. H. G. Rice delivered an impressive sermon to the Grand Army and their friends in the Presbyterian church, Sunday morning. The Post attended the meeting in a body and entered heartily into the service. The church was hung with flags and decorated with flowers. Rev. Roberts of the Christian church, and Rev. VanCleve of the Baptist church, were in attendance, the service being a union one.

One glance at the surroundings of these semi-religious gatherings should convince any Christian man of their mistaken character for good. "When such invitations are extended, it is expected that the order will march from their lodge dressed in their regalia, and with great ceremony take their places in the house of God," and too often wearing the side-arms of men of war in the domain of the Prince of Peace. Then think of "churches hung with flags and decorated with flowers: the secret order, with its wardens and 'worshipfuls,' arrayed with plumes and squares and compasses and keystones and other insignia," marching with pomp and indifference to Christianity into the place where humility and broken-heartedness alone may rightly seek the peace of God that passeth understanding.

Further, Mr. Stewart says: "Yet these are the very means by which pastors build up their churches. The plan is efficient, and even those who once bore specific testimony against secret oath-bound societies... are drawn in and are now drifting down with the current of defection."

But the practice is, nevertheless, unworthy of any Christian following.

"KNIGHT TEMPLARISM ILLUSTRATED."

"Ours is a Christian institution; all its teachings are founded upon the Christian religion."—J. C. Carpenter, Grand Prelate K. T., Texas, in the Voice of Masonry for August.

In the Knights Templar degree, the station and duties of a Prelate are thus set forth:

"Eminent Commander:—What is the Prelate's station in the Commandery?"

"Senior Warden: On the right of the Generalissimo."

"Eminent Commander: What are your duties, Sir Knight Prelate?"

"Prelate: To minister at the altar and offer up prayers and oblations to Deity."

(From Knight Templarism Illustrated, published by Ezra A. Cook, Chicago, and sold at this office.)

The answer of the prelate would have been equally appropriate in the mouth of a priest of Baal, on the day of Elijah's victory.

For overwhelming Masonic evidence that the deception and blasphemy practiced in these council and commandery degrees cannot be too darkly painted, the reader is referred to the above-named book, chapters 1 and 2; pages 121-123, and 282-285; and to foot-notes (extracts from authoritative Masonic publications) on pages 34, 40, 42, 43, 46, 47, 50, 51, 54, 63, 64, 69, 71, 75, 79, 80, 81, 101, 107, 148, 151, 152, 155, 157, 158, 159, 160, 162, 182, 185, 186, 187, 190, 191, 195, 196, 199, 200, 202, 215, 216, 266, 269, and 270. "The monitorial quotations," says the same book, page 6, "all through the degrees prove conclusively the blasphemous use of the Word of God, and the impious representation even of the life, sufferings, resurrection and ascension of the Lord Jesus."

Hence the Masons claim that Knight Templarism is "intensely Christian".

"Masonic Life Eternal."—Voice of Masonry, August, p. 615.

"At the opening of this our Grand Session, we would lay our chaplet of loving remembrance upon the graves of our fraternal dead, wherever those graves may be... And, brethren, the message these departed brothers send back to us, borne upon the wings of the winds, whispering through the beautiful lips of the flowers, echoing through the stillness of the morning hour, is this: 'I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge shall give to me in that day, and not to me only, but unto all those who love his appearing.'"—Rev. J. H. Lloyd, of Iowa, in Voice of Masonry for August, p. 616.

If Masonry does all this for the poor sinner, is it not supplanting Christianity, which Mackey says Masonry is not,—not even a substitute for Christianity.—Encyclopædia, p. 641.

THE MILITARY SPIRIT IS NOT THAT OF THE GOSPEL.

Our esteemed correspondent, Mr. Josiah W. Leeds, of Philadelphia, has been making a study on the question, "Ought Christians to Engage in War?" and his argument and conclusions, as becomes an ardent member of the Friends' church, are in the interest of universal peace, and fill a 16-page pamphlet.

In the course of his treatise, having occasion to refer to the military drill of young men in civil life—in schools, churches and various societies—he takes occasion to say:

Upon the matter of the military drill being a beneficial exercise, I have to say that I have no objection whatever to a certain amount of simple drill for the young. My own son, one of the senior scholars at the Friends' Boarding-school of Westtown, is even now (in part) discharging the duties of instructor in gymnastics, in the course of it going through with a good deal of marching and trotting around generally, but the arms the boys bear are the Indian clubs for developing the muscles of their bodies. Professor Sargent, the well-known instructor in gymnastics at Harvard, is authority for the statement that the usual military drill but awkwardly and imperfectly develops the body, and is a very indifferent substitute for intelligently pursued calisthenic exercises.

But the Boys' Brigade movement, started in Great Britain probably ten years ago, and less than four years ago in this country, I hold to be an experiment fraught with very great moral danger to our young people. "Whatever may be the purpose of its promoters," said a British journal a while ago, "it is an attempt to extend the kingdom of Christ among the young by means of its opposite; for it is essentially and avowedly military, military in its organization, spirit, methods, adjuncts, accoutrements, ideas and associations." Even the patronage, in Scotland, of the talented author of "The Greatest Thing in the World," will not suffice, I feel sure, to prevent an untoward sequence of this movement, the eventual tendency of which I believe will be to develop feelings not accordant with those of universal benevolence.

The question is, after all, does the Gospel of Christ, in any place, or in any degree, authorize a military drill, either without or with arms, as a means of proselyting followers of the Lamb? We think not. Mohammed and Constantine were wrong in this respect, and neither was worthy of imitation.

YORK RITE MASONRY.

The Ancient York Rite, which is now no longer cultivated, based upon what is known as the "York Legend" (it is alleged), is the oldest of all the fraternal Rites, and, according to Preston, a prominent Masonic author, originated as follows, copying from the ancient records:

"Edward (of England) died in 924, and was succeeded by Athelstane, his son (and grandson of Alfred the Great), who appointed his brother Edwin a patron of the Masons. This prince procured a charter from Athelstane, empowering them to meet annually in communication at York. In this city the first Grand Lodge of England was formed in 926."

"Such," says Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, pages 904, 905, "is the York Legend, as it has been accepted by the craft... Only recently has any one thought of doubting its authenticity; and now the important question in Masonic literature is whether it is a myth or a history... The theory which I think may safely be advanced on this subject, and which must be maintained until there are better reasons than we now have to reject it, is that about the year 926 a German Assembly of Masons (stone-workers) was held at York under the patronage of Edwin, brother of Athelstane, at which assembly a code of laws was adopted, which became the basis on which all subsequent Masonic constitutions were framed."

The same authority (page 906) also asserts: "The York Rite was that Rite which was most probably organized or modified at the (Apple-Tree Tavern) revival in 1717, and practiced for fifty years by the constitutional Grand Lodge of England. It consisted of only the three symbolic degrees, the last one (the Master's) containing within itself the secrets now transferred to the Royal Arch." The same authority (page 906) says that "the Rite in its purity does not now exist anywhere." It consisted originally of the Blue Lodge degrees, with the changes, noted above, in the Master's degree.

The matter has recently derived new interest from the following statement printed in the Masonic Chronicle of Columbus, Ohio, for July.

The Hebrew Standard of Nov. 28, 1892, repeated the York Legend substantially as related by Preston and Mackey, and the Chronicle replies:

This is a most erroneous statement of the origin of Freemasonry, and requires correction.

What are the historical facts?

1. Prince Edwin is a traditionary or mythical personage, and according to tradition was made a Mason at Windsor; this royal town, therefore, ought to have equal rank, as to antiquity, with the city of York.

2. The first Grand Lodge, or first General Assembly, held at York in 926, is a myth.

3. The old York constitutions are apocryphal.

4. There is no historical proof that a York Rite ever existed; but if it ever did, nobody at present knows what it has been. The York Rite, therefore, cannot be the mother of all other rites.

The existence of the old York Lodge can only be traced back historically to the year 1662, and is then lost in the obscurity of the dim past.

It is such contradictions as these in Masonic history, and those equally as pointed in its theology, that disgrace it as a system. If Masonry has any history or principles by which it is willing to stand, and will unite in proclaiming them to the world, its relations to God and man will be better understood. We care not what absurd secrecy it throws around its lodge ceremonies. The world is in possession of them; but a fraternity whose principles, aims and character are continually clashing, and hence must resort to falsehood and prevarication to make it appear plausible to the ignorant and unwary, is contemptible in the light of Christianity and good sense.

UNITY WITH CHRIST.

The great characteristic of the true Christian is that he is one with Christ. The Scriptures represent this unity as Christ in them, and they in Christ.

These seven things are implied by our being in Christ:

1. The new creation. "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature. The old things have passed away; behold they are become new." 2 Cor. 5: 17 (R. V.)

2. Freedom from condemnation. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Rom. 8: 1.

3. Freedom from sin. "Ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins, and in him is no sin. He that abideth in him sinneth not." 1 John 5: 6.

4. Prevalence in prayer. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." John 15: 7.

5. Fruit—believing. "He that abideth in me, the same bringeth forth much fruit." John 15: 5.

6. Completeness. "Ye are complete in Christ Jesus, who is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption." 1 Cor. 2: 30.

7. Everlasting salvation. "And I heard a voice from heaven saying, write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them." Rev. 14: 13.

There are likewise seven things that result from Christ's abiding in us:

1. The assurance that we are not reprobates, but are truly the Lord's. "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith, prove your own selves. Know ye not of your own selves how that Christ is in you except ye be reprobates?" 2 Cor. 13: 5. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9.

2. True spiritual life. "He that hath the Son hath life." 1 John 5: 12.

3. Death unto sin. "If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin." Rom. 8: 10.

4. The hope of glory. "The mystery . . . which is Christ in us the hope of glory." Col. 1: 25, 27.

5. The keeping of the commandments. "He that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him and he in him." 1 John 3: 24. "If any man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come and take up our abode with him." John 14: 23.

6. Crucifixion to the world. "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Gal. 2: 20.

7. The abiding of the Spirit. "Hereby we know that we dwell in him and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit." 1 John 4: 13.

There are also seven evidences of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit:

1. He is an abiding comforter. "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you." John 14: 16, 17.

2. We are God's temple. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" 1 Cor. 3: 16. "What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you?" 1 Cor. 6: 19. "For ye are the temple of the living God." 2 Cor. 6: 16. "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone, in whom the whole building, fitly framed together, groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. 2: 20-23.

3. We are sealed unto the day of redemption. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed to the day of redemption." Eph. 4: 30.

4. Not in the flesh but in the Spirit. "But ye are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you . . . But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rev. 8: 9, 11.

The Holy Spirit our teacher. "But the Comforter, who is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, shall teach you all things." John 14: 26.

6. The witness of our adoption. "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Rom. 8: 16. "And it is the Spirit that beareth witness because the Spirit is truth." 1 John 5: 7.

7. Our inward intercessor. "In like manner the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what to pray for as we ought, but the Spirit maketh intercession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered." Rom. 8: 26.

NON-SECRET POLITICAL ECONOMY.

Another new political organ has made its appearance in Washington. It calls itself the Political Economist. Its professed object is to "teach the masses how to so meet the political emergencies of the day by constitutional methods that the people shall control the nation, that man shall triumph over the dollar which now seems to reign supreme." On this subject the editor adds: "True, all efforts in this direction up to date have been failures." This is a strange admission for a fresh advocate in such a cause to make at the outset; but "Hope springs eternal in the human breast;" and he proposes to take up his cudgel and fight for his opinions.

The editor was for a long time attached to the National Economist, the Washington organ of the Farmers' Alliance and the People's Union; but, disgusted with the "lies and slanders of the moral, financial and political bankrupts, who have so long been barking at his (my) heels and trying to attract attention, in the vain hope that they may recuperate their fortunes, either political or financial, by riding the people's movement," he starts out with a new political party, of which his paper is to be the mouthpiece. The former is "a non-secret organization," without officers, fees or dues. Its name is the "People's Co-operative Referendum," whose members are bound by this obligation: "I believe in the principles expressed in the 'Cardinal Purposes' of the People's Co-operative Referendum, have read and do approve of the By-laws and system of government, and I do hereby obligate myself as a member of that organization, to do and perform all those things which I may hereafter of my own free will and accord from time to time agree to."

The principles of this new party do not differ from those of the Alliance adopted at Ocala, in December, 1890, and in most respects it is the Alliance revamped. The editor, like the leopard, seemingly has not changed his spots; but we are pleased to learn that his new party is to have so little of the lodge element about it. That fact should greatly increase its chances for success.

—The fiscal year, which ended June 30, shows a sharp balance in foreign trade against us, inasmuch as exports of merchandise from the United States for the year amounted to $847,423,147, as against $1,030,278,148 for the previous year. The imports for the same period were $941,076,128, as against $827,402,462 in the year ending June 30, 1892.

—The military status of the following States of Europe may be estimated from the fact that in 1892 France, Germany, Russia, Austria, Italy, England, Spain, and Turkey had an aggregate armed force numbering 22,248,000 men. Now this number will be materially increased by the new military law of Germany. The annual war-tax of Europe is at present placed at $814,000,000—a burden which falls heavily upon a people who are in no way benefited by this enormous outlay.

—From the Gospel Trumpet Company, Grand Junction, Michigan, we are in receipt of a wholesome new singing book, with original words and music, entitled "Echoes from Glory". An accomplished instructor of music, to whom it was referred for examination, informs us that "it is a valuable addition to the few superior Sunday-school books. It is especially suited to young people's meetings, every piece being singable and harmonious. May it receive the success it abundantly deserves!" For samples and terms address the publishers as above.

—Our Washington correspondent has an interesting description of a new temperance movement in that city that would seem to be quite efficient as one branch of the warfare upon the saloon. It is the formation of a league, by influential citizens, requiring satisfactory information relating to the character of every applicant for a saloon license. The standard is necessarily below that of most citizens who wish to embark in any other and more reputable employment, but high, comparatively, among the general run of proprietors of grog-shops. Unless this standard is reached by the applicant, his license is withheld. The tendency, it is thought, will be to reduce the number of low drinking places with which the capital abounds, and it might be used with benefit to society in other towns and cities, by restraining the growth and ill-repute of liquor-dealers.

LITERATURE.

We have received the following August magazines, which the present restrictions upon our columns will not permit us to notice with our usual particularity:

Scribner's, an illustrated "fiction number"; published by Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York. 25 cents.

The Cosmopolitan, beautifully illustrated. Published in New York City. A marvel of excellence and cheapness. 12½ cents.

The Century Midsummer holiday number. Unsurpassed in all that pertains to a superior literary periodical. Published by the Century Company, New York City. 35 cents.

The Preachers' Magazine, highly useful for preachers, teachers and Bible students—varied and interesting. Edited by Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory. American edition, with timely additions. Published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, New York City. 15 cents.

The Social Economist—devoted, under excellent management and with competent writers, to the financial, political and social interests of the country; fully discusses the silver question and other important topics. Published by the School of Social Economics, New York City. 25 cents.

The Cottage Hearth, always rich in the lighter departments of literature, but discursive also, on subjects of social and domestic interest. Published by W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston, Mass. 15 cents.

The Journal of Hygiene and Herald of Health. Edited and published by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, New York City. One of the most sensible and practical of all the medical journals extant, and one that ought to be studied in every family. 10 cents.

Worthington's Magazine, for family reading, presents many points of excellence that have given popularity to other and older American periodicals. Its claims for a kind reception are many. Published by A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn. 25 cents.

We have received, from the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 10 East 22d street, New York, an interesting pamphlet—"Kindness to Animals, a manual for use in schools and families." We shall have more to say about it at an early date. It sells for 4 cents.

Christianity, and if I had to leave one or the other, the church might go."

Another read what Mr. Finney said about church and lodge membership, and remarked: "That's right. I used to belong to the church, but when I became a Mason I found it so much better that I have no use for it."

An elderly man, from California, looking at the exposition of the Eastern Star degrees, remarked: "That's a humbug. I've been a Mason since 1860, and find it a good enough religion for me; but those women degrees are all bosh."

A very intelligent young man, from the same State, said: "I find very little frank, square dealing among men out on the coast. They are all tied up in their lodges, and each clansman helps his fellow-clansman, and outsiders have very little show among those selfish combinations."

A K. P., living in Chicago, returned a third time for conference. Our first interview was far from harmonious. Our third was much more satisfactory. He has very deep convictions, and I am confident an honest desire to find rest for his soul. He has been sadly perplexed about the heathen, and the imperfections, inconsistencies and contentions among church people, etc. His wife is a Romanist, and he is fearful that their only child will adopt the mother's faith. I pressed the claims of Christ upon him, and explained the way of life as best I could; to which he responded: "I would give all I have in this world to have the peace you speak of." I said: "Give your sins to Christ, and accept his righteousness as a free gift, and you have all that your soul desireth." Reader, will you pray for this young husband and father?

A seceder, who had found Christ, brought to me a blessing in his words of encouragement. A number of Good Templar friends made an honest, though unsuccessful, effort to convince me of the error of my ways. I wish to acknowledge a uniformly courteous and respectful treatment by every member of this order who has called, for which they have my thanks.

A listener came to the front while a spirited discussion was going on, with the inquiry: "Have you ever been a Mason?" I said: "No, sir." "Well, then, you know nothing about it." I said: "Do you frequent dram-shops and houses of ill-fame?" "No, sir, I do not," was his most emphatic and, I have no doubt, truthful reply. I said: "You know something about them, and you are prepared to give reasons for your opinions. The same is true with me in reference to secret societies." His reply was not at all complimentary to your representative or creditable to himself; but as he returned to apologize, after thinking over the matter, we parted with mutual assurances of good will.

The craft are by no means idle, and, if I am not greatly mistaken, there is something on hand which may develop into, tale of deeper significance than the rattle of small arms on the skirmish line. Will you help together with prayer in this work? J. P. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

THE LORD'S DAY.

Fresh glides the brook and blows the gale,
Yet yonder halts the quiet mill;
The whirring wheel, the rushing sail,
How motionless and still!

Six days of toil, poor child of Cain!
Thy strength the slave of want may be;
The seventh thy limbs escape the chain—
A God hath made thee free!

Ah, tender was the law that gave
This holy respite to the breast,
To breathe the gale, to watch the wave,
And know—the wheel may rest!

But where the waves the gentlest glide,
What image charms to lift thine eyes!
The spire, reflected on the tide,
Invites thee to the skies.

To teach the soul its nobler worth
This rest from mortal toils is given;
Go, snatch the brief reprieve from earth,
And pass—a guest to heaven.

They tell thee, in their dreaming school,
Of power from old dominion hurled;
When rich and poor, with juster rule,
Shall share the alter'd world.

Alas! since time itself began,
That fable hath but fooled the hour;
Each age that ripens power in man
But subjects man to power.

Yet every day in seven, at least,
One bright republic shall be known;
Man's world awhile hath surely ceased
When God proclaims his own!

Six days may Rank divide the poor,
O Dives, from thy banquet hall;
The seventh the Father opens the door,
And holds his feast for all!

—Sir E. Bulwer Lytton.

BIBLE STUDY.

Dean Burgon gives an amusing account of an interview he had in 1846 with the learned divine Martin Joseph Routh (at that time aged ninety-one), the president of Magdalen, Oxford. He had called on the president in order that he might be directed as to the best way of pursuing his theological studies. "I think, sir," said Dr. Routh, "were I you, sir—that I would—first of all—read the Gospel according to St. Matthew." Here he paused. "And after I had read the Gospel according to St. Matthew—I would—were I you—sir—go on to read—the Gospel according to St.—Mark." "I looked at him," says Dean Burgon, "anxiously to see whether he was serious. One glance was enough. He was giving me (but at a very slow rate) the outline of my future course." "I think, sir, when I had read the Gospel according to St. Mark, I would go on, sir—to the Gospel according to St. Luke, sir. Well, sir, and when I had read those three Gospels, sir, were I in your place, I would go on—yes, I would certainly go on to read the Gospel according to St. John." "For an instant," says Burgon, "I felt an inclination to laugh. But by this time a very different set of feelings came over me. Here was a theologian of ninety-one, who, after surveying the entire field of sacred science, had come back to the starting-point, and had nothing better to advise me to read than—the Gospel! I believe I was attempting to thank him, but he did not give me time. He recommended me, with much emphasis, to read a portion of the Gospel every day." "And after the Gospel according to St. John," he proceeded—(Now for it, thought I; we are coming to the point at last)—"I would in the next place, sir—I think—yes, sir, I think I would certainly go on to read the—Acts of the Holy Apostles, a book, sir, which I have not the least doubt was the work of—St. Luke." "No more have I, sir," said Burgon. "But what is quite evident," continued Dr. Routh, "it must needs be a book of altogether apostolic antiquity; indeed of the age it professes to be. For you may have observed that the sacred writer ends by saying that Paul dwelt at Rome 'two whole years in his own hired house.' Now, sir, no one but a contemporary would have ended his narrative in that way. We should have had all about St. Paul's martyrdom—all about his martyrdom, sir, if the narrative had been subsequent in date to St. Paul's death." "After mentioning the seven Catholic Epistles, he advised me to read those of St. Paul. He spoke of the Book of Revelation, and remarked that Rome is certainly there, whether imperial or papal."—Selected.

HOW TO READ THE DAILY PAPER.

That the daily paper is a great educator I presume no one will deny. But there is education and education. The saloon educates, as well as the church; the prize-fight, as well as the debating club. The average city daily is not discriminating, but serves its readers with the bad as well as with the good, and is usually more liberal with the former than with the latter. We want the news, but can we afford to read and have our children read the sensational reports of murders and robberies, scandals, prize-fights, etc. Such matter is especially damaging to the young, and is just the class of reading that they are apt to choose if left alone with the daily paper.

How can we give them the good, and keep from them the bad? Bro. Blank has solved the problem. During a recent visit of a few days to his neighborhood I was domiciled at his home, and was much pleased with his course. Now, he is a very busy man, and most men in his business would find no time for their families; but not so Bro. Blank. One hour just after dinner, every evening, is spent with the daily paper and his family. John and Susan, the older children, armed with their geography, and the father with the newspaper. He begins on the first page with the foreign news. As names of places are read, the children are asked to locate them, and failing to do so unaided, they refer to their maps. The mention of places may recall certain important historical events, and questions are asked, and information given concerning these. This is repeated as names may occur, until the facts are finally fixed in the minds of all. Questions are also asked concerning the names and titles of prominent persons, terms are explained, etc. Thus information is given in geography, history, science, politics and religion. The accounts of murders and other sensational matter are never read nor discussed.

I can suggest but one amendment to Bro. Blank's plan: Let the time be extended say 30 minutes, during which let the Bible be substituted for the newspaper, and at the close of the reading let all kneel while the father leads in fervent prayer to the Giver of all good. Who can doubt the good effects of such a course?—Exchange.

GRINDING THE DIAMOND.

The poor sufferer lay in severe pain on her bed. It had been nearly twenty years since she saw a well day,—more than half that time since she had walked a step, and nearly two years since she had sat up. Her limbs were jerked by spasms, her back had deep sores on it from lying so long; and whenever one was relieved by a new position of the body, another would be made. She never complained; and the cheerfulness with which she endured all this from day to day, and from year to year, was a matter of amazement to all. Her friends who saw the Bible always lying near her, knew well from what springs she drew water. They all said that it was one of the darkest providences they ever witnessed.

One night as the sufferer lay sleepless from terrible pain, she began to look back upon the past. What a wreck life seemed, dating from her bright school days! What a mystery that she must be so helpless and such a sufferer, while her school-companions could walk and move, and act and enjoy life! What was the object of her heavenly Father in putting her into this slow, hot, long-continued furnace? As she lay there thus communicating with herself, the room seemed suddenly to fill with light, and a beautiful form seemed to bend over her. His face was calm and gentle, but full of pity. She was not at all frightened, nor deemed it strange that he was there, though she was aware that she never saw him before.

"Daughter of sorrow!" said he in a voice soft as the zephyr that rocks the rose on its stem, "art thou impatient?"

"No; but I am full of pain and disease, and I have so long been a sufferer that I see no end to it, nor can I see why I must suffer thus. I know I am a sinner; but I hoped that Christ's sufferings, and not mine, would save me. Oh, why does God deal thus with me?"

"Come with me, daughter, and I will show thee."

"But I cannot walk."

"True, true! There, gently, gently!"

He tenderly took her up in his arms, and carried her away, far away, over land and water, till he set her down in a far-off city, and in the midst of a large work-shop. The room was full of windows; and the workmen seemed to be near the light, and each with his own tools, and all seemed to be so intent upon their work that they neither noticed the new-comers, nor spoke to one another. They seemed to have small, brown pebbles, which they were grinding, and shaping, and polishing. Her guide pointed her to one who seemed to be most earnestly at work. He had a half-polished pebble, which was now seen to be a diamond, in a pair of strong iron pincers. He seemed to grasp the little thing as if he would crush it, and to hold on to the rough stone without mercy. The stone whirled; and the dust flew and the jewel grew smaller and lighter. Ever and anon he would stop, hold it up to the light, and examine it carefully.

"Workman," said the sufferer, "will you please to tell me why you bear on, and grind the jewel so hard?"

"I want to grind off every flaw and crack in it."

"But don't you waste it?"

"Yes; but what is left is worth so much the more. The fact is, this diamond, if it will bear the wheel long enough, is to occupy a very important place in the crown we are making up for our king. We take much more pains with such. We have to grind and polish them a great while; but, when they are done they are very beautiful. The king was here yesterday, and was much pleased with our work, but wanted this jewel, in particular; should be ground and polished a great deal. So you see how hard I hold it down on this stone. And, see! there is not a crack nor a flaw in it! What a beauty it will be!"

Gently, gently, the guide lifted up the poor sufferer, and again laid her down on her own bed of pain. "Daughter of sorrow! dost thou understand the vision?"

"Oh, yes! but may I ask you one question?"

"Certainly."

"Were you sent to me to show me all this?"

"Assuredly."

"Oh! may I take to myself the consolation that I am a diamond, and am now in the hands of the strong man, who is polishing it for the crown of the Great King?"

"Daughter of sorrow! thou mayest have that consolation; and every pang of suffering shall be like a flash of lightning in a dark night, revealing eternity to thee; and hereafter thou shalt 'run without weariness and walk without faintness,' and sing with those who have 'come out of great tribulation.'"—Anonymous.

FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT TOBACCO.

It is estimated that nearly 300,000,000, or about one-fourth of the entire human family, use tobacco. It is used by men of every nation, civilized and uncivilized, old and young, rich and poor, saint and sinner; Christian, Turk and heathen. No pope, prince, president or king wields a sceptre over so wide an empire. It is computed that the whole number of smokers, snuffers and chewers consume 500,000 tons of tobacco annually, or 1,000,000,000 of pounds weight. The expenditure of time, labor and money laid out for tobacco is prodigious. The aggregate of all these that enter into the raising of the weed; the making of it into plugs, snuff and cigars; the transportation; the buying and selling and using, is a problem for mathematicians that know how to compute figures that rise beyond millions.

The time spent by a single individual in taking chews, and lighting and puffing pipes or cigars, would, if properly improved, in many instances, be sufficient to acquire a thorough knowledge of several useful sciences. Multiply this by the whole number of tobacco users, and it will amount to centuries of precious time consumed, not only in useless, but hurtful and degrading practices. The labor in producing tobacco and preparing it for use, is amazing. Five and a half millions of acres are cultivated in this soil-impov-erishing crop throughout the world. In one great tobacco factory in Seville, Spain, 5,000 young girls are employed in a single room. In the city of Hamburg 10,000 persons, many of them women and children, are engaged in the manufacture of cigars. A printing press is occupied entirely in printing labels for the boxes of cigars, and other matters connected with the immense tobacco business of that city.

A man in one of our churches uses $75 worth of tobacco yearly. A young man in a neighboring town confessed to smoking $91 worth of cigars in a year. In an annual report of a State almshouse there is the following item of expenditure: "$219 for tobacco, snuff and pipes." Communities must be taxed additional in order to provide tobacco for paupers! It is estimated that the clergy cost the United States $600,000; tobacco, $40,000,000; rum, $100,000,000. Nearly seven times as much for tobacco as for preaching of the Gospel. Professed Christian, are you still waiting for God to show you it is wrong to use it?—The Full Gospel.

THE GIFT OF SONG.

A touching story is told of a little girl sent by her parents from Spain, during a time of religious persecution there, to take refuge with some friends in England. The vessel was lost on a rock-bound coast during a severe storm, but the little girl was saved through the efforts of some heroic men. She was too young to tell her story, but, by a series of providential events, was brought at last to the house of a friend of her parents just as, released from imprisonment, they arrived in England to seek their long-lost darling. A familiar tune, that the mother had taught to her little girl in former days, became the clew that led to their joyful meeting.

A remarkable incident is that of a Scottish youth, who learned with a pious mother to sing the old psalms that were as household words to them in the kirk and by the fireside. When he grew up he wandered away from his native country, was taken captive by the Turks, and made a slave in one of the Barbary States. But he never forgot the songs of Zion, although he sung them in a strange land and to heathen ears. One night he was solacing himself in this manner, when the attention of some sailors on board of an English man-of-war was directed to the familiar tune of "Old Hundred," as it came floating over the moonlight waves. At once they surmised the truth, that one of their countrymen was languishing away his life as a captive. Quickly arming themselves, they manned a boat, and lost no time in effecting his release. What a joy to him, after eighteen long years passed in slavery!—Child's World.

DOING AND BEING.

A young girl had been trying to do something very good, and had not succeeded very well. Her friend, hearing her complain, said:

"God gives us many things to do, but don't you think he gives us something to be, just as well?"

"Oh, dear! tell me about being," said Marion looking up. "I will think about being, if you will help."

Her friend answered: "God says:

"Be kindly affectioned one to another.

"Be ye also patient.

"Be ye thankful.

"Be not conformed to this world.

"Be ye therefore perfect.

"Be courteous.

"Be not wise in your own conceit.

"Be not overcome of evil."

Marion listened, but made no reply.

Twilight grew into darkness. The tea-bell sounded, bringing Marion to her feet. In the firelight Elizabeth could see that she was very serious.

"I'll have a better day to-morrow. I see that doing grows out of being."

"We cannot do what God loves without being what he commands. It is easier to do with a rush than to be patient or unselfish or humble or just or watchful."

"I think it is," returned Marion.

During the fiscal year which ended June 30, 497,936 foreign emigrants came to the United States, a decrease of 121,384 from the preceding year. Of the total given, 96,313 came from Germany, a decrease of 34,309; from Italy, 72,403, an increase of 11,459; from Sweden and Norway, 53,872, a decrease of 3,281; from Russia (except Poland), 43,657, a decrease of 40,631, and from the United Kingdom, 108,716, a decrease of 8,352. Roman Catholic Italy reports the only increase.

THE BORROWED BABY.

That nice old gentleman over the way
Came into our house quite early to-day,
And he said to mamma, "My wife sent me here
To borrow something;" then he looked very queer.
"It is not sugar, molasses, or tea,"
He said, as he pointed his finger at me;
"It's that little lass she wants me to bring.
Wife's growing feeble and childish this spring.
The weather's been bad, she couldn't get out;
She sees this little girl running about,
And fancies she's like our lassie who died.
'Twould do her good if she'd just step inside."
And then mamma whispered low in my ear:
"Will you be lent for this morning, my dear?
That poor old lady is lonely and sad,
With no little girl to make her heart glad;
You'll be a great comfort to her, I know."
I said to mamma, "Of course I will go."
I was just as happy as I could be
With that dear old lady who borrowed me.
I sat in her little girl's rocking chair
And held her doll with its long flaxen hair,
While she told about her little girl's ways,
How happy she was in all her plays;
And I spoke the prettiest piece I knew
About "a dear baby with eyes of blue,
With chubby hands and cunning toes
And dainty mouth as sweet as a rose."

When I said I must go she asked a kiss.
I gave her ten, for I knew she must miss
Her dear little girl. What mamma would be,
I'm sure I can't tell, if she didn't have me!
And I'll go often; I told her I would;
It's one way, you know, that I can do good.
I'll ask her how she is getting along,
And stop sometimes to sing her a song,
Or read her a story—her eyes are quite weak—
I'll give her kisses, and loving words speak.
I'm so very glad that old lady sent
This morning to see if I would be lent,
And I'll ask the good Lord to bless each day
That poor lonely mother over the way.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

The Royal Commission of Canada has been making enquiries of the working of the Maine law where it has now had an existence of over forty years. The Witness of July 6 gives quite a lengthy report of evidence taken in Portland, the capital and the largest city in the State.

Mayor Baxter said that politics entered very largely into the question of the administration of the law—very much as it now does in the administration of our license law in Ontario. The prohibitory law has done great good. The liquor traffic, where it exists, is disreputable. It is in the hands of the very low men. The law does not entirely prevent drunkenness, but it greatly reduces both crime and drunkenness. He owns a large amount of real estate, and was sure that the prohibitory law had not injured the value of his property. It has not prevented people moving to the State. One man he knew, who came from the city of Portland, England, to be free from the temptations of the open saloon, as he had been addicted to drink. He is now a prosperous and prominent citizen here.

City Marshal Trickey said there had been a good deal of laxity about enforcing the law, but that there were not now any open sales of liquors in the city. There was a good deal of illicit selling, but it was as disreputable as it could be. It was sold in barns and stables and outbuildings and from bottles carried in men's pockets and boot legs. Drunkenness has not increased. Persons not having the habit to use liquors would not go to these disreputable places. In rural districts prohibition does most effectually prohibit. Prohibition is now stronger and better enforced in the State outside of the cities than ever before, and it is better enforced in Portland than it has been for a long time.

Sheriff Crane has been a life-long resident of the State. There is no open bar, but a good deal of drunkenness, as it was easy to secure liquor from the adjoining State. The prohibitory law is as well enforced as other laws. Public sentiment is much stronger than it was, in favor of rigid enforcement. The law has been most decidedly favorable to the prosperity of the State. In former times, in the country districts, wherever there was a licensed tavern—and there were plenty—there would be a lot of poor families about. That is not now at all the case. There are very many towns in the State where a pint of liquor could not be purchased for any amount of money. The enforcement of the law varies with the zeal and honesty of the officials. If there were licenses issued there would be still low dives where liquor would be sold clandestinely. Prohibition benefits almost all kinds of retail trade.

Police Officer Harmon said there had been a steady diminution of all crimes. There was as much illicit selling under license as under prohibition. There are not many places in the city where liquors are clandestinely sold. He had no knowledge of the existence of clubs where boys procured liquors. There were clubs where young men gathered and where liquor is had.

Mr. Baker, Secretary of Almshouse Overseers, has held the position for twenty years. His attention was called by Sir Joseph Hickson to the fact that the population had only increased 9 per cent as per last census, while the number of paupers had increased 37 per cent. He said the pauperism had increased among the foreign population. He is satisfied that prohibition is best for the State. The extremes of the two political parties are opposed to prohibition—those high in the Republican party and those way down in the Democratic party. The middle classes are in its favor. There are towns and towns in Maine where children have grown to manhood who have never seen a dramshop. Law is as well enforced to-day in Maine as it can be so long as there is a large foreign population to deal with. Boston has more difficulty in enforcing its license law than Portland has in enforcing prohibition. This is all the evidence that has yet been published.

KATE FIELD'S LOGIC.

"What is yeast but alcohol? Science long since demonstrated that fresh bread contains from one-fifth to two-fifths of one per cent of alcohol, and that forty two-pound loaves of bread represent in alcohol an ordinary bottle of port wine. Suppose the members of the Personal Liberty League demand the destruction of forty two-pound loaves of bread for every prohibited bottle of port wine—what then? Will they not have logic on their side?"—Kate Field's Washington.

Science must have analyzed a poor sample of bread if it found so much yeast in it after it had gone through the process of baking. But supposing all fresh bread has two-fifths of one per cent of alcohol in it; let us see on which side the "logic" lies. Did you ever know men to congregate in a bakery on Saturday night, swallow 120 pounds of fresh bread each, put eighty pounds more into their respective hip pockets to be swallowed on the sly, then go home in the early morning and fall to beating their wives and children and raising Cain generally? Did you ever see three men go fishing with a basket containing 950 pounds of fresh bread? Did you ever know them after eating it all in the course of an afternoon to fall overboard and sink like lead to the bottom? Did you ever see a man sneak over to the back door of a bakery at 5 o'clock in the morning to eat an "eye opener" of eighty pounds of fresh bread so that he might keep his breakfast on his stomach? Do our police tell us that 30 per cent of the cases they lock up are citizens who in unguarded moments of weakness have fallen in with the boys and eaten 500 pounds more fresh bread than they needed? Do our bakers coax in crowds of boys and get them to throwing dice for fresh bread? Do 90 per cent of our paupers lie in the arms of charity because they have eaten too much fresh bread? Do our lunatics go crazy over fresh bread? Do tramps tramp because of an over-feed of fresh bread? Do men swarm into dirty bakeries, get howling full of fresh bread, seize bread knives and guns and puncture each other's vitals? If you can prove that these things are true, Miss Kate, your Personal Liberty League has logic on its side. Otherwise you and they haven't anything to speak of except an appetite for port wine.—Northwestern Mail.

BIBLE LESSON.

LESSONS FROM THE LIFE OF PAUL.

LESSON VIII.—Third Quarter, 1893.—August 20.

SUBJECT.—Paul before Felix.—Acts 24: 10-25.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.—1 Cor. 16: 13.

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Acts 24: 10-16. T.—Acts 24: 17-25. W.—Acts 24: 1-9. T.—Rom. 15: 25-33. F.—1 Peter 3: 8-17. S.—Mark 13: 9-13. S.—Heb. 4: 6-13.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Paul's defence. Vs. 10-16. Paul, after a brief imprisonment, during which he was cheered by a vision of his Lord, was only saved from assassination by being sent with an armed escort to Felix, governor of Judea. The latter, however, refused to judge his case until, according to Roman law, he was confronted by his accusers. Five days therefore elapsed before the high priest and elders came down to Cæsarea from Jerusalem, and through their orator, Tertullius, began to accuse him of sedition and sacrilege, and being "a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." Paul answered by flatly denying the first two charges. He went up to Jerusalem "to worship," not to stir up revolt. He had only been there twelve days, and neither in the temple, the synagogue nor in the city at large could his enemies say that they had found him disputing, or in any way inciting to sedition. Neither could they prove the charges brought against him. "Herein do I exercise"—or discipline—"myself." There is no royal road to Christian perfection. There is but one way, and it is straight and narrow—the way of self-denial and self-sacrifice. Even Paul was no exception, for as he tells us in one of his epistles, he also had to labor to keep the flesh in subjection. "A conscience void of offence," (1) "towards God," (2) "towards men." It is impossible to reverse this order, and do our duty to our fellow-beings, while refusing to our Maker the loyal service we owe him. Paul, like his divine Master, spake openly to the world. Here was another point in his defence, that he had nothing to conceal. The last charge, however, he not only frankly confessed but gloried in. Paul was never ashamed of his colors. Yet he denied the accusation that he was a renegade and an apostate. It was his accusers who were false to the faith of their fathers, for in rejecting Christ they had rejected both the law and the prophecies.

2. Paul's tact and shrewdness. Vs. 17-21. "Now after many years." Paul's long absence from Judea, during which he had had little or no intercourse with his native land, was a strong point in his defence. His errand to Jerusalem, which was one of peace and good will, was still another. The third and perhaps the strongest of all was that these Asiatic Jews found him in the temple quietly engaged in a religious service. They themselves raised the tumult, and yet were too cowardly to appear before Felix and state their charges, or show if there was anything in his words that proved him to be a blasphemous or seditious person, unless it was his cry before the council: "Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day." How could they consistently persecute him for standing up for the very doctrine they themselves held so firmly, and which distinguished them as orthodox Jews from the rival sect of the Sadducees? Nothing could have been shrewder or more full of tact than this move by which he at once threw his enemies on the defensive. Our Saviour's promise, "I will give you a mouth and wisdom that none of your adversaries shall be able to gainsay or resist," was wonderfully fulfilled in the case of this brave and devoted apostle to the Gentiles.

3. The heroic preacher. Vs. 22-25. History gives to Felix the vilest of characters. His wife Drusilla was of the family of Herod the Great, and worthy of her lineage. Such was the couple before whom he was to make another grand address, "concerning the faith in Christ." Paul was not nearly so anxious for his own honor as he was for that of his beloved Master. He "reasoned." The Gospel addresses itself to the understanding as well as to the heart. He reasoned of righteousness, i.e., of justice; of temperance, i.e., virtue or self-control; and of judgment to come. But Felix, like the majority of sinners, delayed his action till too late. Two years later he lost his office and fell into disgrace with the emperor. He gained nothing by postponing repentance, but he lost everything.

STERLING TESTIMONIES.

"I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the 'grip' of Masonry and all other secret and un-Christian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Letter to Conference of Christians on Secret Societies, Chicago, 1887.

"As to the question of the attitude of Christians toward the secret orders, two or three things seem to me very plain. One of them is this: that the whole movement of things on the line of secrecy is thoroughly antagonistic to the movement on the line of Scripture and Christianity."—From address of Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D., pastor First Congregational Church, Chicago, to Christian Conference April, 1890.

"I belonged to two secret societies, and have bumped against nearly all of them, and know what I am talking about. Their sociability and benevolence may be all well enough; but they belong to the world. . . . I have about made up my mind that the whole thing is of the world, and the enemy of God and his church Brethren, why don't you say Amen? You know I am telling the truth; and I pray that you may have grace to receive it in love, as I have spoken it. As Christ's disciples we can make no compromise with the world. The friendship of the world is enmity against God."—From Bible reading, by L. W. Munhall, evangelist, on Separation, given Feb. 25, 1890, at Somerville, Mass.

"God's Word prohibits the believer from forming alliances with the ungodly in society. Whenever the Christian surrenders himself to the society of the unbelieving world, his heart will be led away from God. This is especially true of thousands of Christian men who have deliberately yoked themselves up with unbelievers in all manner of secret societies. This course of false alliance is doing more mischief to individual Christian men by turning their hearts away from God and his service, and to the church by depleting and robbing her of her male membership, THAN ANY OTHER ONE ENEMY OF CHRIST. There never was a time when the cry, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord,' was more needed than now."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Bible Studies, 1889, p. 389.

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. God demands, and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."—From Pres. Finney's book, "Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," pp. 260, 263.

"I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked with unbelievers. 'But, Mr. Moody,' some say, 'if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches.' But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right."—Address by Dwight L. Moody in Farwell Hall, Chicago, 1876.

CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL was the intimate friend and biographer of Washington, and was himself a Freemason in his youth. Marshall left the lodge in 1793. He had then for some sixteen years been acquainted with Washington, who died six years later. Marshall wrote to Hon. John Bailey from Richmond, Oct. 18, 1833, of Washington and Freemasonry: "I do not recollect ever to have heard him utter a syllable on the subject."

HOME AND HEALTH.

TO MAKE ROSE SALVE.

To keep the lips from chapping rose salve is delicious. It is made as follows: Mix three ounces of oil of almonds and half an ounce of alkanet; let them stand in a warm place and strain. Melt one ounce and a half of white wax and half an ounce of spermaceti with the oil; stir till it begins to thicken and add twelve drops of attar of roses.

TO CLEAN WHITE GARMENTS.

Many women who are fond of wearing white cloth garments are not aware that they can be very easily cleaned with pipe clay. The officers in the British army keep the white in their uniforms spotlessly clean by the use of pipe clay. This is rubbed thoroughly into the fabric, then brushed and dusted out until all stains and spots are removed. In some instances it is necessary to wet it. If stains are very bad it may be made into a sort of paste, laid on and allowed to become almost dry, when it will rub and brush out very readily. White shoes of undressed kid are easily cleaned in this way, and this, indeed, is almost the only method by which they can be made to look well.—New York World.

CANDIED ROSE LEAVES.

Any woman can make these table and boudoir dainties at home, if she has a rosebush at her door, as most women do.

Save a quantity of the perfect petals from roses which you know have not had any bellobore or anything poisonous on them. Spread them on clean brown paper in a light room for two hours.

Add half a pint of water to half a pound of granulated sugar, boil together until the syrup spins a thread. Then take it from the fire and set in a pan of cold water. When cool, beat rapidly until it is partly crystallized. Then drop in a few petals at a time, and with wire tongs take them out and lay them on oiled paper to get hard. Separate them with a fork or penknife, or a wire. There are many elaborate methods of candying rose leaves, which call for a deal of slow, minute painstaking, but the little perfumed sweets are just as good made this way. Many making them at home, without knowledge, have failed because they have simply dipped the petals in hot syrup and dried them. The syrup must be cooled and beaten until the crystallization has well set in.—St. Louis Republic.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages. 75cts. The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been long called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger' oftentimes, 'than fiction.' One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun 'forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer!'"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedmen is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ill., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far exceeding any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. ... The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the first Presbyterian church in Freeport was established."

Polo, (Ills.) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townsman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the 'sixties' among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small meed of praise for their heroic sacrifices."

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-Saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the written word, and preaches with an earnestness born of conviction.

THE WORLD'S CONGRESS, NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

OCTOBER 5TH, AT 2 AND 7:30 P. M.

The uncertainties respecting the Sabbath opening of the World's Columbian Exposition have delayed announcement respecting our Congress. While there is still a measure of doubt, it now seems certain that the authorities desire to close on the Lord's day, and there is reason to believe that they will succeed in their wish. We are accordingly arranging for the meeting to be held, God willing, in the Art Hall, on the Lake Front, at the time above indicated. We desire that all our friends pray that the way may be opened by the Holy Spirit for the most effective gathering yet held on this question. We also request that all who can plan to visit the Exposition in early October should do so that they may be with us on the afternoon and evening of the 5th.

For the Committee,

CHARLES A. BLANCHARD, Ch'n.

Recent advices indicate that in some States of the Union the Republicans are beginning to view the Prohibition vote with unusual favor. Keep up the agitation; the light begins to shine.

Particular attention is called to the closing paragraphs of Rev. J. P. Stoddard's report of his work at the World's Fair. His appeal should be promptly heeded in the interest of our reform.

The legal obstruction to the efficacy of the new South Carolina State liquor law (which permits the authorities to buy and sell all the ardent spirits used) as set forth by Judge Hudson, is that provision which authorizes the searching of shops and homes for hidden and forbidden beverages, and their seizure when found. This, it is claimed, is in opposition to constitutional restrictions upon the right of search.

If our neighbor of the New York Catholic Review is to be believed, "the Freemasons, who make such fervent pretensions of being patriots, have control of Italy, and the country is bankrupt." Between the Vatican, Freemasonry, brigands and the Mafia, Italy is not a very desirable land for Christian resort.

We think that no apology is necessary for printing in this issue the comprehensive analysis of the "Holy Royal Arch degree," by the late Pres. J. Blanchard. Freemasons of that degree have recently been doing special work in this city, with their usual glorification of its merits, and the article is timely and trustworthy.

Rev. Tullius C. Tupper writes in the Voice of Masonry that "Masonry is not an institution that antagonizes the church; far from it. It helps a man to be a Christian." For Christian read "church-member;" for no Christian needs the help of the lodge to make him a child of God. The Lord Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit alone can do that.

A Masonic congress convened in this city last Monday; but a Masonic contemporary informs us that "it has not met with universal approval" from the fraternity, and adds that "it is powerless to accomplish anything beyond the ventilation of questions that have been more or less discussed in the different Grand bodies for the past half a century, with the result that each grand jurisdiction is a law unto itself." More hereafter.

As the Cynosure goes to press on Tuesday morning, and the court to try the case of Clingman vs. the World's Fair Directory for closing the grounds to the public on a recent Sunday does not sit until later in the day, it is still uncertain whether the Fair will remain open on future Sabbaths or not. Last Sunday admission was paid for by only 18,096 persons, the uncovered exhibits were not many, and an air of desolation pervaded the inclosure.

That well-known secret (paid-for-benevolence) insurance society, the "Ancient Order of United Workmen," having learned the value of maintaining the morality, good health and finances of its membership, and the injurious influence of the liquor traffic, has issued a proclamation demanding that all its members engaged in the retail liquor business either get out of the business or out of the order, and declaring that hereafter all applications for memberships from retail liquor-dealers will be refused. We have not statistics at hand to show how greatly this, as well as other "charitable" institutions, has suffered from the business and influence of the saloon; but the consequent waste and loss to each and all from this source must be considerable.

Several days ago, mob spirit in Indiana received a terrible check. At Corydon, two men named Conrad had been tried for an alleged murder, but, owing to insufficient testimony, both were acquitted. Fired with indignation at this result of the trial, a body of one hundred farmers and others attempted to lynch the two men, who, in self-defence, slew five of their pursuers. The occurrence greatly shocked the people in that vicinity; but it is understood that the "White Caps" have long flourished near Corydon, by whom the residents have been greatly intimidated, and among those who made up this lynching party were several members of this despicable secret organization. While it is deplorable that five men of prominence in the neighborhood should have been involved in such an unlawful and disreputable pursuit, and were slain by those whom they attempted to persecute, yet the event will prove salutary in the interest of law and human rights.

The case of Hon. Chas. D. Long, one of the Supreme Court Justices of the State of Michigan, very pointedly confirms the necessity of weeding the pension list of superfluous barnacles. Judge Long has been drawing a pension at the rate of $72 a month for the loss of the left arm above the elbow and the gunshot wound of left hip, resulting in "total helplessness, requiring the regular aid and attendance of another person." Second Deputy Commissioner Bell says of the case: "Report being made to the bureau that, in spite of the fact of his being pensioned for 'total helplessness, requiring the regular aid and attendance of another person,' he was performing his duties as a justice of the Supreme Court of Michigan at a salary of $7,000 per annum, the bureau naturally came to the conclusion that an investigation of the case was demanded, and suspension followed accordingly, on the ground that the performance of the duties of justice of the Supreme Court of Michigan at a salary of $7,000 per annum was hardly consistent with 'total helplessness.'" He had been drawing his pension since March, 1884, the date of his last medical examination.

FINAL VICTORY.

BY REV. A. THOMSON.

Though sudden storms in wrath may rise;
Though thunders shake the vaulted skies;
Though sudden ague-fits of fear
Drive from our hearts the Christian cheer;
Though foes without and foes within
Add their shrill clamor to the din,
Till our frail lifeboat, tempest-tossed,
Is like a vessel doomed and lost;
Yet even then we deeply know
That all the angry winds that blow—
That all the wrath of winds and sea
But brings us final victory.

Whom do we trust? The Lord whose word
The heaven, the earth and hell have heard—
Heard to obey; the Lord who sends
His daybeams upon foes and friends,
And waters, in his love, the soil
Of honest worth and caltiff vile.
Shall we be faithless to our trust?
Down with the thought, dark and accursed!
When spring forgets the rose of June;
When summer has no sultry noon;
When autumn has no sheaf of gold,
And the fair earth is dead and cold,
O'erwhelmed in one great fiery sea—
E'en then we'll sing his victory!

THE LORD'S DAY AND THE WORLD'S FAIR.

REVISED NOTES OF A SERMON PREACHED IN THE COLLEGE CHURCH, WHEATON, JULY 23,
BY PRES. CHAS. A. BLANCHARD.

"Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath thou shalt restrain."—Psalm 76:10.

Though the Sunday opening question is not entirely settled, it has so far advanced as to constitute a very instructive lesson to the thoughtful mind. We are not certain as to the exact working out of the legal complications which now environ the managers, but we do know that after years of agitation they closed the gates of their own accord, and, if unhindered, would no doubt have continued to keep them closed in deference to the Christian sentiment of the nation. As the wrath and confidence of slave-holders abolished slavery, and as the murder of Haddock closed the saloons in Sioux City, so once more God's Word is proved true, and the fight for a seven-day fair results in God's glory and the good of the people.

This appears, first, in that it is now apparent to all the world that the persons to be relied on to sustain a respectable exhibition are Christians, and those who respect the Christian religion. Many thousands belonging to these two classes did not feel at liberty to patronize the Fair at all while it was open on the Lord's day. But of those attend who did it seemed evident that one-half at least preferred going to church on Sabbath to going to the Fair. The churches are crowded as never before in the history of Chicago; the theaters and the World's Fair have had a small and diminishing attendance. It was just so at the Metropolitan Art Museum in New York. The first year of Sunday opening resulted in a loss on running expenses of nearly ten thousand dollars, and the cancelling of a bequest of fifty thousand. It is clear that valuable exhibitions, like other conservative influences in society, depend for their success on those who honor the Christian religion.

In the second place this effort to turn the Sabbath into a holiday has shown how untrue is the "foreigner" plea. We were told that we must disregard the law of God, the law of the land, our national customs, and the most glorious page in our nation's history, because Europe was to be our guest and she could not understand a Puritan Sabbath. Then it was iterated and reiterated that Chicago was not an American city, and the silent inference was drawn that American laws and customs could not there be maintained. Well, the petitions of millions of people, the laws of our country and the agreement with Congress were all set aside. A successor to Chief Justice Taney was found to throw over the act the mantle of law. The drummers went out to rally the "foreigners" to trample down the American Sabbath, the Bible Sabbath, but lo! they would not come. The best of the European exhibits were covered, and even Japan, slow-waking from the sleep of centuries, put us to shame.

Along with this "foreigner" argument for Sabbath-breaking the "workingman" argument also went to sleep. A small crib bed nicely held them both. It can now be seen that the worthy class of wage-workers never asked for a Sunday Fair, and that those who haunt saloons and other disreputable resorts cannot be coaxed out of them by an Exposition. The diminishing Sunday crowds have swarmed about the Plaisance, where the theaters and beer-shops furnished what they desired. It would have been evident token of insanity if wage-workers should aid in destroying their only rest-day, but the opening of the Fair on the Lord's day proved that they did not wish so to do.

Another way in which the effort to carry on a seven-day-fair glorified God was in that it caused the church to utter a united voice on a moral question. So far as my information goes, there was never an occasion on which so many Christians gave a true testimony at one time. Of course, the Unitarian, Universalist and Romish churches were largely on the other side, though even among them there were notable and honorable exceptions; but the evangelical churches of our nation were practically one in resisting the assault that was made on the Lord's day. This furnishes precedent and example for days to come. It shows what the attitude of the church should be respecting Sunday mails, trains, newspapers, barber-shops, bakeries, tobacco-using, lodges, liquor-serving political parties, etc. Whenever an evil exists the whole church of Jesus Christ should stand as one man against it.

Union of law-loving-men who are not professed Christians with Christians was also a result of the persistent effort to secure a Sunday fair. Thousands of men who are not church-members, and who would not have objected to a Sunday fair if it could have been honorably secured, were decidedly opposed to one that involved what seemed to them a violation of law and of business integrity. They joined in the protest of the church and, under God, contributed to the result which has been attained. This is well. Every man who truly loves his country should stand with the church, on all moral questions at least. We may hope that many beginning thus may go on until they find the source of all good of all law in the mind of our Lord Jesus Christ.

But one of the most impressive lessons taught us by this series of events is the power of the church when she utters a united voice. It is said, and truly, that this is God's doing. It is true. But why does not God stop the Sunday street-cars, papers, and trains? Why did he not stop slavery before the war? Why does he not stop the liquor shops? I think there is but one answer to these inquiries. The reason why evils prevail is often the fact that the church is mixed up with them, enjoys them, and shares in the profit of them. God does not destroy Sodom until Lot goes out. No evil lives when the church of the Lord Jesus separates from it and testifies against it. It is our silence, or our complicity with evil, that give it power, and when we trust in the blood of Jesus and utter a clean testimony God will act for us as he has at this time.

Of course, this suggests our responsibility. If we can overcome the iniquities that now slay our fellows, and do not do so, are we not partners in their death? There is no doubt of it, and God calls us by this marvelous series of providences to occupy higher ground. It is not our duty to destroy evils. That is the sole prerogative of God, and his honor, in this respect, he will not give to another. No flesh can glory in his presence. But it is our duty to testify for the truth and against error. If we utter this testimony humbly and faithfully, as God's witnesses, he will not let our words fall to the ground. God waits even now to smite down lodges, lust, liquor-shops, avarice, Sabbath-breaking, and other evils, until his people are willing to voice his mind concerning them. May he speedily grant us this grace for Jesus' sake! Amen.

A SECRET EMPIRE A FACT, NOT A FIGURE.

Some will persist in supposing that secret empires are to be taken in merely a figurative and not in a literal sense, but this may be disproved by an example. The rule of Prussia before the defeat of Austria and France was limited to its own territory, and it was properly called a kingdom; but after humbling the latter and incorporating the petty German states, voluntarily and involuntarily, accompanied by a partial dis-possession of the rulers, it was appropriately termed an empire because it embraced extraneous or foreign subjects. In a similar manner Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and other societies, including Masonry in its incipient stages, as stated near the beginning of the first chapter of the "Key to Masonry" in the last edition of "My Experiences" advertised in the Cynosure, are equivalent to kingdoms as they are limited to their members; but Masonry, after the coercion or seduction of jacks in the advanced stages, as related in the same place, the Mafia of Italy and the Tin-Ti-Sin of China are properly empires, because they coerce or seduce foreign subjects. Masonry is the only body in this country that aspires to and establishes a secret empire for Mafias, and Tin-Ti-Sins are confined to Italians and Chinese, and therefore lack universality. But empires in crime are more pernicious than political empires, because they strive to extend abominations as well as dominion over others, and are, therefore, more potent for evil. The vengeance of heaven was wreaked upon the Mobabites because they made themselves particularly obnoxious by attempting to coerce and seduce the Israelites, and the Baal-worshippers rendered themselves doubly injurious by seducing the Jews in Ahab's time. In the latter instance they accomplished what they had before attempted in vain. A secret empire is a reality in this country, although the term may also be used figuratively to mark a distinction between an open and a secret but partial government. Baal-worshippers, of whatever denomination, are supporters and members of the secret empire. I wish to emphasize the fact that there is an actual secret empire among Americans like the Mafias among Italians, as referred to in the above book.

As a suggestion that may prove beneficial to some reader who is troubled with weak lungs, we call attention to an article in the Century Magazine for August, by Thomas J. Mays, on the proper breathing movement as a preventive of consumption. He explains that the upper part of the lungs is not used as much as the lower part, and that pulmonary diseases may be avoided by breathing so that every part of the lungs is brought into use. The article is illustrated with diagrams.

A CONTRAST.

VALUE OF THE ROYAL ARCH DEGREE IN MASONRY AS COMPARED WITH ITS ESTIMATE BY EX-PRES. J. BLANCHARD.

The first of the following articles is from a Masonic source; the second is copied from the "Analysis of the 'Holy Royal Arch' Degree" by the late ex-Pres. J. Blanchard, attached to Doeburg's Exposition, page 593, "Freemasonry Illustrated," copyrighted by Ezra A. Cook & Co., Chicago, with whose permission it now appears in the Cynosure.

SPECIAL VALUE OF THE ROYAL ARCH DEGREE.

In the ceremonies and teachings of the Royal Arch degree great stress is laid upon the importance of the sacred volume. The "law and the testimony" are frequently appealed to, and their binding authority recognized. Biblical personages and events are brought to the front and made prominent in the impressive rendering of a degree, than which none other is more pervaded with suggestions relating to the Supreme Architect of the Universe, and the revelations which he has made of himself, and his truth to mankind.

The scenes enacted, the lessons from the Holy Scriptures usually read in the conferring of the degree, together with the search made for and the finding of the book of the law, are all well calculated to impress the mind of the candidate with the value of the sacred records. He must be dull indeed if his respect for the holy writings is not increased during the progress of the ceremony; but, however this may be, he cannot fail to observe the high estimate put upon these writings by the fraternity into which he has been admitted. His thought is quickened in regard to the antiquity of the sacred records, which, for more than twenty-five hundred years, have been so carefully guarded by the Hebrew people, whose history they record in so many important movements and issues, and he is led to conclude that this book of the law—the sacred volume as it now comes into our hands—is in very truth what it has been called: "The foundation-stone of our lodges and the keystone of our Royal Arch."

The book of the law was providentially preserved and strangely found according to the old legend of the Royal Arch degree, and the moral significance of the preservation and finding may be understood without any lecture of explanation. It suggests that the holy volume has been subjected to rough treatment in many a day of rebuke and blasphemy, that it has often been consigned to the flames, and has had to pass through the fire of hostile, captious and ungodly criticism, but that it has survived the floods of ungodliness, weathered the storms of abuse, and come out unscathed from the fires of persecution, and is to-day, as ever, the guide, the hope and the comfort of believing millions; the special illumination of faithful craftsmen who walk in the light of its revelation of truth and duty.

The Royal Arch Degree, as we stated at the beginning, affords a special help to this recognition of the sacred volume as the great and distinguishing light of Freemasonry. The Royal Arch ritual and ceremonial are commended by many excellent features, but in nothing more than in their references to Jehovah and his revelation.—Freemason's Repository.

ITS ORIGIN.

To understand this degree some brief glances at facts in history are necessary. In 1517, Luther had forced on the nations of Europe the question of salvation by ceremonies or salvation by Christ, an issue eternal in its consequences, and which has been agitated from the ceremonies instituted by Cain to this hour. Its agitation in France had culminated in the massacre of Saint Bartholomew, Aug. 23 and 24, 1572, in which more than one hundred thousand Protestants were treacherously and in cold blood assassinated by papists, in the city of Paris and throughout France. The English people, prepared by the labors of Wickliffe a century and a half before, generally received Luther's doctrine of salvation by faith in Christ; but popery had seized on the throne and measurably corrupted the priesthood, so that England was in a balance which continued wavering between the two religions. In 1605, under James I., who the Roman Catholics hoped would restore their religion, five or six otherwise respected and popular Englishmen, enraged at James, and believing that it was lawful to kill heretics, undertook to blow up the King, Lords and Commons with gunpowder. They would have succeeded but for the scruples they had about killing a few Roman Catholics along with the head men of the kingdom. Two Jesuit priests, Tesmond (or Texmund) and Garnet, were cognizant of the intended national assassination, but were under the oath of the confessional. The ferment caused by the memory of Saint Bartholomew and the Gunpowder Plot, with the despotic doctrines and ideas which produced them, did not die out, but drove out the Stuarts and produced Cromwell's "Commonwealth" (A. D. 1649-60).

This was fifty or sixty years before the Apple-tree tavern Grand Lodge had centralized and governed the craft. But the local lodges of working Masons, corrupted by their secrecy, oaths, idleness and drink, naturally supported despotic government and the Stuarts, who are justly described by a strong and nervous writer as "selfish beyond the semblance of benevolence, and voluptuous without the decency of shame." The lodges scattered over England were, at this early date, accustomed to "accept" as Masons members of the nobility, for the most part profligate lords, for the influence of their position in society; and these honorary members inclined the lodges to favor monarchy, and against the commonwealth. The part which Masonry played in favor of popery, despotism and the Stuarts, is thus given by Emanuel Rebold in his General History of Freemasonry in Europe, dedicated, by name, to the principal lodges, grand and local, on the continent of Europe; translated and published by J. Fletcher Brennan, Cincinnati, Ohio, 1868. This writer says:

"After the death of Charles I., in 1649, the Masonic corporations of England, and more particularly those of Scotland, labored in secret for the re-establishment of the throne destroyed by Cromwell; and for this purpose they instituted many degrees hitherto unknown." And Rebold goes on to say that "Charles II., who, during his exile, was received as an accepted Mason by their election, . . . gave to Masonry the title of the Royal Art, because it was mainly by its instrumentality that he was raised to the throne, and monarchy restored to England."—Rebold, p. 55.

This same Masonic writer tells us, in his learned history of the lodge, that "The desire to restore the family of the Stuarts to the throne of England, and thus to favor the interests of Roman Catholicism, suggested to the partisans of that family the idea of forming secret associations by which to carry out their plans; and it was with this object that they obtained entrance into the Masonic lodges on the Continent. They commenced in France;" and Pierson (Traditions, 320-5) tells us that the first degree he ever heard of, named Royal Arch, was brought over by one Ramsey, called Chevalier, Baron, and Doctor, a Scotchman by birth, converted to Rome by Fenelon, and made tutor to the Pretender, son of James II.

Charles II., by oath of office a Protestant, died a papist. Huddlesworth, a popish priest, was smuggled into the dying king's chamber, through a back stairway by which that profligate monarch was wont to receive his courtesans, received his last confession, and gave him the communion, after he had made provision for his favorite concubine. His brother, James II., "The simpleton who lost three kingdoms for a mass," cast off all disguise; professed popery openly; and, failing in his attempt to revolutionize the church and state, both which he had sworn to maintain as they were, threw his scepter into the Thames, abdicated his throne, left the country, and died abroad. His son, the Pretender, aided by papists, openly abroad and secretly at home, kept alive the claim of the Stuarts to the crown of England through the reigns of several monarchs into that of George II. Pierson, in his Traditions of Masonry, above cited, tells us that the tutor of this Pretender first brought a degree called "Royal Arch" from France into England, to organize by the help of Masonry a secret rebellion for the establishment of popery and despotic power. Ramsey's politics failed. His Masonry survived.

An Irishman named Dermott, whose religion, if he had any, is not mentioned, who headed the York wing of the split from the London Grand Lodge, adopted and altered Ramsey's Royal Arch degree and called it the "Holy Royal Arch." It became popular, and aided in healing the schism of seventy years between the London and York lodges, under the Duke of Sussex as Grand Master, in 1813. But the Royal Arch degree was not formally recognized by the London Grand Lodge till 1770. It was then adopted through the efforts of Thomas Dunckerly, Grand Master, aided by the Duke of Clarence, brother of the king. Dunckerly was an illegitimate son of George II.

Such is the singular origin and history of this "Holy Royal Arch" degree. Invented by papists in France, it was brought over by a Scotch traitor and convert to Rome, long resident in France, tutor to the Pretender, and partisan of the Stuarts. It was adopted and altered by an Irish clandestine, or schismatic Mason, and legitimated, in its present form, by the bastard son of a king.

Whoever will read carefully Rebold's History, pp. 105-212, and 314; also Pierson's Traditions, pp. 320-325, will see these astonishing facts verified by the best Masonic authorities.

NAME OF THE DEGREE.

The name "Holy Royal Arch" coincides with and confirms its history taken from Masonic authorities.

The adjective "Holy," in the title, has no reference to moral purity or goodness; but means a fancied, artificial, scenic sanctity, which is official, not moral; as in "The Holy Alliance," of crowned heads, and "Holy Mother Church," which was never more "holy" in this official sense than when in 1414, in the Council of Constance, the general corruption of its priesthood was acknowledged and reform promised; which promise was broken by the new pope as soon as elected, and John Huss burned in violation of plighted faith.

The word "Royal," in the name, means pertaining to kings; from the French Roi (king). It was called "Royal" or king's degree, because invented to overthrow the commonwealth and restore monarchy and the Stuarts in England. See proof cited above.

The term "Arch" comes from the arch which the three candidates pretend to find under the ruins of the first temple, in the drama or play of the degree. In symbol, it represented a monarchist's idea of a state, in which the people are constructed into an arch consisting of orders of commons and nobility resting one on another, with a king for the keystone at the top. The lost keystone found was monarchy restored; and the symbol of Christ, as "the stone which the builders rejected," was blasphemously applied to a Stuart restored as "headstone of the corner." Well might Charles II. call Masonry "The Royal Art."

This Masonic scheme for the restoration of monarchy succeeded in the restoration of Charles II.; but failed to restore his brother James II. and his son. Another house occupied the throne; Protestantism was established and lodge Masonry itself became so unpopular by the final fall of the Stuarts, that in 1717, when the Apple-tree Tavern Lodge was formed, there were but four old decayed lodges in South England. By the formation of that London Grand Lodge, Masonry was turned back again, from a specific end, the overthrow of Protestantism and just government in England, to its general use and object, the dethronement of God and the destruction of mankind, by substituting ceremonies administered by priests for salvation by faith in Christ; and in God through him; which substitution is the vice of the morally dead nations to-day. Thus "Holy" meant priestly; "Royal," kingly; and "Arch," caste; and "Holy Royal Arch" means the degree of Priest, King and Caste.

ITS PRE-EMINENCE.

But what gives this degree its terrible pre-eminence? See how it is exalted by the monitors. Hear Sickels:—

"This degree is indescribably more august, sublime, and important than all which precede it; and is the summit and perfection of ancient Masonry." [See Sickels's Monitor, note 320, p. 504 of this volume.] Mackey tersely calls it,

"This august degree". [Note 325, p. 570.] The explanation of the pre-eminence given to this degree by the lodge writers cited (and others which might be cited) is this: It is the first degree which swears the candidate (see its oath, p. 512) to discard all law but that of the lodge, by helping Masons, "right or wrong"; and to conceal their crimes, given as secrets, "without exception;" or, as formerly taken, "murder and treason not excepted," as a supplement to the Master's oath, which excepts by name these two crimes from the oath of concealment. This is simply abjuring all other allegiance, human or divine, that the candidate may give his fealty, single and undivided, to Satan, anti-Christ, or the god of the lodge. Blue Lodge Masonry, invented in England, had some lip-loyalty to government and some dram-shop religion toward God. That was as far as unsworn Englishmen could be carried. But to overturn the "Commonwealth of England" and establish despotism and popery on the ruins, required the English oath of allegiance to be unsworn and eradicated, and the Royal Arch oath, invented by papists in France, did it. And this oath, invented for a specific purpose in England, answered also the general one of swearing the whole French nation free from God in the Champ de Mars, where the nation became godless, and French Reason enthroned in place of the Most High. Thus, if, in the vigorous language of one, Masonry is "run by an invisible power," that power first had free course, ran and was glorified in this Royal Arch degree. The assurance, also, which the sorcerer gives the candidate to induce him to take the oath, that "it contains nothing which can conflict with his duty to his God, his neighbor or himself," is properly pronounced, by a Royal Arch Mason who has left them, "a villainous lie!"

This oath contains, too, eleven distinct oaths, or specifications, commencing, "Furthermore I promise and swear," and all closed with, "So help me God," in the face of the Son of God, who said, "Swear not at all." It also ascends to the pinnacle of blasphemy and impiety, by setting an average lodge-man behind a burning bush, to personate the Infinite Jehovah. It also travesties the Mosaic miracles, and makes by-play and balderdash of some of the sweetest promises and holiest precepts of God, as: "I will bring the blind by a way they knew not;" and, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted," etc.

This degree certainly "excels all that precede it, but its superiority is its superiority in sorcery, blasphemy and impiety. It is the first degree in which mortal men ape and personate their Maker, and swear to shield each other's villainies and crimes, "without exception".

But while its individual demerits entitle this degree to its bad pre-eminence over all preceding degrees, it is as the culmination and queen of a wicked system that its true, horrible nature appears; a system of rebellion and sacrilege, reaching round our globe and running back to Cain's religion of self-projected worship.

The whole hateful network of false religions have the same impious nature and the same fatal end. They attempt to furnish substitutes for God and the reality of things, to turn history into legends, facts into myths, and truth itself into lies. Their means and motives are also the same: cunning, curiosity, superstition, intimidation, terror, and vague hopes of advantage. Isis, Osiris, Eleusis and the rest; the Masonry and Mormonism of all ages; the Purrow and Bondoo of Africa, meeting nightly in their chaparral lodges; and, with names and titles changed, in Asia as well,—these are the "high places" which Hebrew prophets encountered, and "the unfruitful works of darkness" which Christ's apostles denounced. On the one side, they are schemes by which the few live in luxury and lust on the earnings of the many, and, on the other, religions which sanction crime and keep the dupes content. No man can comprehend Freemasonry without considering it as a part of this poisonous and pestilent winding-sheet of nations; one vast conspiracy against God and goodness; in the words of another, "dovetailed together, and run by an invisible power".

"In the ranks of the opponents of Freemasonry may even to this day be found men of high position and station in the walks of life."—"Voice of Masonry" for July, p. 533. It would be strange indeed if this were not so.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A popular inconsistency—A great temperance convention—A singular cause of strife in the C. E. S.—The course of thunderstorms—A new fact about beer—The tramp problem—Why can't women vote?—Home missionary work in New England—Saloon and lodge tactics alike.

"Laying aside all malice" signifies, in the original, "laying aside all worthlessness." This is one of the nuggets of thought dropped by Rev. A. C. Dixon for the Bible students of Northfield, and indeed for anybody who has been in the habit of thinking this one of the easy commands to obey. How many people, who would on no account harbor malice in their hearts, will glibly confess themselves "unprofitable sinners" without a blush; as if to be useless, a mere cumberer of the ground, was not the acme and the essence of "wickedness" (which is the way the Revised Version puts it) in an age like ours, whose call for workers, rescuers, helpers, like deep calling unto deep, is never still.

This is the time for out-door meetings, and a grand temperance convention is now in session at the Point of Pines, a beautiful seaside resort just out of Boston, where speakers and audience can alike catch enthusiasm from a sight of old ocean in his vastness. All the noted war-horses in the prohibition ranks are to be heard from, including the veteran Neal Dow, the Black Knight, Hector, Mrs. E. Trask Hill, Mrs. Rice, and others. But it has got to be strictly a non-partisan affair, as it will be a very mixed gathering in more than one sense, and it is well understood beforehand that any one who breathes a syllable in favor of third party politics will "throw a coldness over the meeting," even if no worse results follow. This, however, is perhaps inseparable from a convention conducted on such a mammoth scale; but I doubt if the sensation of being thus muzzled will be altogether agreeable to some of the men and women who are booked to speak, and are used to freer platforms. I notice among the list the name of one very prominent Freemason and Republican politician, who is much better known through the State for his secret society affiliations than his anti-saloon record. The lodge will always get a finger in the prohibition pie if it can, and in this largest temperance convention ever held in New England it will not be strange if it succeeds in getting in more than one.

Among other organizations represented is the Christian Endeavor Society. Many good people have been wondering for some time when this society, whose growth is so phenomenal, will stop "endeavoring" and go to "doing." One of our Boston dailies is responsible for the statement that the C. E. Societies in this city are seriously divided over—the dancing question. To dance, or not to dance, has become with many Christian Endeavorers such a burning problem that on a recent excursion the feeling on both sides—so it is reported—developed into almost a factional fight, in which some persisted in dancing, while the anti-dancers smothered the orchestra and blew out the lights. But rather than exercise a zeal without knowledge, would it not be better for the latter to avoid such disgraceful internecine strife by coming out altogether from an organization which has thus degenerated? Why not be content with the first society of Christian Endeavor that was ever instituted, and which met the wants of the world's greatest endeavorers and does—the church itself?

The papers have come to us daily, lurid with details of storm and accident. Few have been the summer tempests more furious in their sweep, or grander in their electrical display than the one a night or two since. The rain came down in sheets, in floods, as if all the fountains of heaven were opened; but what a delicious sense of newness and freshness and exquisite cleanliness the next morning! The majority of New England thunderstorms, so says a Harvard investigator, unlike the course of empire, come to us ready-made from the west,—a striking lack of analogy between law in the natural and the political world.

The temperance people have another medical fact in relation to the use of beer that I suppose will scare the inveterate beer-guzzler about as much as it affects the confirmed smoker to be told of the cancer-forming tendencies of nicotine. It has long been known that beer will rot leather; and now hospital records show that it will rot the fingers of those whose daily business it is to draw this drink for their customers. What it will do, and is doing, to the stomachs of the latter may be inferred, but is not quite so patent, as it requires a post-mortem examination to find out with exactness.

How much we owe to these patient statisticians! Prof. McCook, by his late article in the Forum, has brought his readers face to face with the magnitude of the tramp problem in a way hardly possible except through the cold logic of figures. It seems there are nearly 50,000 men who are tramping the country, strong and able-bodied, with very few exceptions, three-fifths of them in the early prime of life, and 75 per cent under 40. Three-fifths have trades by which they might support themselves, and nine-tenths are able to read and write; yet this large and increasing army, who "produce nothing and pay nothing," costs the country from eight to nine million dollars annually; and for this army of vagabonds who sleep where it happens, and prefer to tramp the country to working for an honest living, the saloon—for this weed in the garden of our modern civilization flourishes regardless of the silver question or the price of wheat, or any other financial factor—is chiefly responsible. Prohibition would do more than any other measure to abate the tramp nuisance.

"Why can't women vote?" asked a questioner in the school for feeble-minded youth at Waltham, Mass. "Because they can't be presidents and governors," was the answer instantly shouted back. Kate Tannatt Woods tells the story in the Transcript; not the less amusing because it points a moral, for this is the way a good many people reason in a circle on this subject, who are neither youths nor feeble-minded;—as if thousands of men did not vote every year who are much less likely ever to become presidents and governors than Miss Willard or Mrs. Livermore.

There are only forty-five towns in Massachusetts without a library; but while general intelligence is more widely diffused than ever before, why is there such a sad religious decadence among the population of our rural districts, where there was once a church-going people, but which are now fast relapsing into "churchless wilds?" The same condition of things prevails very generally throughout the farming districts of New England. The last Andover Review has an account of home missionary work undertaken by some Andover students in a few of the frontier towns of Maine, which sums up the reason in these rather formidable-sounding words: "isolation, individualism, and denominationalism." The second is largely a result of the former, and as individualism made New England to a great degree what she is, it follows that it is not a bad thing in itself to be individual. But the spirit of denomination, dividing the Christian people in one town, who ought to be a unit, into half a dozen weak, struggling churches, with pastors utterly unable to do their best through lack of adequate support, is evil and only evil.

A W. C. T. U. sister of my acquaintance has lately had her eyes opened to the effect, as a stimulant, of Hires' root-beer, so largely patronized as "a temperance drink." There is no safety except in letting alone. The more the prohibition question is agitated, the more the markets will be flooded with these specious delusions. The hand of Joab—that is to say the saloon—is in them all. "No shrewder move has been made by the liquor power," says a leading temperance paper, "than this proviso for... the stopping of the mouths of those who would cry out against the saloon, by making them unconsciously partakers of the very thing they hate." How alike are the tactics in this respect of the saloon and the lodge!

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9, 1893.

Few men have the gift of saying the right thing at the right time and of saying much in few words to a more marked extent than the "blind man eloquent," as Rev. Dr. Milburn, who has for a period of years been Chaplain of the House of Representatives and who is now Chaplain of the Senate, is commonly called. He made his prayer in the House of Representatives at the opening session of that body, and his language was so well-chosen and so well-suited to the occasion, and to the circumstances under which Congress assembled in extra session, that no apology is necessary for quoting therefrom. It was an impressive scene, and even the chattering crowds in the galleries were awed as the blind minister, his sightless orbs turned upward as though looking up to the Supreme Ruler, and his hands extended supplicatingly, said: "In this critical moment of the nation's life, endow thy servants with supreme statesmanship and patriotism, inspire them with sound judgment and good counsel, that all their deliberations and decisions may be guided by thy good Spirit to the welfare, honor, and prosperity of the people. Bring to naught the selfish schemes of men who seek their private gain in public misfortune. Restore confidence in the minds of the people. Dispel all fright and panic, and grant that our country may soon return to its accustomed ways, crowned with prosperity and blessed with peace." It required no extra-vivid imagination to hear a universal amen to that prayer.

Rumsellers are impudent everywhere, but it does seem that those at the national capital are more impudent than those elsewhere. They talk and act as though they absolutely controlled a majority in both branches of Congress and have only to give their orders concerning legislation to have them obeyed. Patriotism has no meaning to the rumsellers; and now, when a distressed country is looking to Congress for legislation that will bring financial relief, the Washington rumsellers are bringing their nefarious influence to bear upon Congress to secure the repeal of the liquor-license law passed by the last Congress, and which has not yet gone into effect, the courts having decided that it must start with the license year, which begins November 1. The queer thing about this move on the part of the liquor-dealers of Washington is that the law was originally drawn for them by one of their lawyers, and when it was introduced not long before the close of the last session of Congress they openly boasted that the temperance people would either have to accept that bill or get nothing. The temperance people accepted the situation, and by hard work succeeded in getting some amendments attached to the original bill, which made it a big improvement upon existing law. It is those amendments that the whisky-sellers object to, and knowing that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get them struck out they are trying to get the whole law repealed.

Rev. W. M. Cleveland, of Buffalo, N. Y., is a guest of his brother, the President, and he preached to large Washington congregations twice last Sunday, his text being in the morning, Isaiah 42:21—"He will magnify the law and make it honorable," and in the evening, Romans 3:5—"Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?" Mr. Cleveland looks nothing like his brother, the President, but there is a resemblance in their methods of talking. No eloquence or oratorical grace; just plain, straightforward, hard-hitting language, such as would be used by a business man in addressing a meeting of his associates. With those who go to church in the same spirit that a gourmand approaches a table laden with dainties to tickle his palate, such ministers as Mr. Cleveland are never popular, but others know their value.

The reading of President Cleveland's message was followed with the closest attention in both House and Senate, and the manner in which it dealt with the financial question is commended even by those who do not agree with the conclusions drawn, and the wish is heard very frequently that Congress in dealing with this matter will keep in mind these words from the message: "This matter arises above the plane of party politics. It vitally concerns every business and calling, and enters every household in the land."

Rev. S. W. Haddaway, the new Chaplain of the House of Representatives, opened yesterday's session with prayer. He is well known and much liked in Washington for his plain-spoken, old-fashioned Methodism.

Hon. Henry W. Blair, formerly Senator from New Hampshire and now a member of the House, received yesterday a handsome bouquet, attached to which was a card bearing the following inscription: "From the National and Local Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The women of the nation say, 'All honor to the brave and loyal champion of womanhood and right.'"

REFORM NEWS.

REV. HENRY L. KELLOGG AT ROCKFORD.

Rockford, Ill., Aug. 5, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. Henry L. Kellogg delivered an excellent lecture on the lodge question before a small audience at the Y. M. C. A. hall of this city last evening. It is to be regretted that not more people attended, but those present seemed to follow the speaker's remarks with the closest attention, and I have no doubt that a deep impression was made on many of them. Large meetings are very often, but not always, the most effectual ones. Where thorough instruction is the object, small gatherings often prove to be more beneficial than great crowds, in which there is, generally, so much to divert the attention of the listener. I am convinced that in the comparatively small meeting of last evening much good was done; a seed was sown which will not fail to grow and bear fruit; the gentlemen present, among whom there were several clergymen, were furnished with facts and arguments that will be used as strong weapons in the holy war against the secret orders.

Having made a few appropriate introductory remarks, Rev. Mr. Kellogg proceeded to show that the veil of secrecy, protecting the members of all lodges, subjects them to the very strong and dangerous temptation of doing things which they would not dare to do if they knew that their words and acts were liable to be made public. Hence the tendency of all secret orders leads them imperceptibly towards the practice of that which is forbidden, and, in the end, of crimes. The speaker further showed that secret societies interfere with the family, the state and the church; they tend to put a separating barrier between man and wife; they hinder and sometimes stop the course of justice; they estrange people from Christ, and exact from their members a false, idolatrous worship. All this was fully proved and illustrated by examples from life.

The questions of several lodge-members who had listened to the lecture revealed that their thoughts had been aroused on the subject.

FROM REV. WM. FENTON.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 11, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have recently visited Austin, a city of about 5,000 inhabitants, located in Mower county, near the southern boundary of this State. None of the churches visited were inclined to let me speak in them. The Norwegian Lutheran church has a Freemason on its board of trustees, and therefore its pastor dare not allow the subject of Freemasonry to be agitated in that church. The Congregational, Baptist and Methodist churches were found to be in the same category with the Lutheran—fearing a division if the secret society question should be agitated. One pastor whom I met on the street declared himself to be a believer in secret societies and a Freemason; and that his name has been proposed for chaplain of a Masonic lodge, which office he expected to fill if elected. In reply to the question, Why he liked Masonry so well? he said: "The symbolism of Masonry so beautifully explains the Bible," which answer seemed to me to be equivalent to that of a pirate who should say: "My black flag, my plank over which I drive my victims into the sea, my swords, cutlasses, guns, etc., beautifully symbolize and explain the righteous laws of civilized nations." A half-hour's conversation with this pastor on the sidewalk seemed to change his mind, for he appeared to be very much ashamed of Freemasonry, said that he knew but little about it, and desired me to send him some literature upon the subject.

Being denied the use of a church building, I spoke on the street, from the text: "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Acts 4:12. There was a well-dressed Freemason in the audience, who promptly turned away as soon as the vicarious atonement was mentioned. Although the text has a very direct application to Freemasonry, as is seen in the context, intending to speak in the same place again on the following evening, I made the mistake of saying almost nothing about Freemasonry, for I departed from that city on the next day.

At Faribault, Rev. Bro. Ostly made me quite welcome to speak in his church. Other pastors in that place are so hampered by the lodges that they deprecate any righteous agitation of Freemasonry.

At La Crosse, Wisconsin, I heard a Freemason preach twice in the Baptist church. The church is without a pastor, and doubtless they will call the Freemason. In the Bible class an allusion to Freemasonry revealed the fact of the presence of a Freemason in the class. A private conversation with him made him ashamed of Freemasonry, and he expressed an interest in Leviticus 5:4, 5, which is God's authoritative commandment for men to break Masonic and all such-like obligations. I hope the man will get free thereby, and so save his soul from Masonry by obedience to his Maker in breaking the Masonic obligation.

A few days ago in conversation with a Christian friend who many years ago joined the Masons, and is now an evangelist, he remembered that while taking the Entered Apprentice degree he was prompted to say that he was prepared to be made a Mason in his heart before he went to the lodge. He now understands the meaning of that lodge catch to be that a man, to be a true Mason, must give his heart to Beelzebub, the prince of liars, alias Osiris, alias Hiram, the lodge name for Satan, the father of Freemasonry, before he goes to the lodge. My friend now tells me that for two or three days he has felt like praising God that he never gave his heart to Masonry. Therefore, when he said that he had been prepared in his heart, the Masons made him lie.

It is a bad job for a man to join the Freemasons, whether he gives his heart to the lodge-god or not.

I have also visited the World's Fair, and will offer a few words about it. If it is continued as it is for another year it may go far towards making Chicago as Sodom and Gomorrah were when the Lord rained fire and brimstone upon them out of heaven. A part of God's plan for our return to his favor is, that we shall wear clothing and eat our bread in the sweat of our faces. When our Saviour came from heaven to earth, he wore clothing and ate his bread in the sweat of his face. Missionaries tell us that when savages are converted to God they want to wear clothes and work at some honorable employment. Upon entering the Woman's Building at this World's Fair, the first thing that greets us is a statue of a naked woman. Now the sweet and wholesome food prepared by these excellent cooks and placed upon their tables at a moderate price cannot compensate for their indecency in the exposure of the shame of their nakedness. In nearly every room of the Fine Art Building there are pictures of naked men and women and crowds of men and women are thronging these rooms all day long. In some of the villages, at least in one, men and women appear in their savage state, with scarcely sufficient clothing to cover the shame of their nakedness.

In the street of Cairo there is a pagan temple, in which the worship of the golden calf is carried on with singing and dancing, led by an Egyptian priest, and girls dancing with such blandishments as might tempt a Herod to cut off the head of a John the Baptist to please her. The priest, at the close of the idolatrous worship, explained it in harmony with Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and such like religions. When the performance was ended he talked with me, and explained the pictures portrayed on the wall as referring to nature worship and Freemasonry. He told me that he himself is a Freemason, and he believes that the Bible and Christianity are founded upon ancient Freemasonry or nature-worship; therefore he calls himself a Christian as well as a Freemason and calf-worshiper. It is nothing to him, of course, that our God slew about three thousand of his own chosen people for practicing that same calf-worship; that is to say that for adopting the faith of this Egyptian priest and his Masonic brethren, Dr. Lorimer and Bishop Fallows, God destroyed about 3,000 of his ancient people. Possibly, these distinguished Christian pastors, so-called, may be so deluded with certain mysteries of "higher criticism" as to think they may evade the judgments of the Almighty, revealed from heaven, against their ungodliness, and executed at Mount Sinai; which execution the apostle would say was an example to them that should hereafter live ungodly, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. When we consider that these Freemason idolaters can boast of 721 ordained clergymen of the State of New York alone affiliated under penalty of death, with their sworn allies, we may well ask, What is this world coming to?

Of course, the exhibition at this World's Fair of useful arts and manufactures, inventions, scientific discoveries, education exhibits and all such like are commendable, and might, without the unclean adjuncts alluded to, be, with the blessing of God, a means for the improvement of mankind, sweet and pure as the breath of heaven. But, defiled with abominations, it is abhorrent in the sight of God and all right-minded people.

W. FENTON.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The "chronic grumbler" is at the Fair, but so far I have had no occasion to solicit his services. The N. C. A. exhibit has received impartial treatment from the authorities, and my associations with neighboring exhibitors have been perfectly pleasant. The curtains were drawn in front of our booth on Sabbath and a notice, "Closed on the Lord's day," securely attached. Some miscreant wrote: "You darn fool, take away your trash; we have no use for it." Seeing the inscription, the guard properly removed the notice and reported to me on Monday morning. The lieutenant called soon after and assured me that if detected the offender would be shown no quarter.

The largest freedom compatible with good order is shown, and I notice that whenever the conversation becomes spirited a guard appears; but hitherto there has been no occasion for his interference.

I could give a number of indications showing an effort on foot to induce your agent to sell and deliver, contrary to the rules of the Fair; but I have cautiously kept within the limits. To make sure of my rights, I went to Superintendent Peabody and received my instructions from headquarters, so that no charges have been preferred against me. While the advocates and apologists for the lodge are numerous and bold, I am confident that "they that be with us are more than they that be with them." There is this difference, however: Secret order men love the chief seats, and to stand on the corners of the streets "to be seen of men," from both directions, while the disciples of the "meek and lowly" One are, as a rule, modest and retiring. It would be better if they were more outspoken in defence of the cause of Christ.

The Knights of Pythias pride themselves upon their bravery when put to the test, forgetting that the true test of bravery is to expose and renounce a fraud, and not to commit the foolhardy act of maiming one's self, or of being made a fool of by jumping upon rubber spikes for the amusement of clownish, shallow-minded impostors who practice upon their credulity and give them silly ceremonies in return for their initiation fees.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DISCOVERING THE FOUNDATIONS.

DEKALB, Iowa, August, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Cynosure is a very excellent Christian paper. It shows a very gentle spirit in discovering the foundation principles of the Gospel, especially with opposition. We are told somewhere in the Bible about "the foundation" being "discovered". And it seems to me to be the business of the N. C. A. to remove that which obscures the foundation.

The foundation principles of Christianity are lost sight of by worldliness creeping into the church, and when "the enemy comes in like a flood," many float with the current. It has become well understood, by a few at least who have posted themselves, that lodgery is a false and Christless religion; yet, by being a cunningly devised system of organized deception, it has crawled into the church and created a popular tide on which it has floated into the high places of the church. "There is spiritual wickedness in high places." Perhaps by the societies of Jesuits in the Roman church, and Freemasonry in the Protestant church, the "man of sin exalting himself above all that is called God," is in each place. His number is 666. Have the titles of secretism no signification? What does it mean that the lodge has a "Noble Grand," "Worshipful" and "Most Worshipful Master"? What is more blasphemous? Is it not the "mystery of iniquity" that the foundation principles should be so lost sight of that any should be so deceived as to try to serve two masters? But it is encouraging that the "hidden things of dishonesty" are being so exposed that it no longer appears in harmony with salvation; but the foundation is being so discovered that even the world exclaims, in substance, "There is something wrong with a man's religion when he attends lodge on prayer-meeting nights." How many the lodge has weaned from prayer-meeting eternity will reveal.

CYRUS SMITH.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE SOUTH.

SELMA, Ala., July 17, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am a young man who has been about five years in ministerial work. For something over two years I was a pastor in Little Rock; for about eighteen months in Searcy, and for nine months editor of the Baptist Vanguard. I am now pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist church, in this place, having about 250 communicants. The students of Selma University worship with us also.

I came here under a divine impression, and since I have been here God has given me moderately of what men call success; that is to say, increasing congregation and an apparently growing confidence among the people that I am a man of Gospel purpose.

Ever since I have been a Christian and understood the New Testament spirit of Christianity, I have been opposed to secret lodges—especially to Christians belonging to them. I have kept aloof from them when they offered me inducements to come in that they might have my influence. I cannot thus defile my conscience. You have been giving me the Cynosure for several years, and it has kept me informed and inspired. In Little Rock the fight was on between the pastors and the lodges. Here I found the pastors either affiliating with them, or afraid of them. I came, and at once began to preach and lecture against them, at church, at the university and privately. A good many were so solicitous of my welfare as to try to get me to join their particular order, and so gave me abundant opportunity of giving them a private sword thrust. This I have done from sheer conviction of duty, everywhere I could. They are so arrogant here as to want to make the pulpits their advertising medium in exchange for support. This I could not possibly permit. I was imprudent enough to say so publicly. This enraged them, of course. But, although a good many of my leading brethren belong to them, they respect me. I know that they sometimes think I would get a better support were I to allow myself to be made the tool of their oath-bound brethren. But my Christian conscience cries out, and my whole nature revolts, at the idea. They thought a few weeks ago to handicap me. They sent a whisky-scented "Immaculate" (?) to offer me admittance into that order without either fee or initiation ceremony. I politely refused, and vouchsafed my Scriptural reasons for so doing. He at once stigmatized me as an enemy to those things which "build up the race" and openly threatened to do what he could to tear down my congregation. This did not appall me, for the congregation is Christ's, and I am charged to preach the Word, and not obey congregations. But I am sad when I see the people so ignorantly following off these "blind guides" who "call good evil and evil good," and seem, with a picture of a false charity, to deceive even the very elect.

I want some help in the form of as many pamphlets as you can spare me, and the Cynosure, if you can afford it, to two or three preachers who belong to my congregation. I am not able to pay for these. This I am sorry for, for I know some one must pay for them. But if you can send them, they will do good. If you cannot send them, I am going to do what I can in the name of God. He will help me. I belong to him and his church; not to the world.

God bless you and help you to spread the light. There does not seem much hope till Christ comes; but we can "fight in the shade."

Very truly,

C. P. JONES.

LODGE NOTES.

(From Secret Society Papers.)

Of the Italian Chamber of Deputies 300 of the 504 are Freemasons, and of the French Chamber 200.

Portland, Oregon is to have a new Odd-fellows' temple which, when completed, will cost $400,000.

In September next occurs the semi-centennial of the introduction of Odd-fellowship into New Hampshire.

The Manchester Unity of Odd-fellows, of England, increased 22,614 in one year. They number about three-quarters of a million.

At the close of the year 1892 there were 697,842 Masons in the United States and Canada. At this writing there are 700,000.

In March last there were ninety-seven subordinate lodges of Odd-fellows in Chicago. In addition to this there are a number of encampments, cantons and Rebekah lodges.

The officers of the national guard of the Hawaiian provisional government were largely, if not all of them, taken from the divisions of the uniform rank, Knights of Pythias, because of their knowledge of military tactics and drill. The uniform adopted is that of the Ohio national guard.

Three general revisions of the rituals of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows have been made since the institution of the order in America, viz.: in 1835, 1845 and 1880. Occasional, and many times unimportant, changes and corrections and modifications have been made, but no revisions except as above stated.

January 1, 1892, the Independent Order of Odd-fellows outnumbered the Manchester Unity Odd-fellows 33,378. The aggregate number of white Odd-fellows on the globe at that date was 1,572,384. At this time, eighteen months later, the aggregate would seem to be more than one and three-quarter millions.

There were 112,846 votes cast at the Pythian Home Fair at New York for a diamond badge for the most popular Knight in the State. The three highest were E. M. Friend, of Perfection Lodge, No. 270, who received 53,108; the next, Anson S. McNab, of Rochester City Lodge, No. 212, 27,771 votes, and J. C. DeLamare, of Ivy Lodge, No. 167, 11,809 votes.

Editor.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 17, 1893.

ORGANIZED DIABOLISM.

One of the most unsavory and wicked portions of Chicago is that lying between Kinzie street on the north, Canalport on the south, Halstead street on the west, and Chicago River on the east. Whatever is vile, intemperate, cruel, murderous and God-forsaken, can be found in that district. It is doubtful if the old historic "Five Points" of New York City ever rivalled it in wickedness.

There are, however, bright spots in that sin-blighted and saloon-cursed stronghold of Satan, in the shape of Gospel missions, controlled by earnest Christian workers, who are laboring hard to save souls from the filth and degradation that environ them; and by the power of God's Holy Spirit they have hitherto met with success in snatching sinners as brands from the burning, and leading them to the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation.

This Gospel invasion of the devil's territory has greatly stirred up the wrath of its hardened denizens, and now there seems to have been created, and armed with infernal panoply, an organized and vindictive party of infidels and sons of Belial, whose object, judging from their recent manifestations, is to oppose the Gospel and those who are endeavoring to promulgate it in that vicinity.

Several times, within a few weeks, have street meetings on West Madison street, near the Cynosure office, been broken up, the evangelists either driven away or arrested on some trumped-up charge and thrust into a police station like a common criminal.

That these attacks in force are the result of premeditated and vicious opposition to the Gospel of Christ, in an organized form, is manifest in the fact that on one occasion a leader of the mob read to the assembled populace from a vile infidel publication, vilifying the Lord Jesus Christ and opposing his teachings.

It is supposed that we have laws and officers provided to permit peaceable Christian worship in our streets and to protect those who are engaged in this laudable work. If we have, it is the duty of the city and the State to enforce them; and if we have not such secular protection for our evangelists and their work, it is time that, like Paul, we appeal to Cæsar and the Lord of Hosts for our vindication.

SUN-WORSHIP.

Sabianism, or the worship of the sun, together with the moon and stars, has been, throughout the world, the most common and conspicuous form of idolatry. Whatever may have been the names of the idols, or the methods of the worship, in the last analysis it was supreme honor to the orb of day.

In the most ancient of books—that of Job—the man of Uz speaks of sun-worship as the most besetting and heinous of sins. He says: "If I beheld the sun when it shined, or the moon walking in brightness, and my heart hath been secretly enticed, or my mouth hath kissed my hand, this also were an iniquity to be punished by the Judge; for I should have denied the God that is above." Job 31: 26-28.

By the law of Moses it was declared to be a crime punishable with death by stoning, in which the witnesses were to be the first to execute the penalty, and, afterwards, the whole people. See Deut. 17: 2-7.

In that vision of idolatrous worship in the secret chambers that Ezekiel saw (Ezek. 8: 7-18), there were twenty-five men, with their backs towards the temple of the Lord, and their faces towards the east, and "they worshiped the sun in the east." And God said: "Therefore will I deal in fury: mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity; and though they cry in mine ears with a loud cry, yet will I not hear them." Then follows the vision of the terrible destruction of idolaters, as recorded in chapter nine, in which the angel was to "slay utterly both old and young."

Many of our modern customs had their origin in this system of sun-worship, and some of our institutions are practically a continuation of the old heathenism. Take Freemasonry as an example. It has a system of initiation which, according to the testimony of the most distinguished Masonic authors, is practically the same as that of the "ancient mysteries," or the secret worship of the pagan gods. Of its three principal officers, each represents the sun. The "Worshipful Master" personifies the sun in the east, where he has his station. The "Senior Warden" represents the sun in the west, where he also sits; while the "Junior Warden" stands for the sun in the south. Each of these officers is a fancied embodiment respectively, of wisdom, strength and beauty. In this they correspond with that triad of Hindu deities, Brahma, Vishnu and Siva, who are supposed to be, each in station, the sun in the east, the west and the south, and to stand for wisdom, strength and beauty.

In the Masonic rite of circumambulation, the candidate follows the course of the sun from the east to the west by the way of the south. By this and other ceremonies he is supposed, as in the "ancient mysteries," to experience the new birth.

It is impossible to resist the conviction that the modern system is derived from the ancient; and we are expressly told by that distinguished Masonic author, Dr. Albert G. Mackey, that Freemasonry is "a philosophical development of the ancient sun-worship." (Mackey's Ritualist, article "Master Mason.")

It is probable that idolatry less gross in outward form is as common in modern as it was in ancient society. Surely the apostolic admonition—"Keep yourselves from idols," has not become obsolete. We do not charge all Freemasons with being conscious sun-worshippers, for many of them have scarcely studied the origin and character of their institution; but we hold that its ceremonies and obligations are inconsistent with the true worship of God; and it is a matter of astonishment how any who profess Christianity, and knowing how God regarded the ancient sun-worship, should connect themselves with an institution which is, at best, "a philosophical development" of this abhorrent iniquity; or, having joined it, as many do, in ignorance of its un-Christian character, and, subsequently learning its wickedness, can remain willing adherents of it.

RADICALISM IN REFORMS.

All earnest and efficient reformers have been men of intense radicalism. They have sought to know the whole truth, and have not failed to declare and apply it.

There is no book so radical in its teachings as the Bible, and no teacher so perfectly fearless and uncompromising as our Lord Jesus Christ. The apostles owed their success (under God) to the fact that they had not shunned to declare his whole counsel, and that they could appeal to the people that they had lived holily, justly and unblamably among them that believed.

In most reforms the mistake has been in shunning the unpopularity of radicalism, and in endeavoring to do some work for the Lord without exciting the wrath of Satan and his servants. Thus, in the anti-slavery reform, there were those who saw clearly the "abuses of slavery," and were not afraid to speak against them; but they did not regard slavery as a sin in itself, and wrote learned arguments in favor of the right of slaveholders to a standing in the church. Of course, such men's influence counted for nothing in the great struggle. Some of them, like the conductors of the New York Observer at that time, had to be silenced during the slaveholders' rebellion, for giving aid to the enemy.

In the temperance reform, such men as the late Dr. Howard Crosby, Dr. Rainsford, and Carter H. Harrison, though differing widely in personal character, are yet alike in opposing the "abuses of the liquor traffic." The brewers, the wholesale and retail rum-sellers, all count these men as on their side. They, too, are opposed to the abuses of the traffic. The question is, Where does the abuse begin? In this they widely differ among themselves.

The cause of Peace has suffered from a similar inconsistency and confusion of ideas. Many good men deplore war, and favor arbitration of international disputes, and yet hold that military establishments are necessary, and therefore right. They hold that war is right under some circumstances. But since a war cannot be right on both sides, they are likely to differ very greatly from similar men on the other side of a given conflict. Honest differences of opinion may very properly exist; but when they lead men to butcher each other, there must be something wrong in the way they are held and enforced.

Men who hold such views, however sincere in their beliefs or worthy in their motives, can have no real influence in the abolition of war. The question will always be, Is not this a just and necessary war? It is probable that in the vast majority of wars this question has been decided in the affirmative by those who fought on both sides. Until men come to hold that the military system is in itself un-Christian, and that no consequences can ever be so bad as those which come from the adoption of un-Christian principles and methods, there can be no real and abiding opposition to international homicides.

The same principles apply, in a marked degree, to the anti-secrecy reform. Some excellent people are opposed to the evils of secret societies, and would like, if they could without too much controversy, to be found on the side of the reformers. Some of these orders they unqualifiedly condemn; others, they think, are less objectionable, and others still, as positively good. Hence they cannot oppose the lodge system as such, and more are likely, in the end, to be counted in favor of, rather than against, this whole system of folly and wickedness. We have never known any of this class of persons who ever did anything for the anti-secrecy reform. The history of the leaders in the Liberal wing of the United Brethren in Christ is an illustration of the downward tendency of this kind of conservatism.

No reform can make any substantial progress, except as it is built on the bedrock of Christian principles; and no reformers are to be trusted as builders who are not themselves built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone.

IRISH HOME RULE IN JEOPARDY.

Mr. Gladstone, it was recently and currently reported, determined to push his Home Rule for Ireland measure to a termination during the present term of Parliament. The fact that the bill had safely passed its second reading in the House of Commons greatly encouraged its friends as to its success upon its final passage. But the proverbial "slip between the cup and the lip," which caused the death of the ancient Anceus, is likely to defeat the hopes of Mr. Gladstone and his Home Rule adherents.

The event which has so completely changed the aspect of affairs in the House, is the defection of nine members of the Parnellite faction, who, after formal deliberation, have decided to vote against the bill on its third reading. It is also stated that two Liberal supporters of Mr. Gladstone have deserted the cause, and that Mr. Davitt, owing to illness, will not be present to vote when the motion for a third reading is made.

These losses, it is estimated, will prove extremely dangerous to Mr. Gladstone's measure, which is by no means free from objectionable features; and if it is voted down in the House, it will be principally through the disaffection of the Irish members.

WILL THE MINISTRY DEFEND ITSELF?

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, in last week's Cynosure, gave a very plain account of how the ministers of the Gospel are bitterly condemned by lodge devotees. Said he:

"The church is assailed and the ministry censured most vehemently . . . with only an occasional protest from the watchmen on Zion's walls. The 'craft' assume the right of censorship, and use the largest liberty in making comparisons between church and lodge fidelity and charity, invariably placing the munificence of the mystic brotherhood above the brotherhood of Christ. The more violent have no scruples about calling the ministry mercenaries, deadbeats, hirelings and hypocrites, and church members bigoted, narrow-minded and fanatical, and yet these accusers of the brethren protest against the kindest criticism and grow 'red in the face' over any unfavorable utterance from the pulpit. They call it persecution, a wanton or flagrant insult to the dignity of their venerable or benevolent orders, as if it was their sole prerogative to question the motives or impugn the integrity of men seeing things differently from what they do. This looks unfair, and unmanly."

Of course the ministry of the Gospel is the ministry of peace; but the Bible nowhere forbids it to defend the church and Christianity against the assaults of its enemies. Every minister who does not know or realize the immense audacity and evil of the lodge should make it his study and a part of his duty to repel these assaults with the Word of God and the power of his Spirit; and those who know the strength and iniquity of this secret foe of Christ and his kingdom cannot afford to be derelict and refrain from raising up a banner against these evils in the name of the Lord.

The time is at hand when the church of Christ and his ministry must either compromise with the increasing sins of the age, or fight manfully against them with all the Gospel armament. The first course will surely lead to shameful defeat and the victory of evil; the second—a war waged against the lodge in the power of God against the mighty—can end only in the triumph of Christ and his truth.

CONGRESS AND FINANCE.

The new (Fifty-third) Congress met in special session at Washington last week, at the call of the President, to consider ways and means of relieving the present financial pressure. Speaker Crisp was re-elected to preside over the House.

President Cleveland's message was remarkable for fairness and comprehensiveness. Its principal features may be thus briefly summarized: He recommends a repeal of the Sherman silver-purchase law; reviews the recent business failures and embarrassments, which he attributes, in the main, to the past legislation relating to silver coinage, and shows how the Secretary of the Treasury is, by the law, unable to prevent the over-purchase of silver bullion.

Under the existing law, he says, silver notes have been issued against bullion purchase to the amount of more than $147,000,000, and while the greater part of this vast amount of silver lies uncoined and useless in the Treasury vaults, the government has been redeeming these notes in gold. In his own words, "we have made the depletion of our gold easy."

Considering what would result from a continuation of this policy, he proceeds:

Unless government bonds are to be constantly issued and sold to replenish our exhausted gold, only to be again exhausted, it is apparent that the operation of the silver-purchase law now in force leads in the direction of the entire substitution of silver for the gold in the government Treasury and that this must be followed by the payment of all government obligations in depreciated silver.

He regards the present business depression as growing out of a loss of confidence in men and securities, rather than the product of any more permanent cause, and presents the remedy which he believes is only necessary to restore the financial situation to a more satisfactory condition.

Touching our silver coinage, an intelligent exchange makes public the following, which may help some reader who is puzzled by monetary questions:

But 8,000,000 silver dollars were coined in the whole history of the country previous to 1873, while since that time 417,000,000 silver dollars have been coined. In the single year of 1890 there were thirty million more silver dollars coined than in the whole history of the country before 1873.

This is the basis on which President Cleveland appeals for judicious legislation.

—For the present, the Franco-Siam controversy is quiet, Siam having unconditionally yielded to the tyrannical demands of France, under a private assurance that the other great powers shall settle the territorial dispute. Somehow or other, this statement revives a vision of the partition of Poland, many years ago. Will the same fate overtake Siam?

—On Sunday the 6th inst. Rev. J. C. Nevin, Ph. D., formerly a United Presbyterian missionary to China, addressed the Chinese at the Waters Mission at 221 West Madison street (N. C. A. Building). He has since returned to his home in California. By the way, this Chinese mission of Mrs. Waters, aided by Mr. Dott, is quite a prosperous Christian institution, and deserves encouragement.

—Down in Kansas, the other day, the cornerstone of a Presbyterian church was laid, "Masonic Lodge No. 17 having charge of the ceremonies." We have no recollection that when Paul laid the foundations of the church at Ephesus, he called on the pagan Roman Band of Castle Antonia at Jerusalem to take "charge of the ceremonies." Why should the Christless lodge be called upon to perform similar duty in a Christian land?

—Rev. J. F. Hanson, pastor of the Friends' church at Mt. Vernon, So. Dakota, favored us with a pleasant call this week. In our reform work he is heart and hand with us. Not long since, learning that it was proposed to start a secret lodge in his vicinity, he procured a dollar's worth of Dr. Carradine's great Sermon on Secret Societies and distributed them so judiciously as to prevent the formation of the intended oath-bound abomination. It was a praiseworthy effort, well rewarded.

—A chance circular coming our way, we have learned that the advertiser and his wife will, for five dollars, guarantee to cure us of "any kind of sickness, disease or trouble," with "phrenological remedies." Also, that for one dollar they will tell our "best business, proper marriage, and how we can be happy and make plenty of money." Also, for twenty-five cents, they will tell our "troubles and sickness without asking us a question." This is the kind of "confidence games" that lure money from the unwary when they visit the great cities. It is strange, but the surest way to win one's confidence, in many cases, is to obtain a belief in the most incredible statements. "A lie will travel seven leagues while Truth is putting on his boots."

We are reaching a very important class in the young men who call at our booth. A sample is the case of two young men from Kalamazoo, Mich. After listening for a time to an explanation of the secret system, one of them said: "This is a revelation to us. We supposed that Masonry and Odd-fellowship were secret societies, but you seem to know more about them than these men who have attempted to defend them, and you don't seem to be afraid to tell what you know." They remained to ask questions and selected one of each of the N. C. A. tracts for use among their fellows at home.

Like Robert G. Ingersoll, the mystic brethren keep to the "beaten path" of slandering the church and her ministry, and when hard-pressed they say very bitter things. A man representing himself as a Christian and a Knight Templar, was dilating upon the unity of the two and their helpfulness each to the other. I interrupted him by asking: "How did you enjoy the fifth libation?" He replied: "First rate." I explained to the bystanders what the fifth libation is, and how it is taken from a human skull with an invocation of double damnation, etc.; to which he replied "never a word;" but a brother in the crowd, after some remarks not complimentary to your agent, said sneeringly: "That God of yours was a magnificent fellow, wasn't he, to let a few Jews murder him? You are right, sir; we Masons have no use for such a God as that. We believe in humanity and have no use for your priests and church cant and humbuggery." Of course I took occasion to call attention to him as a finished specimen of Masonic work, and showed that the authorized religion of Masonry treated our divine Lord with the same contempt. It was quite evident that some of the brothers did not enjoy this blasphemy; but not one ventured a word in denial of the slander or in defence of the accused.

It is by such incidents that the true character of the system is brought out and the charges we bring against the order are confirmed. I hope arrangements will be made, and means supplied, to keep some one in this important position as long as the people continue to gather from all parts of our own and foreign countries.

I have now been at the N. C. A. booth in the Fair three weeks, and find it one of the most difficult and laborious positions I have ever undertaken to fill. I have met not only every disposition and form of tactics that the opposition have the hardihood to employ, but representatives from all countries in the civilized world. The defenders of the secret system are less numerous, but far more demonstrative, than its opponents. Both classes accept our literature and listen to illustrated chart-talks and to the histories and explanations of the character and workings of the system with interest, often expressing surprise and frequently satisfaction at whatever the N. C. A. is doing. The callers of one day pass on, carrying whatever information they have gained, and others follow, keeping the stream constantly flowing. There is no time to read and ponder amid the rush of hurrying and weary throngs, but what is gathered will be read and pondered over in far-away homes beside many waters.

It requires about twenty-five (25) dollars per week to meet the expense of this work, and the committee having it in charge inform me that provision is made for meeting this expense for two weeks, and beyond that time they must depend upon friends for the means, or modify or suspend the work altogether. I am confident that if the friends could personally witness the work, and feel its importance, they would cheerfully respond, so there would be no lack of means, and the committee could go on and enlarge rather than diminish their efforts. All sums sent to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer N. C. A., and designated for this purpose, will be used by the Fair Committee according to their best judgment. Even in hard and panicky times, like the present, such an opportunity ought not to pass unimproved for want of means.

Your fellow laborer, J. P. STODDARD.

FROM REV. J. P. RICHARDS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A few days ago I called on our very efficient Secretary, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, who represents our exhibit at the World's Fair, and am satisfied that we could have no better man for the place. I was particularly pleased with the manner and skill with which he explained the "chart." Besides, there are so many opportunities for discussing secretism, that I think a vast amount of good will result from his conferences with friends and foes.

It is profitable to tarry awhile with him, and hear his arguments with the different secretists, on the various orders; they open their eyes when he asks them how they felt when they were being taken "through a course of sprouts," as our dear ex-President Blanchard called it, when doing work on the third degree, or how he felt when he drank wine out of a human skull, as is done in the Knight Templar degree.

I noticed that ladies were quite interested in the discussions. Why should they not be?

Sometimes these lodgites get pretty mad when Bro. S. brings down his sledge-hammer arguments. They don't like it a bit, and go away, I am afraid, thinking hard thoughts, not proper to appear in print. The lodge will not brook discussion if it can prevent it; and if it had the power, would to-day prohibit the discussion of its principles.

Sixty years ago, Freemasonry was driven out of the field of discussion in the North, and fled among the cradle-robbers of the South; and as it was driven from the field in disgrace, we have the right to ask, "What have you come back for?"

"But every dog will have his day,
And every fool will have his way."

Hence there is no law in any of the States to prevent a man from making a fool of himself. When a man will pay fifty dollars for information which he can obtain at 221 West Madison street for fifty cents, he must be lacking in something.

I once asked a Mason why Edmond Ronayne was not prosecuted for perjury by the Masons. I said: "There are said to be 40,000 Masons in Illinois. Some of them are smart lawyers, and some are wealthy; why don't you prosecute him?" He goes before a notary-public, and swears that he has given a true exposition of the first three degrees of Masonry; why don't you prosecute him for perjury?"

The reply: "It would only make the matter worse."

"Yes," I said, "it would."

Masons admit to Bro. Stoddard, that the lodge is a swindle, and it is a gigantic swindle. There are thousands of honest Masons who would gladly give "the handmaid of Christianity" a wide berth were it not for fear of the ban of the lodge.

Let us pray for such, that they may have courage to come out from among the workers of iniquity, and let the lodge alone with all their might.

THE HOME.

"THE LEAST OF THESE."

She had little of earthly beauty,
She had less of earthly lore;
She climbed by a path so narrow,
Such wearisome burdens bore!
And she came with heart a-tremble
To the warder at heaven's door,

And said, "There were hearts of heroes;"
She said, "There were hands of might;
I had only my little children,
That called to me day and night;
I could only soothe their sorrows,
Their childish hearts make light."

And she bowed her head in silence,
And she hid her face in shame;
When, out from a blaze of glory,
A form majestic came;
And sweeter than all heaven's music,
Lo, some one called her name!

"Dear heart! that hath self forgotten,
That never its own has sought,
Who keepeth the weak from falling,
To the King hath jewels brought.
Lo, what thou hast done for the children
For the Lord himself was wrought!"

HOW BROWN PLAYED THE ORGAN.

The church was finished. For many years the society had worshiped in a worn-out structure of wood, inconvenient in form, and insufficient in size; and now stood in its place a noble edifice of brick and stone, with arches and lofty towers, broad aisles and rich effects of light and shade.

The first service was to be an organ recital, and for this long preparation had been made; for the organ, like everything else about the building, had been constructed upon a liberal scale, and was believed to be an instrument of great brilliancy and power. Performers had been invited from all the neighboring cities, and each had been given an opportunity to become familiar with all the peculiarities of the organ before the time of the performance.

The entertainment began with one of the great masterpieces of composition, played by an organist of country-wide reputation; and this was followed by another and another selection of the same kind, performed with equal skill. All the resources of the great machine were brought into play, and every possible combination was produced. This torrent of melody and harmony continued for two hours, and yet one performer remained to be heard.

What, in all the range of music, remained to him? What of soft or loud, high or low, slow or quick, could he offer that would have any charm for an audience at such a time? But he was the man that had designed the organ, had planned all its fine effects, and had watched its construction from day to day. He knew where to place his hand for every tone without a moment's thought. Slowly he seated himself upon the bench, with no music sheets before him, and then came a mere breath from the great forest of pipes, as soft and low as an autumn breeze among dead leaves:

"Nearer my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee;
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me."

Gradually the notes swelled and swelled. New tones appeared and grew in strength, as though they came in from the surrounding space. The player's cheeks were flushed, and his eyes shone. His soul was full of the beautiful hymn. He forgot the organ, the audience, the whole world. The waves of melody rolled down the great nave, and through the fretted Moorish arches, and into the deep spaces of the vaulted ceiling, till every part of the building trembled in response:

"Still all my song shall be,
Nearer my God to thee;
Nearer my God, to thee;
Nearer to thee."

In the audience heads dropped here and there, and eyes became moist; and when at last the music had died away, one by one the people stole softly out, as though they felt that they had been in a holy atmosphere.

"Brown, dear old fellow, do you know what you have been doing?" said a friend, placing his hands on the shoulders of the organist as he came down the organ-loft steps.

"I feel as though I had been away—away somewhere."

He had been up in the light; he had been a little "nearer."—Christian Union.

INCREASING RESPECT FOR THE SABBATH.

It is one of the most remarkable facts of our time that those older nations from which some of us propose to borrow our habit of disregard for the Lord's day are striving at this very moment, with most impressive earnestness, to restore the earlier sacredness of that day. In Germany, in Switzerland, and in France, there are already organizations of serious and thoughtful men who are seeking to banish the continental Sunday. They have seen on the one hand, as any one may see in France to-day, that the removal of the sacred sanctions, which, with us, hold the first day of the week in a kind of chaste reserve, have eventuated not merely in degrading it to the level of a vulgar holiday, but also of degrading and enslaving him for whom its privileges were, most of all, designed—the wearied, overworked, and poorly-paid laboring man. They have seen that in such a capital as Paris, it has already come to pass that the workingman's Sunday is often as toilsome a day as any other, and that since the law no longer guards the day from labor, the capitalist and contractor no longer spare nor regard the laborer.—Selected.

ACTIVITY IS LIFE.

"The daily performance of Christian duty leaves no arrears."

Somewhere we have read a sermon that ended an important part of one division with these words. Amid many weary days of toil and sorrow, and while burdens heavy to be borne pressed us down, and life seemed almost a constant weariness, we have suffered our thoughts to run on and on in ceaseless flow, and at last some of them are gathering in quiet groups for the eye, and may we hope the heart as well, of those who read.

In any work or business it is the little left undone each day that makes such an accumulation of work. It is this accumulation of work that makes work a burden.

Ruskin said: "If you want knowledge you must toil for it. If you want food you must toil for it." Said a poor man in Brooklyn, with a family of eleven to maintain, "If I were worth a million of dollars I would not wish to do much different than I do now every day, working hour after hour." He must have known how to work and leave no daily arrears.

Between you, my friend, and any end, lies a broad field of labor. How to take it up and enjoy it is the secret.

President Garfield's advice to young men was: "Let me beg of you, in the outset of your career, to dismiss from your minds all idea of succeeding by luck. There is no more common thought among young people than that foolish one that by-and-by something will turn up by which they will suddenly achieve fame or fortune. No, young gentlemen, things don't turn up in this world, unless somebody turns them up. Inertia is one of the indispensable laws of matter, and things lie flat where they are until by some intelligent spirit (for nothing but spirit makes motion in this world) they are endowed with activity and life. Luck is an ignis fatuus. You may follow it to ruin, but not to success. The great Napoleon, who believed in his destiny, followed it until he saw his star go down in blackest night, when the Old Guard perished around him and Waterloo was lost. A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck."

In thought and character, all that is worth having is to be earned by patient endeavor. To work so that a small surplus is gained and the reserve forces are not exhausted is the way to enjoy work. A day of rest or recreation earned and reserved for a coming need is doubly blessed, blessed in anticipation and in reality; but a holiday borrowed from labor days is robbed of all its best delights before we begin its use.

In Christian life how these accumulations hinder us. God and conscience never forget the little of each day's duties left undone. This it is that makes it a hard way to live; but, thanks be to God, there is daily grace for daily living. The remedy for accumulating arrears is in living neither in the past nor future, but moment by moment, hour by hour, day by day, time and strength given each moment to match its duty. The swift-winged moments come in close company with God's swift-winged help.—Wesleyan Methodist.

AUNT RACHEL'S TREATMENT.

Crash! An ominous sound came from the kitchen as I was sitting for a quiet talk with my friend, Mrs. Morrison. We had just been enjoying a well-prepared dinner at her table, and the two or three gentlemen guests had gone.

"Something's broken," I said.

"It sounds like it," she replied.

I expected her to get up, and run nervously to the kitchen, but she quietly continued the conversation. A moment after there appeared at the door a Swedish servant with a most woe-begone look on her face, and a tear on either cheek. I could not forbear an exclamation of dismay at perceiving that in her hand she held the fragments of my friend's largest meat dish, belonging to her fine dinner set.

"Broken?" asked Mrs. Morrison, looking at it as she might have looked at the wreck of a kitchen bowl. "You might have selected something else to break, seems to me, Lena," she added, with a little shake of the head, but still with a smile.

"It slipped right out of my hands," said the girl in great distress.

"Oh, don't stop to fret over it, Lena. You don't break many dishes. No, it's no use to save the pieces. It can't be mended."

"Well, Ruth!" I exclaimed, as Lena, greatly comforted, took her departure. "Pope must surely have known some ancestress of yours when he wrote:

'And mistress of herself when china falls.'

Any one would think to see how coolly you take the ruin of that handsome dish that you could have a new set, any day, if you want it."

"Which is very far from being the case, as you know," said my friend, soberly. "I am afraid I cannot match the dish, and if I can, I can scarcely afford the money for it just now."

"But you do not seem to mind the accident at all," I persisted, quite unable to understand her equanimity.

"Oh, yes, I do—after a fashion," she went on very deliberately. "That set was a present from dear old Aunt Rachel, and I am sorry to see any piece of it broken. But if you are wondering because I do not fret over what can't be helped, I can only assure you, Eleanor, that I cannot afford to. It is bad enough to lose the dish without that."

"Any one will admit that fretting is of no use," I said. "But you are about the only woman I have ever seen who really lived up to the idea."

"I didn't begin that way," replied Ruth, settling back into her chair with a thoughtful expression on her pleasant face. "I was very much given to fretting over small annoyances when I was a good deal younger. It was that same dear old Aunt Rachel who cured me by vigorous treatment."

"I should like her recipe, if you can give it to me."

"Oh, it is only the same old one you may hear or read any day of your life: 'Don't fret; it is thankless, rebellious, and utterly useless; never does a bit of good, and always does harm,' with plenty more such plain truths. I think it must have been the sturdy administration which affected me. When we were first married, Fred and I began housekeeping in our pretty little house with everything nice about it, and were as happy as young people usually are. But my habit of worrying over trifles began putting little blots here and there on the smooth surface of our lives. A broken dish, a stained tablecloth, a poorly-ironed article, the flies, the dust, the soot, any petty annoyance, would bring a cloud over me which shut out the brightness all about me. I could see that Fred was hurt and fretted by it.

"Well, real trouble came at last. Our baby was sick for weeks and weeks, and we thought he never would get well. How I looked back on the days which had been blessed, and I wondered how I had ever been able to find trouble in trifles! As I prayed that the shadow of death might not so early darked our home, I believed I should never again allow myself to be moved by small troubles. I did not have an opportunity to test my resolution very soon; for as baby recovered I became ill. For many a day I lay far beyond all resolving for the future; almost, indeed, beyond all hope of any future, so far as this world is concerned. The winter had passed before I won my way back to life, and began to take up its cares again one by one.

"I held well to my good resolution as I rejoiced in being able to oversee the house-cleaning, until I came to the parlor carpet. The room had been shut up for months, and had not been properly aired and swept, and the moths had made fearful ravages all around the edges of the carpet. You'll be astonished to hear, Eleanor, that all my equanimity broke down at sight of it."

"No," I said, sympathizingly, "I don't wonder at all. I've known women who would be fairly sick over such a thing."

"It was a beautiful carpet, and I had been very proud of it. I did not find that anything else had suffered from neglect through my illness; but forgot all the other pleasant facts in view of this distressing one. Even when the baby crept over it, crowing in delight at the bright flowers, and trying to pick them with his chubby little hands, I forgot how much I would have given, not so very long ago, to hear a merry note from him. Well, just as I was at the very culmination of my 'pet,' Aunt Rachel's kindly face beamed upon me for a week's visit."

"'Thankful to see thee so well, dear,' was her greeting. 'The Lord has been good to thee. Not that I don't mean that he would have been good if thee hadn't got well.'"

"'Yes, I'm very well now, thank you, Aunt Rachel,' I said, after the first inquiries were over. 'Well enough, you see, having got past my great troubles, to settle down to small worries: Look here— isn't this enough to turn the soul of a housekeeper sick?'"

"'It is a pity,' she remarked, viewing the mischief."

"'Of course some things had to be neglected while I was sick,' I continued, petulantly: 'but I never dreamed about such a thing as this.'"

"'She looked at me with her quiet eyes, always so full, I used to think, of the very peace of heaven.'"

"'Surely, Ruth, thee isn't going to make the matter worse by vexing thy immortal soul over a mishap?'"

"'Oh, it's very well for you to talk that way, Aunt Rachel,' I replied. 'But I can't afford a new carpet just now.'"

"'Thee doesn't need one. The bad places don't show much.'"

"'But I shall always know they are there, and it will take away all my peace of mind.'"

"The eyes looked straighter into mine as she talked on, something like this: 'Thy peace is worth little, to thee or to any one else, if it can be so easily broken. Ruth Harvey, thee is starting out in life; beware that thy disposition to fret thyself about small things does not prove a curse to thee and thine. Every thought of discontent about matters beyond thy control is not only a sin against the God who orders for thee, but a sin against thy own soul, and an added weight to every annoyance. If cherished, such thoughts become a pest of stinging serpents in thy breast. Thee will grow old and wrinkled before thy time. Thee will be peevish, complaining and fault-finding. Thee will be a terror to thy husband and children.'"

"'Yes,' continued Mrs. Morrison, 'she said all that and more. She said: 'Is one thread of that carpet woven into thy real peace of mind? Can it, or other small things, really concern thy welfare, or that of those dear to thee, either for this world or the next?'"

"'I never heard it quite so strongly before,' I said thoughtfully, as my friend paused. 'And if I hadn't seen you, I should have said it was very good talk indeed, but that no woman could live up to it.'"

"'I had a week of it, you see,' said Mrs. Morrison. 'When Aunt Rachel went away, one of the last things she said to me was: 'I want thee to bear in mind what I said, dear—that every fretful thought thee wastes on small accidents is only so much added to their burden.'"

"'I think I took it well to heart, for I concluded, Eleanor, that life's burdens are heavy enough without any such addition. And I will tell you one thing I have observed," she added with a laugh, "I do believe that four-fifths of the women that fret, do it because they think it a solemn duty."

"Nonsense!" I exclaimed.

"They do," she persisted. "You notice the next woman you meet to whom some mishap occurs. See if a great part of her worrying is not because she thinks she is expected to worry, and that it might be taken ill of her if she didn't."

I wonder if Mrs. Morrison is right!—Sydney Dayre, in the Congregationalist.

GRANDPA'S WAY.

My grandpa is the strangest man!

Of course I love him dearly,
But really it does seem to me
He looks at things so queerly.

He always thinks that every day
Is right, no matter whether
It rains or snows, or shines or blows,
Or what the kind of weather.

When outdoor fun is ruined by
A heavy shower provoking,
He pats my head, and says, "You see
The dry earth needs a soaking."

And when I think the day too warm
For any kind of pleasure,
He says, "The corn has grown an inch—
I see without a measure."

And when I fret because the wind
Has set my things all whirling,
He looks at me, and says, "Tut! Tut!
This close air needs a stirring!"

He says, when drifts are piling high,
And fence-posts scarcely peeping:
How warm beneath their blanket white
The little flowers are keeping!

Sometimes I think when on his face
His sweet smile shines so clearly,
It would be nice if every one
Could see things just so clearly.

TEMPERANCE.

TEMPERANCE AND PURITY.

The World's Woman Christian Temperance Union and the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States will hold their conventions on successive days beginning October 16th, 1893, in the city of Chicago, in the Memorial Art Institute building. This will be the twentieth convention of the White Ribboners of the United States and the second biennial convention of the World's W. C. T. U. The presence is expected of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, honorary president of the World's W. C. T. U.; Lady Henry Somerset, president of the British Women's Temperance Association; Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, president of the Dominion W. C. T. U.; Miss Jessie Ackerman, president of the Australian W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, Round-the-World missionaries of the World's W. C. T. U., besides representative women from most of the great nations of the world, all of whom will be presented to the convention. The officers of the national W. C. T. U. with nearly twenty years' experience will do their utmost to make a program of even exceptional variety and power for their own annual meeting. The music will be in charge of Mrs. Harris, of Boston, and Miss Gordon's "White-Ribbon Hymnal" and "Songs of the Y. W. C. T. U." will be used by both conventions. The annual sermon will be delivered by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, president of the W. C. T. U. of Michigan. The dedication of the Woman's Temple (headquarters of the World's and National W. C. T. U.) will take place in connection with the convention services, and the dedicatory address will be delivered by Lady Henry Somerset. The Children's Fountain will also be presented to the city of Chicago with appropriate ceremonies. The Polyglot petition signed in fifty languages will be festooned around the upper hall in which the convention is held. The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold a meeting one evening under the management of the general secretary, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York City. The annual address of the president of the World's and the National W. C. T. U. will be delivered at the opening of the convention (October 16th) at 1 o'clock, A. M. The mass meetings will be addressed by returned White-Ribbon missionaries by leading speakers of the North and South, and it is hoped by many representatives from foreign lands. The address of welcome will be given by Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, of Chicago, the founder of the Temperance Temple, and it is expected that replies will be made by Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, of Massachusetts, Miss Lillian Phelps, of Canada, and others. The memorial services will be conducted by Mrs. L. S. Rounds, president of the W. C. T. U. of Illinois, and the address in memory of Miss Mary Allen West will be given by Mrs. Clara Hoffman of Missouri. The overflow meetings will be in charge of Rev. Anna Shaw of Washington, D. C. In view of many considerations, that will occur to the thoughtful and devoted of our membership, the first Sunday in October (the 1st) is appointed as a day of prayer throughout all our borders earnestly calling upon every White-Ribbon woman to offer up secret prayer to God for herself, her home, her nation, and our world, that the alcohol and opium trades, and licensed and unlicensed impurity, may be overthrown root and branch, and the glory of God may cover the whole earth as the waters do the great deep. Nothing less is worthy of his promise and our faith. It is also urged that a prayer meeting of the White Ribboners be held on this date, or on the Saturday previous, and that efforts shall be made to secure the general observance of Saturday or Sunday, as shall be most practicable for the local societies, but especially that pastors shall be earnestly requested to preach on the temperance cause, and mass meetings in its interests be held on Saturday or Sunday evening.

THE GREEDY BOTTLE.

A poor, under-sized boy named Tim, sitting by a bottle, and looking in, said, "I wonder if there can be a pair of shoes in it." He wanted to go to a Sunday-school picnic, but he had no shoes. His mother had mended his clothes, but said his shoes were so bad he must go barefoot. Then he took a brick and broke the bottle, but there were no shoes in it, and he was frightened, for it was his father's bottle. Tim sat down again, and sobbed so hard that he did not hear a step beside him until a voice said:

"Well! what's all this?" He sprang up in great alarm; it was his father.

"Who broke my bottle?" he asked.

"I did," said Tim, catching his breath, half in terror and half between his sobs.

"Why did you?" Tim looked up. The voice did not sound so terrible as he had expected. The truth was, his father had been touched at the sight of the forlorn figure, so very small and so sorrowful, which had bent over the broken bottle.

"Why," he said, "I was looking for a pair of new shoes; I want a pair of shoes awful bad to wear to the picnic—all the other chaps wear shoes."

"How came you to think you'd find shoes in a bottle?" the father asked.

"Why, mother said so; I asked for some new shoes, and she said they had gone into the black bottle, and that lots of other things had gone into it, too—coats and hats, and bread and meat and things; and I thought if I broke it I'd find 'em all, and there ain't a thing in it!" And Tim sat down again and cried harder than ever. His father seated himself on a box in the disorderly yard, and remained quiet for so long a time that Tim at last looked cautiously up.

"I'm real sorry I broke your bottle, father; I'll never do it again."

"No, I guess you won't," he said, laying a hand on the rough little head as he went away, leaving Tim overcome with astonishment that his father had not been angry with him. Two days after, on the very evening before the picnic, he handed Tim a parcel, telling him to open it.

"New shoes! New shoes!" he shouted. "O father, did you get a new bottle? And were they in it?"

"No, my boy, there isn't going to be a new bottle. Your mother was right—the things all went into the bottle, but you see getting them out is no easy matter; so, God helping me, I am going to keep them out after this."—Selected.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Obedience to God often brings trial and persecution. Vs. 19-21. Agrippa could not well pass judgment on Paul's case without first hearing the wonderful story of his conversion. When the whole course of a man's life is suddenly altered, and he embraces with zeal a faith that he despised before, the most natural question to ask is this: "What wrought the change?" It was particularly pertinent in Paul's case. A Jew of the Jews, one of the strictest sect of the Pharisees, a member of the Sanhedrim and brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, it must have taken some marvelous experience to lift him in a moment out of all the ruts of Jewish prejudice, and make him an apostle of the very faith he once hated so bitterly as to devote all his powers of mind and body to the task of crushing it out. He therefore relates at length "the heavenly vision" to which he was not and could not be "disobedient." Paul, though he died a martyr's death, and passed through incredible suffering and hardship, was the most successful man that ever lived. He set before his mind's eye the highest goal of attainment, and the most glorious reward possible to humanity; and he achieved it. But it was through obedience. So we in like manner must set our aims high, and be "obedient to the heavenly vision;" the revelation of God's will as it is given to us in Scripture, in the leadings of the Holy Spirit, and in the Lord's providential dealings with us. But this way of obedience is also the way of the cross. Paul was commanded to give the message to his own countrymen first, and in its very nature it was especially distasteful to a nation so self-righteous as the Jews, who believed that they were God's chosen people, and under no necessity to repent. "And then to the Gentiles." This was God's divine order, and another "stone of stumbling" to the Jews. They could not brook the idea that heathen Gentiles should be received into the kingdom on the same level with themselves. This, in brief, was the prime cause why the Jews had mobbed him in the temple and sought to kill him. He had been simply obedient—doing what his Lord commanded, without any fear of consequences, and so he had the blessing which in Rom. 1: 10 is promised to such: peace of mind in the midst of the wildest tumult, the honor which cometh from God alone, and eternal glory hereafter.

2. The sum of Paul's preaching. Vs. 22, 23. "Having therefore obtained help of God." The Lord never deserts his faithful soldiers, any more than a king in battle would desert his own son if in extreme peril from the foe. "Witnessing both to small and great." The Gospel age is the witnessing age. Christ himself is "the faithful and true Witness," and the demand has ever been, and will grow more imperative at the close of the age, for those who shall testify boldly to the truth as it is in him; neither fearing the great nor despising the humble, neither subtracting from the message or adding thereto.

3. Unbelieving hearers. Vs. 24-29. In the view of Festus, Paul was a mere religious fanatic, whose brain had been turned by too much poring over theological questions. So a Christian who separates himself from the world must expect to be called "crazy" by the unbelieving, to whom his conduct appears to be only the wildest folly. But Paul was the only truly sane person in the group. He was pressing towards "the mark of the prize of the high calling"—life eternal. They were striving only for things which perished in the using, and they had their reward. In less than two years after, Festus died in the province of which he was governor. Agrippa lived to be an old man, dying in the year 100, but both he and Berenice are only remembered in history for their lives of loathsome and shocking immorality. Dead in pleasure, they were even dead while they lived. "For this thing was not done in a corner." "The Son of the Father," Geo. Macdonald beautifully says, "has nothing to conceal, but all the Godhead to reveal." Like their divine Master, the apostles lived in a blaze of publicity. They held no secret meetings, but everybody was freely invited and could enter without grip or password. Nothing was done or spoken in the secret chambers of darkness. Christianity invites—nay, urges—the closest scrutiny. Because it is of God it seeks the light. "Almost thou persuadest me"—or rather would persuade me on very slight grounds or with very few words—"to become a Christian." Agrippa did not speak sincerely but sarcastically. He was hardened in sin. Though brought up a Jew, conversant with the prophets, and all the threatenings of God's Word against sin, he was in the same condition with men to-day whom we call "Gospel-hardened." Neither Drusilla nor Berenice "trembled," or were "almost persuaded," showing that they were even more impervious to conviction than their male companions in guilt.

4. The acquittal. Vs. 30-32. Paul was triumphantly vindicated; but he had appealed to Cæsar, and to Cæsar he must go. The kindly disposed Agrippa seems to have regretted it as the only hindrance in the way of his setting Paul free. But he saw only with his natural human wisdom. God had a vast and mighty plan to carry out, and no doubt Paul was divinely inspired to take this step, as thereby he was saved from death at the hands of the infuriated Jews, and given the long-coveted opportunity to "preach the Gospel at Rome also."

LITERATURE.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From A. W. Hall, publisher, Syracuse, N. Y.: "The School Plot Unmasked; or The Papal Conspiracy Against American Institutions." By Olin Marvin Owen, author of "Rum, Rags and Religion," etc. This book shows the present position that Rome occupies in America; why Rome assails the schools; Rome's mode of attack; Rome a political machine, and the attitude of political parties. The "mode of attack" is well defined, and the whole subject-matter is patriotically and convincingly set forth. It should enjoy a wide perusal. Price, 25 cents.

From H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston: "A Square Talk to Young Men about the Inspiration of the Bible." By H. L. Hastings. This is one of the third million of copies of this little work that have been printed. This fact evinces the great popularity with which it has been received, and suggests an unknown quantity but no trifling amount of good that it may have accomplished. Certainly, it deserves circulation among all intelligent young men, especially those who are in danger of imbibing wrong ideas of the Bible and Christianity from the infidel publications and lectures of the day. It refutes, in a plain and masterly manner, ancient and modern dogmas and ridicule against Bible history, the truth of which it tends strongly to confirm.

From the same publisher we have also the following tracts—five and ten-cent numbers of Hastings' "Anti-Infidel Library: "Spiritual Manifestations—their nature and significance," by Wm. Ramsey; "Spirit Workings in Various Lands and Ages," by Wm. Ramsey; "Familiar Spirits—their workings and teachings," by Wm. Ramsey; "The Mystery Solved: Spiritual Manifestations Explained," by Wm. Ramsey; "The Depths of Satan: A Solution of Spirit Mysteries," by Wm. Ramsey; "Trying the Spirits: an Examination of Modern Spiritualism," by H. L. Hastings; "Ancient Heathenism and Modern Spiritualism," by H. L. Hastings; "Primitive Christianity and Modern Spiritualism," by H. L. Hastings; "Witchcraft—Is It a Reality or Delusion?" by H. L. Hastings; and "Necromancy," by H. L. Hastings. In these comely tracts are contained many useful facts and suggestions designed to inform the reader of the diabolical character and evils of the great spiritual delusion that has won so many brilliant minds into its fascinating but fatal embrace.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Arena for August is, as usual, well-filled with philosophic and religious dogmas, the latter of which are no credit to it. In philosophy and literature it is intelligent, and often interesting; but it has no fellowship with vital Christianity, and hence is not calculated to advance the cause of Christ. Its articles on secular subjects include a paper on Inebriety and Insanity, by Dr. Keeley; Monometallism, by Senator Stewart; The Financial Problem, by Hon. W. H. Standish; A Practical View of the Mind-cure, by Joseph L. Hasbrouck, and Mask or Mirror, by the editor. Boston: The Arena Publishing Co. 50 cents.

The Review of Reviews for August has, for one of its features of vital interest, brief communications from twelve prominent professors of political economy and finance upon the present monetary situation. It happens that every one of these gentlemen distinctly declares for the immediate repeal of the Sherman Silver Purchase act. Beyond this their points of view are quite various. Dr. Albert Shaw contributes an illustrated article upon the career of the late Senator Leland Stanford. A particularly timely article is Mr. W. T. Stead's contribution of a sketch of the late Admiral Tryon and the "Victoria" disaster. Rev. Herbert Stead gives his impressions of the civic life of the city of Chicago. The article is one of decided intrinsic value, and evinces a remarkable power of quick observation and generalization. This magazine seems to hold the most intimate relations with almost everything and everybody in all parts of the world. New York City, 13 Astor place. 25 cents.

The August St. Nicholas contains an article on The Crown-Prince of Siam, by Hon. Isaac Townsend Smith, Consul-General for Siam, which happens to be of great timeliness. In the City Series, now running in St. Nicholas, President D. C. Gilman describes Baltimore. The Viking Ship is described and drawn by J. O. Davidson. An article that will attract every boy who owns, and can use, a jackknife is McCabe's story of The Boyhood of Edison. Less modern, but fully as interesting, is the selection from Hakluyt's "Voyages," prepared by the late Florence Snedeker—a young writer who was becoming most favorably known to the readers of magazines. This installment gives an account of the last voyage made to the West Indies by Sir John Hawkins. From Montresia to San Mateo, by E. Vinton Blake, is an exciting frontier episode, telling of the rescue of a white boy from a Mexican family who held him in servitude. Other prose pieces worthy of mention are: The Crown-Prince of Siam, about the cutting of whose hair there is ceremony and bother enough to console any average boy for the infliction; Outwitting a Shark, a short incident, "told without waste of words" (as Charles Reade put it); St. Nicholas at the Fair, a notice of The Century Company's exhibit; and two articles on animals—The Little Bear of Cazadero, by Charles H. Shinn, and The Stormy Petrel, by Capt. H. D. Smith, of the United States revenue service. Finely illustrated, as usual, throughout. New York: The Century Co. 25 cents.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—We noted a few weeks ago the death of Rev. E. F. Thwing, D.D., at Canton, China. Last week the sad news was received of the death of his widow, which occurred at Canton, June 18.

—On June 30th the corner-stone of the Immanuel Ibor City Mission, Tampa, Fla., was laid with appropriate ceremonies. This is the first chapel built in the United States by the Congregationalists for the exclusive use of Hispano-Americans. A flourishing Sunday-school and preaching services are maintained.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The twenty-third annual encampment of Freeport District Camp Meeting Association begins at Lena, Ill., Aug. 22, and will continue till Aug. 29. Extensive preparation has been made for the comfort of campers.

—Anniversary services will be held at the Fowler M. E. church, corner Millard avenue and Twenty-third street, Chicago, from Wednesday, Aug. 23, to Sunday, Sept. 3. Special evangelistic services will be held each evening.

—Bishop Taylor attended the camp meeting at Cousin's Run, Ind. More than usual interest was awakened by the fact that this was the first visit of any of our bishops to this historic ground, where Bishop Asbury made several attempts to found a university.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—In 1807 there were 24,291,000 Protestants in the German Empire, and 14,564,000 Roman Catholics. In 1891, when the last census was taken, there were 31,026,810 Protestants and 17,671,921 Roman Catholics. In Alsace-Lorraine the Protestants are increasing in numbers, while the Roman Catholics are decreasing.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The fifty-sixth annual report of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, recently issued, shows a total expenditure for the year of $1,008,124, the list of missionaries including six hundred and twenty-six men and women.

—The Cumberland Presbyterian church is being slightly agitated over a proposition to change their name. It is assumed by those who desire the change that the word "Cumberland" constantly demands explanation, and does not at a glance show what the church is. We venture that this very fact has afforded many an opportunity for personal testimony in favor of the doctrines of the church. It is a dignified name as it now is.

OBITUARY.

MRS. SARAH M. HARRIS, wife of Rev. E. L. Harris, died at her home near Delavan, Wis., July 23, 1893.

Mrs. Harris was born at Grafton, Vt., August 1, 1814. In her young womanhood she gave her heart to Christ, and united with the Baptist church.

After completing her education at Hamilton, N. Y., she was married to Elder Harris, August 30, 1843, and with him removed to Beloit, Wis., in 1850. It was there that she gave her wise counsel and assistance to make successful the earnest, effective labor of the husband in his duties as pastor of the First Baptist church in that city. Four years later they removed to their farm-home, near Delavan, where they continued to reside until she was called to a better world.

Mrs. Harris was a strong friend and supporter of the anti-secrecy reform, and as such had special claims upon the interest of the Cynosure readers, who will no doubt deeply sympathize with her afflicted husband in his bereavement.

By request we print the following sketch of her Christian character from a local paper:

"The universal testimony of those who knew her was of a rare, unselfish life, never thinking of herself if others could be helped; and of a Christian life consecrated to her Master's service in a way so true, so useful, that everyone with whom she came in contact felt its wonderful influence. She was a pastor's daughter and was then, as her husband testifies, of more than usual profit to him in his ministerial labors. Their marriage took place at the close of the ordination services of our brother, and was a fitting beginning of that union Christian service which continued so long. In her youth she desired to enter the foreign mission field, and always cherished a deep interest in this work, taking such part in the mission circles and services as was possible. But it is hard to say that anything was second in her great heart of love, that pertained to the kingdom of Christ. Whatever she might do to assist her husband who continued, though remaining on his farm, to do royal service for Christ in various pastorate around his home, she did with her might. Perhaps no better summary need be given than the words of her husband in the hour of his great sorrow. 'No man ever had a better wife, no children a better mother.' For some months the feebleness of age had been aggravated by a stroke of paralysis. But the loving care of the husband and the devotion of her children had made as smooth as possible the path to the chill river, and the crossing of that we may be assured, through the faithfulness of the Saviour, was one of safety and triumph. She quietly breathed out her life, 'falling asleep in Jesus'. The last of August would have been the fiftieth anniversary of her marriage, but God had better things in store for her and took her home, where she shall have part in the marriage-supper of the Lamb."

Mrs. Harris left to mourn for her, besides her husband and two children and a son by adoption, a brother, Deacon C. M. Fuller, and two sisters, with many relatives, all of whom have the sympathy of a large circle of friends, that yet also grieve over the ending of a noble life.

The funeral services were held at the old home on the afternoon of July 25, conducted by Rev. C. A. Hobbs, who spoke from the words, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," and was assisted by Rev. Mr. Stewart, of Spring Prairie. The attendance of old settlers, friends, neighbors and relatives was large, including many from a distance. Peace to her ashes!

The suspension of the Dispensary law in South Carolina in one district by Judge Hudson has led to a supersedeas from the Supreme Court, which continues the law in effect while the appeal is being heard.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Arriving from England in search of her husband, Mrs. Edward Douglass finds him a convict at Joliet prison.

Frederick A. Root, federal court clerk, was fatally hurt by a horse cart running into a crowded horse car.

Banker Silverman's liabilities were reduced to $229,972.72. A bookkeeper had entered a sum in the wrong account.

Improvement continues in the monetary situation. The change is not radical, but is gradually developing.

Professor Gray told the congress of municipal governments why cities are misgoverned—respectable men lack interest.

Proportional representation was advocated by several speakers before the Suffrage Congress at the Art Palace.

Papers on legal practice were read and discussed by eminent judges at the Congress of jurisprudence.

Lum Ling, a crazy Chinaman, will probably be returned to China. Insane persons are beheaded in that empire.

Pythian day at the World's Fair did not draw out the crowd expected. Although there are said to be 10,000 or more Knights in Chicago, not many of them joined in the parade that marched into Midway Plaisance early in the afternoon. The exercises, like the parade, were brief,—much shorter than the original program contemplated.

At a meeting of citizens in the interest of elevated railroad tracks it was decided to select a committee of 100 to continue the agitation.

Twenty-five Poles, suspected of offering to work below the scale, were set upon in Packingtown, and but for the bravery of Officer Murphy might have lost their lives.

Ask Some Questions about Pearlline, of any woman who uses it. Ask her what she thinks of it, and whether it's quite safe to use, and if washing and cleaning is any easier with it. Ask her how the clothes look and last, when they're not rubbed over the washboard. Ask her how it would seem to go back to that eternal rub, rub, rub, now that she has got rid of it. If she has used Pearlline faithfully, and just as directed on every package, she'll probably have one question to ask you: "How in the world do you manage to get along without it."

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT

of the Holy Ghost.

BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,

Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Sanctification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personality. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person.
3. The New Testament Designating Terms.
4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God.
6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost.
7. The Trinity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost.
10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World."
15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 32 and 33. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few opinions:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural.The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by perusing it.Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polemical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Oilcloth or linoleum will be brightened by a thin coat of copal varnish.

Rice flour wafers, slightly sweetened, are a nice dainty for afternoon teas.

Dampen a cloth and dip in soda and rub tinware briskly, after which wipe dry.

A large piece of charcoal put in a refrigerator will help to keep it sweet. It should be renewed every week.

Tea trays and all japanned goods should be cleaned with a sponge wet with warm water and a little soap.

Kerosene applied with a rag when you are about to put your stoves away for the summer will prevent them from rusting.

Skimmed milk makes hardwood floors, stained ones and oilcloth look shiny. A woolen cloth should be used to wipe up the floor.

Sunning clothes and carpets and curtains ought to be as important a part of the twice-yearly cleaning as scrubbing and washing.

In bottling pickles or catsup, boil the corks, and while hot you can press them in the bottles, and when cold they are sealed tightly.

To clean woodwork which is painted, wring a soft cloth out of warm water, dip in whiting and rub off the whiting and rub with a dry cloth.

A great convenience when cleaning house is a stick with a notch in the end that will lift the picture cords off from the hooks without so much stepping up and down.

For starching muslins, gingham and calicoes dissolve a piece of alum the size of a hickory nut for every pint of starch. This will keep the colors bright for a long time.

If you have lace for muslin curtains to be washed there is no better time than now. They will dry beautifully out of doors these sunny days. Wash them carefully in tepid water. Use castile soap, if any be necessary, and dry in the sunshine upon frames.

No fruit loses flavor from being carelessly handled more quickly than apples. Apples which have been well stored retain their flavor throughout the winter, but those which have been allowed to lie about with decaying specimens or are stored loosely in barrels either lose their flavor or acquire a rank taste from the conditions around them.

If you desire a luxuriant growth of healthy hair of a natural color, nature's crowning ornament of both sexes, use only Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages. 75cts. The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftentimes, 'than fiction.' One day the choral-mass came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun 'or-give him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, aa' t' row me out for dead, and I meth him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, bat to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer!"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedmen is a volume of 491 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ill., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ill.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Backley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far exceeding any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands, and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the first Presbyterian church in Freeport was established."

Polo, (Ills.) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the 'sixties' among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices."

FARM NOTES.

In reply to inquiries addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture asking for a definite expression, in bushels, of a normal full yield of wheat, which is the basis represented by 100, upon which the crop reporters of the United States Department of Agriculture are instructed to calculate their percentages of impairment, the statistician of the department, H. A. Robinson, has addressed to the secretary a communication giving the information sought. He says that the ascertained normal, or full crop, expressed in terms of "bushels per acre" for the entire country, is taken from the tables of the Department, and that during the past ten years the normal standard has varied from 13.60 to 15.69, averaging 14.5 bushels per acre.

The largest poultry farm in the United States is located on Long Island, Lake Winnepesaukee, New Hampshire. It consists of 1,300 acres of land, with five miles of water front. One room in a building containing a capacity of 30,000 eggs, under favorable circumstances, will hatch out chickens in the space of twenty-one days. There are 35,400 square feet of brooding room, and $120,000 capital invested. This season it is expected to net $12,000 profit over all expenses. A prominent physician of large means is the owner of this remarkable and seemingly impossible venture.

The originator of the Concord grape is still living in Concord, Mass. He is Ephraim W. Bull, now 87 years old, and one of the prominent men in the historic town. In his garden in Concord he still shows the old mother vine of the Concord grape, which he developed from the seeds of a native wild grape planted just fifty years ago.

Secretary Morton has issued an order requiring the seeds for the United States Department of Agriculture to be purchased this year only under a guarantee on the part of the sellers, not only that the seeds will germinate, but that they will be found true to name.

It is claimed that three-fourths of Michigan's 31,000 farmers who entered that State without any capital but muscle and industry now own farms worth $1,500 per capita.

THE WORLD'S CONGRESS, NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

OCTOBER 5TH, AT 2 AND 7:30 P. M.

We are now planning for the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies. It will be held, God willing, in the Fine Art Building, Lake Front, Chicago, October 5. The sessions will be at 2 and 7:30 p. m. Papers are promised by Rev. Joseph Cook, Rev. H. L. Kellogg, Bishop H. J. Becker, and Rev. M. A. Gault. Other gentlemen will be on the program, and there will be opportunity for others interested to speak. This will probably be the most representative gathering held on this subject for years, and all our readers should plan to attend. The program will be announced in the near future.

NEBRASKA CONFERENCE, SEPTEMBER 1, 1893.

AT WAUSA, NEBRASKA.

An audience of some 1,500 is promised, and that many doors will be opened in surrounding communities.

The Conference will be held in connection with the fall meeting of the Swedish Evangelical Lutherans. There will be an address in Swedish, as well as addresses by the N. C. A. representatives.

A question-drawer will allow a wide range of topics to be discussed in connection with this reform.

MINNESOTA STATE CONVENTION.

It is proposed to hold a convention in St. Paul on the 12th and 13th of September next. Further notice next week. Bear all of these meetings to the throne of grace in prayer.

The elections in France, last Sunday, were favorable to a maintenance of the present government, all the incumbent cabinet ministers having been re-elected without serious opposition. The election is also a triumph for the Roman Catholic religion in the republic.

The massacre of a party of Italians by Frenchmen, a few days ago, led to an attack by an Italian mob upon a seminary of French priests at Rome on Saturday evening. The police, however, soon restored order. The angry feeling against the French grows stronger throughout Italy, and grave national consequences are anticipated. The situation is aggravated by the fact that at the time of the assault upon the French priests at Rome, the Italian government was making demands upon France for reparation for the previous massacre.

While it would have been better, perhaps, had the faculty of the Chicago Baptist University positively forbidden the organization of college secret fraternities in that institution, they certainly took a long step forward when they publicly advised the students to refrain from forming them. They also demand that such fraternities, if organized, be subject to such regulations as the faculty may make. They also reserve the right to suppress any such fraternity whenever they may deem it best to do so. If strict adherence to these rules is maintained, the university will be saved from a world of trouble; and, a little further along, entire prohibition will not be difficult to establish.

The anarchists of Chicago held a mass meeting last Sunday, at which 1,500 persons, more or less, were present. The meeting had been called by the Chicago Tailors' Union, in the interest of unemployed workmen. Jews, Germans, Poles, Italians and a few native Americans, formed the motley group. L. S. Oliver presided. Prominent among the speakers was the notorious Lucy Parsons, who, with her usual exaggerated statements and inflammatory words, said that hungry men can appreciate anarchy, and, after a time, may be nerved up to take their rights by force. Other speakers advised the workmen not to pay rent or remove from their tenements. The sentiments were against law and order, against capital and property, and capitalists came in for the usual quota of abuse. Resolutions against capital and the present conditions of society were passed, embracing appeals to change the order of things according to Parsons & Co., who quietly sleep in Waldheim cemetery. By the way, we passed this cemetery last Saturday, and are fully persuaded that there is room within its boundaries for the graves of several other like disturbers of the peace.

The public at large is not supposed to have an absorbing interest in the seal-protecting controversy between Great Britain and the United States; yet a passing glance at the decision of the arbitrators in the Bering Sea discussion, last week, may not be out of place. The United States asked for the right to protect the seals in transit as her own property. The arbitrators decided that she has no right to the protection of or property in the seals frequenting the islands of the United States in Bering Sea when the same are found outside the ordinary three-mile limit. But while denying our right to protect the seals on the high seas, the ruling of the tribunal lays it upon both governments, and indirectly upon every maritime nation, to help furnish this protection, besides establishing a neutral zone of sixty miles' radius around the islands within which no seal hunting whatever shall be done save by the government lessee of the seal-retreats on the Pribilof islands. This, with the three months' close season and the forbidding of the use of guns on the ocean, gives the lessee all necessary protection, and more than our scattered revenue cutters could ever have furnished alone. Altogether, it might have been worse.

About 3,000 workingmen met in convention on the Lake Front, one day last week, as representatives of the very large number of unemployed artisans and laborers now in this city. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Allied Woodworkers' Union, as stated in the call, for a discussion of the causes leading to the present lack of work. Several speakers grappled with this question. One claimed that the workingman is in the grasp of the money power. The West wants free coinage and the East refuses it. The editor of the Arbeiter Zeitung (the organ of the Anarchists) called loudly for "Bread and work." P. J. Grimes of the Hardwood Finishers' Union presented a resolution that the Haymarket monument be removed, it being regarded as a relic of a terrible "judicial murder." Resolutions were adopted, demanding that Congress fix a standard of values based upon the products of labor; that the government employ the idle men on the railways and on public improvements of all kinds where convicts are now employed, and that all public works be done by the people and by contract; that the hours of labor be reduced to a point that will allow all to be employed; and that the unemployed be warned, through the press, that Chicago has thousands of men who are willing to work, but for whom there is nothing to do.

ODD-FELLOWS' CHARITY.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

I have just received through the kindness of a friend, the June number of the Odd-fellows' Talisman, published at Indianapolis. It contains the report of the fifty-sixth semi-annual communication of the Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. of Indiana, which met in Indianapolis May 17, 1893.

In their proceedings I find a great variety of questions referred for their decision from local lodges throughout the State. Their decisions of some of these questions I give as illustrations of the boasted charity and benevolence of this order.

Decision 7 is, "When a brother dies delinquent in his dues, his lodge is not required to pay funeral benefits. All the lodge is bound to do is to give him an Odd-fellow's burial."

Decision 11. "December 31, 1873, a person petitioned a lodge for membership and paid the initiation fee. Committee reported favorably, Jan. 7, 1874. Before initiation, the brother was taken sick and was sick three years, and not considered a sound man until eight years ago. He now demands initiation on his petition and election. Held, that he must have his money returned to him. He cannot file a new petition and have it take its regular course. A lodge would not be justified in such a case in initiating a person."

Decision 13. "A brother became delinquent on dues. Paid up, and during the thirteen weeks he was non-beneficial, died. Held, that he was not entitled to funeral benefits."

Decision 26. "A brother pays his dues up to Dec. 1, 1892. Is taken sick Jan. 10, 1893, having paid no more. Held, that he is not entitled to benefits."

Decision 47. "A dismissal card was granted a brother on the 8th day of February. The lodge having no cards on hand, sent for some and the card was issued on Feb. 16, and received by the brother on the 17th. On Feb. 16 he took sick and died on the 20th. Was the lodge granting the card liable to the deceased brother's nearest of kin for funeral benefits? Held: No; when the lodge granted the card the connection of the brother with the lodge was severed."

There are other decisions of like import, but these are sufficient to show that the policy of Odd-fellowship is to take advantage of every possible technicality to avoid paying out for charity what their members have paid in. It is a marvel that men of good sense will continue to support such an institution, when it is the testimony of so many of their members that they pay in more than $2 for every dollar that they get out. This report says that there are in active membership in Indiana 39,706 Odd-fellows who paid in, last year, $148,635.87. All they expended during the year for relief and charity was $68,745.17. Thus we see it cost them over two dollars to give away one dollar for charity.

Bloomington, Ind.

EXPENSIVE "CHARITY."

Question.—Is it right for a Christian to belong to a secret, oath-bound lodge? Some excuse themselves with the passage in 1 Tim. 5: 8: "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

Ans.—We answer, no, it is not right. The space here is too limited to give extensive proof for our answer. We would simply say that anything good need not be kept secret. These societies are called benevolent societies. But it would puzzle one to find on which side their benevolence is. A man makes a contract with the society—he agrees to pay a certain sum of money annually if at his death they will bury his body and pay $1,000, or more, to his family. Or if he is disabled by accident to earn a living they will pay him a certain sum of money per week. Now, as long as that man keeps up his side of the bargain he stands a chance of getting some help from his society when in need, as before mentioned. The man dies. The society bury him and pay the wife $1,000, according to their contract. They fulfill their contract with the man and then boast of their benevolence to this family. Where, now, does their benevolence come in? There is no more benevolence in this than if a man pays his honest debts. In some of these societies it costs $3 to give away $2. If these men who join secret societies would each pay to their church the amount they annually pay to their lodge that church could take better care of their family, if they should die, than any secret society does.—Berlin, Ont., Gospel Banner.

OUR NATIONAL DISTRESS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Our country has been overshadowed by a financial panic. President Cleveland, in his message to the special session of Congress, convened on the 7th inst., thus states the cause of the trouble:

Our unfortunate financial plight is not the result of untoward events nor of conditions related to our natural resources; nor is it traceable to any of the afflictions which frequently check national growth and prosperity. With plentiful crops, with abundant promise of remunerative production and manufacture, with unusual invitation to safe investment, and with satisfactory assurance to business enterprise, suddenly financial distrust and fear have sprung up on every side. Numerous moneyed institutions have suspended because abundant assets were not immediately available to meet the demands of frightened depositors. Surviving corporations and individuals are content to keep in hand the money they are usually anxious to loan, and those engaged in legitimate business are surprised to find that the securities they offer for loans, though heretofore satisfactory, are no longer accepted. Values supposed to be fixed are fast becoming conjectural, and loss and failure have involved every branch of business.

Various explanations have been offered. The President thinks it is largely due to the silver legislation. Many think the tariff is the cause. The Republicans think it is due to Democratic ascendancy. The Prohibitionists think the liquor traffic is the guilty cause. There is, perhaps, a measure of truth in all these explanations. But the great fact is overlooked in all, viz.: That God has a controversy with this nation because the crown-rights and royal prerogatives of his Son have been ignored. When Pharaoh pursued Israel into the Red Sea, we read: "In the morning watch the Lord looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the pillar of cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians, and took off their chariot wheels, that they drave them heavily." Now the Lord Jesus Christ has been looking at us through the clouds that hide his throne from us, and the result is this financial distress throughout the land.

A retrospective view of the history of nations informs us that every nation that refused allegiance to the scepter of King Jesus was utterly wasted. Why were the gates of the river Tigris opened, and the walls of Nineveh, so famous for their height and width, melted down and their palaces dissolved? Why was Tyre, the proud city of the waters, made like the top of a rock whereon fishers dry their nets? Why did Egypt become the basest of kingdoms? Why did Babylon become a desolation? What mean the horrors of the siege of Jerusalem by Titus; when the foundations of society were broken up; when theft, incendiarism, rape and murder ran riot in the streets; when those who had vociferated, "Crucify him!" were crucified themselves around the walls of their blazing city, until there was no more wood of which to make crosses; when famine, gnawing and unparalleled, was doing a work along those crowded streets, the bare recital of which would cause the stupid, the callous and the cruel to faint with sickening horror? Why must the waves of destruction rise so high and beat so hard against the French nation! Why must the streets of Paris run red with blood and the river Seine be gorged with the bodies of the slain? The only answer is, they refused allegiance to Christ, and their national crimes operated as a conductor to draw down the lightning of vengeance from his throne.

Our nation is not an exception. Human slavery was a national crime. Timely warning was given in the panic of 1840, the Mexican war of 1847, the financial paralysis of 1857. But in 1861 the hour of judgment arrived. The war was our national retribution. It was either put away our national sin or perish. But our greater sin as a nation is in ignoring the claim of the King of kings. In 1789 our nation adopted a secular Constitution. This was a great dishonor to King Jesus. It has stunted our moral and spiritual growth as a nation. It has made it possible for such giant evils as the liquor traffic, Sabbath profanation, speedy and easy divorce, and an unchurched people. They are the sons of Anakim; they dwell in walled cities and have chariots of iron, and were in their sight as grasshoppers, and so we are in our own sight. God has given us warning. The panic of 1873, the destructive fires in Boston, Chicago and the forests of the Northwest, the grasshopper plague in the West, the yellow fever in the South, and the assassination of our Christian President Garfield in 1881; the Pittsburgh riot of 1877; the Cincinnati riot of 1885, and the Homestead riot of last summer were additional warnings. And this present national distress is still another. They are all warnings that the day of mercy is passing and the time of visitation is fast drawing near. We must put away our political atheism from the United States Constitution, and recognize the authority and law of our Saviour-King, or perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little. May the nation see her need of him. "When the judgments of God are abroad in the land, the inhabitants thereof will learn righteousness."

Boston, Aug. 11, 1893.

THE FINANCIAL MEASURES OF THE EXTRA SESSION.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The folly of attempting to make men saints by act of parliament is equalled only by the expectation of making them rich by legislation; for governments cannot put virtue into men's hearts, nor money into their pockets, except as it takes it from the pockets of others. Neither can government control the prices of commodities which have the world for their market.

But legislation can do much, incidentally, for the promotion of both virtue and prosperity. It can make favorable conditions for individual efforts for both these objects.

It is a remarkable illustration of natural law in the economic as well as the spiritual world, that the principle of faith lies at the basis of all successful endeavor, either to be good or to be prosperous; and that want of confidence in the financial stability of others is the most common cause of commercial depressions. This seems especially true at the present time; for we are suffering neither from war nor pestilence, and our land is blessed with bountiful crops.

It is just twenty years since a similar financial flurry passed over the land, and such panics have come and gone with almost the regularity of the tides. Laws of trade are more potent than acts of Congress. The McKinley tariff, though it remains unchanged on our statute books, has failed to bring general prosperity; and the Sherman silver act, by which we are required to purchase 54,000,000 dollars' worth of silver a year has failed to keep up the price of silver. It has almost steadily declined in the markets of the world. The supply was greater than the demand.

The causes of the present want of confidence in all financial circles are, namely: 1. The large exportations of gold during the past year, which, in turn, have resulted from our large accumulation of silver, its declining price, and the fear that national and individual debts would be paid in a depreciated coin. 2. The withdrawal of money on deposit and hoarding it as safer than any investments under existing circumstances. 3. The fear of large reductions of the tariff and the apparent necessity of taking in sail, lest a financial cyclone should strike the manufacturing establishments. 4. The powerful secret labor combinations, which render the supply and the price of labor uncertain and unreliable. 5. The general poverty of European nations (the result of famines in Russia, pestilence and their immense military establishments), which makes them unable to buy our products except at greatly reduced prices.

The remedies likely to be adopted are: 1. The repeal of the Silver Purchase act. This has cost the general government about $12,000,000 and been of no permanent advantage, even to the silver miners. But this alone would not restore general confidence. 2. The probable substitution of some finance measure, such as that proposed by Prof. Comings, of Bloomington, Ind. This is, in substance, the scheme of Secretary Windom, viz.: That the government accept all gold and silver bullion at market price, and issue certificates redeemable in bullion at market price. This, it is thought, will solve the question of the free coinage of silver. It is not probable that our government will adopt any free coinage act unless they change the ratio of gold and silver. If they do this, our silver dollars would be quite unwieldy, and our standard dollars would have to be recoined. 3. Some, but not material, modifications of the tariff.

It is greatly desirable that there should be legislation for the promotion of the temperance reform. It would add materially to the moral and financial well-being of the country; but it is too much to expect of the present Congress.

Oberlin, O.

MASONRY'S CHIEF PROP.

BY R. W. LYMAN.

There is seeming evidence that the parents of our Brother Butler had a prophet's ken, in that they gave him the name Man-love. He has abundantly honored that name by the service he has rendered the human family in the issue, for its good, of a "Hand-Book" opposing its and God's enemy—Freemasonry.

Inasmuch as it survived its twin demon—Slavery—in our nation, his artillery is properly turned upon it, with intent to banish it to the regions to which its relative has flown for refuge. The brother seems to have overlooked the fact that these twins are also component members of a band of triplet demons, the second-born of which is Sect-Schism, now, as heretofore, furnishing in itself the protecting Aegis of its wings for its fellows. All three have, as a designed ultimate end, the same purpose in view, viz.: the dethroning of the God of the universe and substituting themselves, each individually, or possibly as a triumvirate, for universal rule.

I do not, by any means, wish to be understood as affirming that all the members of these three institutions, or of any one of them, design to dethrone God, for I do not believe they do. But I do unqualifiedly affirm that, personifying each of these institutions, there inheres in them, as such, a principle that, if in its power, would subjugate God and his government. Their existence as entities is, in itself, an attempted usurpation of God's prerogative to rule and reign, for they are, each and all, prohibited by his law.

The question as to the comparative enormity of their diabolism is not of very great importance, perhaps, yet it may be well to give some consideration to this point.

Bro. Butler seems to award the belt of superiority to Masonry, inasmuch as that he deals with the twins rather than with the triplets. I quote from his book, pages 154, 155: "The lodge being false worship, is worth more to Satan's kingdom than slavery. The devil, therefore, threw slavery in as a breastwork to defend the lodge from the dashing waves of public opinion and popular discussion. It was swept away, and we are now face to face with lodgeism, which presents the simple issue, worship Christ or worship Satan. The lodge, therefore, is the last hope of the devil." As between the two the brother is correct.

But what of that other Satanic strategy, Sect-Schism? Far more distinctly, as by name, is it condemned by Scripture authority, in its frequent allusions to it, than either of the two other entities.

Living then, in 1826, as I was, in the same county in New York from which a fellow-citizen was spirited away to his death, at the demands of Masonry, I was, by the murdering of Wm. Morgan, led to search into the principles of Masonry. That search revealed the fact that there was far deeper diabolism in the makeup of the institution than was revealed by the legitimate murder of human beings. A renewed murdering of the Lord Jesus Christ, the only-begotten of the Father, was discovered by me and is now clearly revealed to the world at large. In the light of this revelation, what did sectism do? It is within my knowledge, and that of the few now-living observers of the times of such first revelation of the superlative wickedness of Masonry, that the sects, as a rule, shielded and sheltered the murderers of Morgan and their apologists, and generally, not all of them, left ajar, invitingly, the doors to the fellowship and communion of Masons. Even to the present day, unrepentant Masons are freely admitted; yes, and are invited, unquestioned, to membership and fellowship by numbers of the popular sects.

It is as fresh as though of yesterday's occurrence, to those of us who were in active life in ante-bellum times,—say from 1830 on to the time of firing upon Fort Sumter, and, to some extent, after that—at least the more popular sects, through some of their representative ministers and laymen, vied with each other as to which of them should be most subservient to slavery and the slave power.

I was a member from this place, to a State-delegated body of anti-slavery men meeting in Utica, N. Y., which body was broken up by a mob of so-called (and otherwise appearing) gentlemanly citizens, among whom, no doubt, were members of sect churches. At all events I heard nothing from popular sect bodies condemnatory of such mobbing. In view of these facts, and many others of like nature, is it not clear that sectism, rather than the lodge, "is therefore the last hope of the devil"? Being a sheltering fortress in which Masonry may and does take shelter, and in and by which it is sustained and defended, does not common sense teach that as barely a war measure as against Masonry, this fort be bombarded and leveled to the ground? Surely it does.

Add the further reason, which is by far the greater, for its overthrow, namely, that in itself it is a sin, then the duty becomes clearly imperative.

Arcade, N. Y., July, 1893.

WILL THEY BE DRIVEN OUT?

Portsmouth, N. H., the only seaport, is also probably the lowest in morality of any city in the State. This is due largely to the great breweries, which turn out nearly 300,000 barrels of ale annually. Three years ago, the owner—Frank Jones—who had paid taxes on a valuation of only $374,000, sold the breweries to English capitalists for six million three hundred thousand dollars.

With this enormous sum, and aided by others, including members of the Legislature and the Supreme Court itself, he began getting control of railroads, until to-day there is only one line in the State not under their management. The State and the people are, as a matter of fact, ruled by this great monopoly. No one fails to admit that U. S. Senator Wm. E. Chandler, some two years ago, published a "Book of Bargains," exposing the uncanny operations of the railroad ring. He stated much truth, and did not forget the judges of the Supreme Court, who, as in the days of Tweed, Fisk and Gould, sold themselves to the ring. Senator Chandler owns the Concord Monitor, and, the past week, published an open letter addressed to the presidents of the State bar associations, preferring charges against not only the Chief Justice, but also four associate justices of the New Hampshire Supreme Court. Senator Chandler alleges that the opinion rendered by the said judges to the Legislature was "palpably erroneous and adverse to the claimed rights of the people of New Hampshire in the Concord railroad". He asks that the papers in the case be laid before the bar associations, and says that "if the charges are found to be false, then the instigator should be given the severest possible punishment. If proved, then the judges deserve to be driven from their places by all the powers of a plundered and outraged people."

There is no reason to think that the instigator of these charges (Senator Chandler) will be punished, because his statements are, without doubt, true; but the probability that the judges will be "driven from their places" is still less, because "plundered and outraged people"—at least the great majority of them—do not know, and many do not seem to care, that as things are the N. H. Supreme Court is not likely to be "driven"—i. e., the majority—the four associates and the chief justice, against whom Senator Chandler preferred his charges; they are to stay; for they all wear aprons,—trimmed with lamb's-wool, some of them; all are Freemasons; else they would not be Supreme Court judges in New Hampshire. As nearly every lawyer in the State is also a lodgeite, and as bar associations are generally composed of lawyers, there is not much probability that these lawyers will bother about Senator Chandler's charges, except to snicker and smile at their next "regular communication". Oh, no, not every official in the Granite State is a secretist. The last Governor was not a Mason, but was a clean, square-cut temperance man—in very poor company, though, as a rule.

Like Vermont, however, New Hampshire now has a Masonic Governor; a Mason for Attorney General, and, taking the State through, its officials are Masons by a very large majority. Senator Chandler is "not in it," and he admits in private that Masonry rules the State; but he does not say so in his newspaper. So, too, the good Roman Catholic bishop "sincerely deplores" (in private) that secret societies are ruling and ruining the State; but he does not say one word in public. How can he, when, as in the past, he may any day need to ask Masonic influence to save some reverend "father" from the clutches of the law? Of some sixty lawyers in Concord, our capital, it was stated on good authority, two years ago, that only two were free from secret societies. One was a young lawyer, just admitted, and the other an elderly man, of whom it was said that "the Foresters had elected him a member without his knowledge; but he had never attended a meeting"; for so determined are these workers in darkness that they propose names even without saying "by your leave".

Difficult, indeed, would it be to find a State so thoroughly dominated by secretism as is to-day the State of New Hampshire—"the old Granite State".

NEW ENGLAND.

CHINESE FREEMASONRY IN CHICAGO.

Chinatown throbbed with excitement last night. Twenty-eight Mongolians were initiated into the deep mysteries of Chinese Masonry, and the occasion will go down into local Chinese history as the greatest event of 1893. The session began at 8 o'clock last evening, and it will not end until 10 o'clock this morning. It is the first meeting for initiation held in Chicago in a year. Ling Tong, who is a big officer in the order, came here from Portland, Oregon, to assist Yee Chow, the Chicago Tai Low, or Grand Master, in the initiation ceremonies.

Of the 3,000 Chinamen in this city about 1,200 are Masons in various degrees. The regular lodge hall is on the top floor of Hip Lung's store, 323 Clark street. The rooms are large enough for all ordinary meetings, but Yee Chow was of the opinion that a place four times as big would have to be engaged for last night's event. He shrewdly guessed that every Chinaman in town who belonged to the order would want to be present when twenty-eight new members were initiated, and he had the janitor hunt up a place big enough in which to hold the meeting.

There is a vacant basement at 347 Clark street. On the ground floor is a saloon. The basement was rented for last night's seance and Lee Chow was happy. A man who runs a laundry on Clark street south of Van Buren went down to South Water street a few days ago and bought twenty-eight chickens. Sam Moy and Chow Tai, as a committee, went to the Armory police station yesterday afternoon and asked Capt. Hartnett for the loan of two officers from 8 o'clock in the evening until the conclusion of the symposium at 10 o'clock this morning. The captain told the committee that he could not grant the request, but he said he would notify the officer traveling around Harrison and Clark streets to keep an eye open for any trouble or interference by the denizens of the neighborhood.

Scores of slant-eyed Mongolians could be seen shambling along Clark street last night, and nearly every one of them had a broad grin on his face. Those whose faces were wreathed in smiles were members of the order and they were thinking of the fun they were going to have with their twenty-eight countrymen. The celestials walked along the street in single file, with their arms thrust into the sleeves of their blouses, and, on reaching the rendezvous, remained on the sidewalk until the two inspectors gave them permission to enter the basement. These inspectors were supposed to know every member of the order in the city, but to gain admittance to the place of meeting another Mongolian had to be encountered, to whom the password was given.

At 10 o'clock there were about 500 men in the basement and fifty or seventy-five more were standing on the sidewalk. It was not until midnight, however, that the ceremonies of initiation were begun. The two sentries on the sidewalk attended strictly to business, and the small boy of the neighborhood was driven away if he ventured too close.

From a member of the order it was learned that the ceremonies were of the most elaborate kind. Yee Chow, the Chicago Tai Low, had spared no trouble or expense to make the meeting a memorable one. Ling Tong, who is the highest official of the order on the Pacific coast, expressed pleasure at the spacious basement which had been hired for the occasion.

Charles Kee, of 319 Clark street, one of the most intelligent of his race in Chicago, said that the victims were the greatest number ever initiated at one time in this city. The order is called in the Chinese language, Tong Suen Tong, and any Chinaman can become a member if he is of good reputation. There are thirty-one degrees, but very few members reach the highest. Yee Chow, the Tai Low of the Chicago body, is a thirty-first degree man, and is believed to be the only one in the city. Out on the coast there are four or five Chinese women who belong to the order. They are the wives of high officials in the society. If a member should divulge any of the secrets of the order he would be killed, but no Mason was ever heard of who paid the death penalty.

It is an old saying that a woman can't keep a secret, but Chinamen are of a different opinion. Many years ago a Chinawoman was admitted to the order, and some men tried to make her divulge the secrets. They tortured her to death, but the secrets of the society were not divulged. That is why Chinese Masons have faith in women, and it is considered a great honor for a woman to be admitted to the society. There are four or five Americans in Chicago who belong to the Chinese Masons. They are not given more than six degrees, however. Dr. Flavius M. Wilder, who was killed by John Redmond, was a member, and when he was buried the society spent $600 for carriages, music and other things. According to ancient custom, the members who were initiated last night will give a banquet to the officers on the third night after the initiation.—Chicago Herald, Aug. 14.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The business depression and some of its results.—The Knights of Labor in politics.—Shall the I. O. O. F. admit saloon-keepers?—Literary "sweating".—A new word.—Seventy years young.—A New England Mecca.

In the face of this general business depression, when the mills and factories are shutting down in all our New England towns and cities, isn't there food for reflection, to say the least, in the fact that the leading tobacconists report no falling off in their sales, and say they "have not the slightest fear for the future"? This indemnity from those financial ups and downs which beset ordinary business seems to be shared by its twin brother, the rum traffic. When did a distillery shut down, or a saloon close its doors, on account of hard times? And why do we never see the names of liquor-dealers in the black list of mercantile failures? These are questions worth asking. The liquor traffic is not a legitimate trade. It is a poisonous parasite, and therefore unaffected by those conditions which are so keenly felt by all honest industries. But to come back to "the tobacco problem"; why is it that so many men who can see that it is proper and altogether the right thing for their wives to retrench in every department of household economy, and wear their old bonnets another season, because it is hard times, cannot see the beauty of even so much self-denial on their part as would include the giving up of their daily cigars?

Among other "shut-downs" is that of Dr. Warner's corset factory in Bridgeport, Conn.; though it is only a partial one, being kept running on half time. But with a philanthropy rare among millionaire capitalists, the doctor has offered to board all his young women employees who have no homes and are short of money, at his seaside Institute until better times return. There is not much danger of a strike very soon among Dr. Warner's "hands," many of whom have availed themselves of their employer's considerate offer. But does the shutting down of this large feminine industry mean that a good many women are doing without corsets either for economy's sake or because they have become imbued with dress reform principles? Women are fast redeeming their character as "the frivolous sex". Wherever, for instance, there is a woman's club, it will be found to have a distinctly educational or philanthropic purpose, and to be a place, not so much for social entertainment as for discussion of all kinds of live subjects, from literature to cookery; from the tariff to dress reform;—which surely cannot be said of most of the men's clubs.

The hard times have developed one reason why the anarchist has found New England a poor soil in which to sow the seeds of his lawless creed. While there is undoubtedly much suffering among the thousands of unemployed, there are also multitudes whose thrifty habits have enabled them to lay up something in the bank, or own a modest little home of their own, from which vantage-point they can afford a longer or shorter season of enforced idleness, and even enjoy the vacation. The epidemic of suicides which generally accompanies business depression, is more among the employers than the employees. Men lose their faith in God, or, perhaps more strictly, they find they never had any, and their brains reel, bewildered under the stress and strain of meeting unforeseen liabilities. This is one of the saddest features of such a time of financial stringency as the one through which we are now passing. But the fact that D. L. Moody's meetings at Northfield do not seem to feel the pressure is a most encouraging and hopeful sign. It is enough to make every Christian feel as if he wanted to sing the Doxology, to think of a collection of $35,000 made in thirty-five minutes for the new auditorium. It is seldom that money is raised, even for secular purposes which appeal to the public at large, at the rate of $1,000 a minute.

The Knights of Labor held a meeting in Boston recently, in which State Master-Workman Kelley urged the necessity of impressing all opponents with the political power of the order. His recommendations covered, in the main, the same ground as the Nationalist platform, favoring municipal ownership of gas and electric plants, and government ownership of telegraphs, railway and steamship lines. The European Socialists, at their late congress, declared in favor of universal peace. God, who makes the wrath of man to praise him, has vast and important reforms to work out through these organizations, little as the majority of the members care about him or his laws. But—and this is a most important fact; but, considering that Romanists form the majority of the rank and file, and compose nearly all the officials in the K. of L., how far will Rome be able to bend them to her own purposes? Political power is what she is striving for, and her late utterances in favor of the working men means that she, as Frederick the Great said of Providence, "goes with the strongest battalions".

Says an Odd-fellow writer regarding the next Sovereign Grand Lodge meeting: "The question likely to provoke considerable discussion, and possibly much feeling, will be the pending amendment to exclude from membership those engaged in the liquor traffic," and adds, "the subject will come up again this year. What its fate will be time will alone tell." That there should be any uncertainty in this respect does not show well for an order which boasts its "progressive," moral, and "religious" nature.

Mr. Edward Fuller, a comparatively new writer, has satirized Boston society in a lately published novel, especially its capacity for taking in strangers with bogus titles, and being in turn taken in by them. He is now exposing in the Providence Journal some of the ways, chiefly through writers of social paragraphs, that the undeserving win prestige and become lions in society. Something a little similar is not unknown in the literary world. A writer of some celebrity is engaged on a leading Washington paper to supply so much matter weekly on various subjects; but his contributions, though printed under his own name, are, many of them, written by women to whom he pays such niggardly sums as five or ten dollars on articles for which he receives fifty or a hundred. This was told me by one who has been a resident of Washington for many years, and has facilities for knowing whereof she affirms.

We are threatened with a new word in the dictionary to describe a day when the thermometer goes rioting among the nineties, and that is "sizzard". It is not quite so euphonious as blizzard, owing to the combination of s and z, but perhaps it will pass muster for all that. However, our sizzards for this year are nearly over, and the chill when evening comes on suggests the time when a blazing wood-fire on the hearth will seem the acme of comfort and good cheer. Few can help a little shrinking of heart as they think where all these glorious summer days are hastening; but winter brings us its own work and its own joys, and the nearer we draw to the season of the falling leaf, the nearer we are to the time of its endless renewal; just as the winter of age and death is only the bridge over which we pass to the eternal springtime of our youth just beyond. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's words on her seventieth birthday: "I am seventy years young," ought to be as immortal as her famous "Battle Hymn". Nothing will keep us young like a constant realization of this fact. I have no doubt that the oldest archangel in heaven feels the youngest.

Already the old Whittier house at Haverhill has become a literary Mecca. In deference to modern ideas, the big kitchen had been made smaller. Now the partition has been removed, restoring the room to its former dimensions; and with it the old fireplace, and the antique furniture have come back "to stay." Perhaps a hundred years from now the curious tourists will tread those floors with feelings akin to that which we now feel in visiting the poetic shrines of Old England. Certainly New England cannot better preserve the laurels which her poets have twined for her brows, than by preserving with religious care the homes where they lived and wrote. Speaking of ancient things, the pulpit of the old Cohasset meeting-house, erected in 1747, is still in being. Wonderful erections were those old Puritan pulpits, with quaint sounding-boards, which I believe never did drop upon the minister's head; though I have no doubt the children often wondered why, and speculated on the probable results if it should; the draperies falling in solemn folds, and the general sense of awfulness, as if the huge and clumsy structure, which only allowed the minister's head and shoulders to be seen, was intended for a demi-god at least. I don't wonder that people in those days looked upon their minister almost as if he was but one remove from the Deity.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16, 1893.

The decision of the Behring Sea tribunal of arbitration, which was received in Washington yesterday afternoon, while not in accordance with the expectations of either this government or that of Great Britain, was well received by Senators and Representatives and members of the administration. It is in the nature of a compromise between the contentions of the two governments, and is a far more satisfactory settlement of the long dispute than ever seemed likely to be arrived at by diplomacy, and there is not the slightest doubt about its being accepted as a final and permanent settlement by both governments of a question which has at several different times come dangerously near to causing war. A gentleman who has been conversant with the negotiations between our government and that of Great Britain for the last ten years, speaking of the decision said: "I think, as a whole, it gives the United States as much as either Secretary Bayard or Secretary Blaine ever expected to get, and I have the best reasons for the belief that if Great Britain had offered at any time during the negotiations to have conceded what the arbitration has given us the offer would have been accepted by this government." But away above and beyond the questions at issue in the dispute is the benefit to the world at large of the precedent set by two of the most powerful nations of the earth in settling so serious a dispute by peaceful arbitration, in accordance with the teachings of modern Christianity, instead of by force of arms. Verily, the age of international arbitration is upon us, and, as was said by an eminent Detroit minister in a recent sermon preached in Washington, we are rapidly approaching the time when there shall be no more war. God speed the time when the energies and wealth of governments, which in the past have been devoted to making war upon each other, shall be devoted to the advance of moral reform and the consequent welfare of mankind.

The administration, through Secretary Carlisle, has unqualifiedly endorsed the bill which was favorably reported to the Senate from its Finance committee yesterday, providing that national banks may issue currency to the full face-value of the bonds they have deposited with the United States Treasury to secure their currency. The bill appears to be generally regarded as a step in the right direction; it will, if taken advantage of by the banks, and of that there is little doubt, result in an immediate addition of $19,000,000 to the money at present in circulation, and probably a great deal more, as it is believed that the National banks would make large purchases of bonds now held by trust companies and savings banks, in order to deposit them with the Treasury for additional currency. It is stated that Treasury officials are so confident that this bill will become a law that they are already making preparations to meet the expected large demand for currency from the banks.

The debate in the House of Representatives, under the agreement giving fourteen days for discussion of the bill for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the present silver law and the several proposed amendments thereto; for the free coinage of silver at the present and increased ratios, and for the restoration of the Bland law, is going on daily, but it has up to this time brought out little that was new.

Our people have regarded the South Carolina State bar-rooms as something radically wrong but a long ways off and consequently of minor interest to them, but the subject has been freshly and rather strikingly brought to their attention by the proceedings before the Patent office in connection with the official application of the State of South Carolina, through its governor, for the sanction of the use of the popular sou-briquet of the State ("Palmetto") as a trademark for the whisky to be sold by the State bar-rooms. The application was denied by an Examiner in the Patent office, on the ground that the law only provides for the registration of trade-marks owned by persons, firms or corporations, and that a State of the American Union is neither a person, firm nor a corporation. The State, through its Washington attorneys, appealed from the Examiner's decision and the question is now before the Commissioner of Patents. It is a matter of small moment whether the copyright shall finally be allowed or not. The important thing is that a great State thus publicly advertises itself as having entered the lowest and most degrading of all business callings—that of selling intoxicating liquor, a business that is responsible for more law-breaking than arises from all other causes combined. The popular idea of the principal duty of a State government is the maintenance of good order and enforcement of law, but here is a State government engaged in aiding the breaking of its own laws.

REFORM NEWS.

THE EASTERN SECRETARY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

HEBRONVILLE, Mass., Aug. 16, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This finds me in camp. As I write under the shade of the forest trees that rustle their leaves above my head, I can hear many voices being lifted to God in prayer in the cottages around. It is the time of the morning sacrifice. The incense of devout prayer is ascending to the throne. Truly it is blessed to be here! Bro. A. A. Hoyt has the meeting in charge. He is well known to most of our New England friends as a fearless advocate of truth. The motto here is—"Truth on all Scriptural lines."

Part of yesterday was given to the presentation of arguments against the secret empire. Bro. Foster, the New England President, struck some sledge-hammer blows. During his address of nearly two hours he had the undivided attention of his audience. Your agent followed with a chart-talk that called forth a general discussion, in which several participated. Many were present who knew nothing of our work. A sister from Providence and a brother from Worcester inquired if I could not come to their towns and speak. They were sure such truth was greatly needed. The sister was very anxious that a young man of her acquaintance should be informed. This young man was astonished on learning of the things done of them in secret. Like thousands of others, he had thought that it could not be "so bad," or church members would not be there! Oh, what an awful account the judgment day will reveal, when those church members who are now professing light will be shown to have been leading others into darkness! Tracts were gladly received.

I feel that I have been guided by the Divine Spirit in coming to this place at this time.

Traveling toward "the Hub," I made several calls. At Willimantic, Putnam and Worcester, I met some of the "old guard," who cheered me much on my way. On calling at the home of Dr. Henry Cheever, I learned of the severe sickness of his sister, Mrs. Ichabod Washburn. My call was on Thursday, and on Sabbath morning she passed peacefully out of this life and on, we are assured, to the eternal life beyond, being at the time of her death eighty-one years of age. She has been a friend and supporter of the anti-secrecy work. I trust a worthy obituary notice will be prepared for our paper.

EVENING, SAME DAY, IN PROVIDENCE, R. I.—This has been a good day at the camp. There was an enlarged attendance of the people, and much manifest presence of the Holy Spirit. I secured several readers for the Cynosure. Among them is Bro. H. A. Shepard, of West Mansfield, Mass. He is to arrange for me to lecture in his town next Tuesday evening.

I am disappointed in not meeting Bro. Paull here. Expect to attend a mission meeting to-night and speak, if the way is open.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE ROCKFORD MEETINGS.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The late meetings in the beautiful Forest City of Illinois have been partially reported. Your readers there may justly expect a word about the whole.

The first address was in Zion Evangelical Lutheran church, Pastor S. G. Ohman, on Sabbath evening, July 30. The audience was large for a hot summer evening, and the attention excellent, since we must remember that in addressing Swedish people there are always some who cannot readily understand English. Pastor Ohman is young, enthusiastic, and greatly esteemed by his people. The church has a large membership and he works unceasingly, as do all the Lutheran pastors of Rockford.

The lodge has made some inroads upon this church. It is always the unexpected that happens, and such defection from duty and fealty was by no means expected. The young pastor meets the issue with a brave but forbearing spirit and his church is with him.

At 4 P. M. the same day an address before the members of the Y. M. C. A. in their regular meeting, on the Consecration of Companionship, bore immediate fruit, as some came forward at the close to speak of their sympathy with my views of the secret orders.

Thursday evening an address in the Free Church, on Fourth avenue, was heard with very warm interest. The young pastor Newberg is aided here by a very devoted company of young people. His brother is one of the city aldermen, a young man of energy and conviction.

The meeting in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, Friday evening, Aug. 4, has been reported. The small attendance was not unexpected, but the result directly appearing was almost better than I had hoped. To know that the best young men of the city were promising each other, at the close of the lecture, and next day, to leave their lodges, was a better reward than money. One of these young men, in contributing for the expense of the hall, ordered several books for use among his friends of the Y. M. C. A., to keep the truth acting upon their consciences.

Sabbath evening, in Immanuel church, Pastor Juhlin, I spoke on the disavowal of the only true God by the lodge creeds and the impossibility that an evil effect should follow their profession by any one, whether or no the Christian vow should be on him. Pastor Juhlin would be the best judge of the good or ill-effect. I am hopeful that in the end a blessing will have come to his people through the discourse.

Pastors Johnston and Jessup, of the First Lutheran church, and Rev. F. M. Johnson, of the Mission Tabernacle, have my promise to return and speak to their people in the near future. The "hard times" are very hard in Rockford. Thousands are dependent on the factories, which are closing entirely or running on short time. Some thirty families, I learned, are being fed at public expense on the east side of the river alone. I am much indebted to Rev. Mr. Jessup and brethren Lundstrom and Marks for kind entertainment during these meetings, and to many others for words of encouragement.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

American Freemasons refer to Geo. Washington in justification of their system as confidently and as constantly as the Christian appeals to Christ and his example and teachings in confirmation of their faith and practice. This may not be intended profanation, but it is certainly a prostitution of a great and noble man to a base purpose, to which he would never have lent his name or influence, and against which he gave decided and unequivocal testimony before his death. It is a beggarly and mean spirit that seizes upon some folly or indiscretion of youth and inexperience in a person who later in life becomes eminent, and uses those foibles in support of an organized or extended movement which he afterwards abandoned and condemned. It would be just as fair, and just as honorable, to justify drunkenness by citing the excesses of John B. Gough in early life, as it is to parade the "Father of his country" before the people in support of Freemasonry. Both were eminent, patriotic and Christian. Both were imperfect and sinned, and both confessed and forsook their sins; and why should those coming after, who are so much indebted to them for the good they did and the truth they taught, sully their fame by parading the blemishes in their records in defence of that which they condemned?

The general trend of events at the Fair exhibit is varied by incidents more or less noteworthy, all teaching the same lesson of lodge deception and fraud. It is, however, a pleasure to witness many instances of emancipation by the grace of God and to record the fact that Christ is bringing men out of darkness into the light and liberty of the sons of God.

Two ministers met as strangers at the booth. Both had met the "three ruffians," and were disgusted. One had renounced and exposed the fraud, and when denounced as a "perjured villain," he sought and obtained redress in the civil courts. The other, after looking carefully through Doesburg's expose until he came to the prayer before the resurrection, paused and said: "I stood it pretty well until I was required to sham dead and insult God in a mockery of prayer. That was too much for me and I declared off."

A plain-looking young man, after examining the K. of P. expose, remarked: "Well, there is no use in lying about it. You have got it all there just as I took it." Shortly after several K. P.s denied the correctness of the work in toto, but the strange thing about it was that after the company left, one of their number returned, paid for the "bogus" document, and ordered it sent to his home address.

Two very candid and intelligent gentlemen, from England, were desirous of learning about our American system of Freemasonry. Both were members in the Blue Lodge, and especially anxious to learn something of the higher degrees. I explained the system on my chart, and gave such facts as they asked for. They assured me that the Masonry of England was the simple Blue Lodge degrees, and that the high degrees were considered of little or no value in their country. They were well-versed in the controversy with the Grand Orient of France, and while strongly Unitarian in their views, they repudiated the rejection of the "Grand Architect of the Universe," but could see nothing wrong in excluding Christ from their worship or in expunging his name from whatever Scriptures they wished to use. A young man, from Germany, called soon after, and took substantially the same position in defence of his lodge.

I notice a marked difference between most of these foreign Masons and their American brothers. They discuss calmly and avoid denunciation or prevarication, and seem as willing to give as to receive information. There has been but a single exception. One caller, whose dialect bespoke his English nationality, declined to canvass the question, or to hear anything on the subject. He declared most emphatically that it was a

CORRESPONDENCE.

ANTI-SECRECY WORK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

CAMBRIDGEBORO, Pa., Aug. 10, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been intending to write to you for some time, but have not been feeling well and have been neglecting my duty but have finally got at it. I want, first, to tell you who I am. I am the only son of Dr. J. H. Gray (deceased), of whom you probably know and who was all his life an anti-secret man and a devout Christian. I commence the word Christian with a capital letter, for I think it ought to be made prominent.

I want to tell you how I enjoy your paper, and to put myself on record as an anti-secret man to the backbone. I am the only one that I know of in this section. I have been instrumental, through the Father, of keeping one young man from joining any secret orders. He had sent his name in, and was soon to be initiated; but upon having a talk with him and giving him a copy of the Cynosure, he backed out, and has thanked me a great many times since. Of course he had to stand a certain amount of abuse, but as he is a conscientious Christian, it does him no harm. Another young brother, through my influence and talk, left his lodge and is now free from it, although the fratres are boycotting and persecuting him considerably. He went to them in a manly way and told them that he had nothing against any of them as individuals, but had conscientious scruples against any oath-bound lodge. He asked them to make out his indebtedness and he would pay up everything, and that he would not betray their secrets, etc. One of them asked him, the next day, why he had left, and, in answer, he told him that the Bible spoke strongly against secret orders. The man answered thus: "The Bible is a pack of d—d lies." This man who does not believe the Bible is the very man who read the Odd-fellow services over the dead body of a young man who was killed by a falling tree last fall. How can professed Christians countenance such work? I asked one of my brothers in the church (who is a Mason) if he would let the Masons bury him when he died? He answered very emphatically, "Yes, sir!" I then asked him if he would let Mr. So-and-so read the services and pray over his dead body. He answered just as emphatically that he would not. But I replied: "When a certain man was buried you stood by his open grave and bowed your head in pretended reverence, while this man blasphemed God's holy name and you knew it was a mockery; and you knew he was going to do this when you went there; you also knew that he probably would be swearing in a few moments." I think this brother will come out all right soon. I am praying earnestly for him and I have great faith that all will be well soon.

I have noticed one very peculiar fact, viz: You may say almost anything about, or rather against, the church of a secret society man, and he will not pay much attention to it; but just hint the least thing against his lodge and his indignation rises at once. No matter how strong evidence or argument you bring up against secretism, they always say: "You don't know," or "If you only knew." My father was intimately acquainted with Miller and Jagger who helped Morgan expose Masonry, and had many a long talk with them on the subject, and they both said that Morgan's expose was true and that they (the Masons) killed him. I myself heard two prominent Masons (who had been drinking) tell my father: "Of course we killed him," and that "he ought to have been killed." When I get on this subject I hardly know when to stop. I don't want to tire you out the first time, but I do want to say that I think you are doing a noble work and that God will surely prosper you. I wish some of your lecturers could come here and lecture, but I am not able to pay for it alone. In closing I would say God speed you! Yours very respectfully,
M. D. GRAY, M. D.

THE LODGE AND CHURCH IN DAKOTA.

DAYTON, N. Dakota, July 28, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Having been connected with the Women's Christian Temperance Union for almost fifteen years, I have had many opportunities of observing how our work in temperance and purity has been hindered by lodge influences; and I have been convinced for some considerable time that our W. C. T. U. should add to its many departments one in opposition to secret societies.

For the purpose of agitation and education I have sent out the papers and leaflets received from the N. C. A. broadcast over our (Pembina) county, especially to our women in the local unions. To show you that this effort has borne some fruit, I quote the following resolution, which was passed at the last county convention of our Union, a few weeks ago, with but little opposition. Thirty-three delegates were present from eleven local unions:

"Resolved, That secret societies are anti-Christian and anti-republican, a menace to the peace of society and the harmony of the home, as also antagonistic to our Christian churches and free institutions."

[Our correspondent explains that as all the editors in her vicinity belong to some or all of the local lodges, the above resolution was not written out for publication. She further explains that if it will do any good, we are at liberty to publish it, which we cheerfully do.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.]

Our county, like many others, is lodge-cursed; the women giving suppers and entertainments to keep up interest in the churches, while the men are in the lodges, which are all flourishing. Many of the ministers belong to these secret societies, and some who do not are quite vexed with me for opposing them.

Of course, I do not belong to any of the churches, as my husband and I are Covenanters. We work in all ways that we can, however, but do not now commune with them, as the present pastor of the M. E. church here is an Odd-fellow.

Yours for truth, (Mrs.) S. M. WYLLIE.

IN BRIEF.

Calculations based on the refraction of light, have caused it to be supposed that air becomes so rare at the height of about sixty miles that the distance may be regarded as the limit to its sensible extent, but other calculations made during the present century of the distance of the earth at which meteors ignite, indicate that the atmosphere extends upwards of 100 miles.

The distillation of essential oils from various species of plants, such as lavender, thyme, fennel, rosmarine, etc., is quite profitable in southeastern France. The country is here very arid and sterile, and these humblest of plants are, by industry and careful management, made to give prosperity to a large number of people. The United States is the largest consumer of these oils, and in time they will doubtless be produced in our own country. The still required for distillation is simple and inexpensive.

While disastrous fires have been traced to defective electrical appliances in buildings, it is shown by a writer in the Engineering Magazine that during the seven years past in Massachusetts ten times as many fires have been due to the careless use of matches. This writer, Prof. F. A. C. Perrine, in reviewing the whole subject, concludes that danger of fires from electric appliances is not inherent in the use of this element, but is due rather to disregard of general principles which may readily be mastered by electricians.

No theory or hypothesis which has received general acceptance has as yet been suggested for the explanation of the aurora borealis or northern lights. What is known is this: The direction of auroral jets or rays and the position of the crowns have a connection with the magnetic meridian, and the aurora produces great magnetic perturbation. Therefore it seems evident that the theater of its action is the atmosphere, and that the agent to which its development is due is electricity, influenced in some unascertained manner by terrestrial magnetism.

HENRY M. HUGUNIN

Editor.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 24, 1893.

UNHALLOWED ASSOCIATIONS.

Catholic mass was celebrated on a recent Sabbath in the East Avenue Baptist church in Long Island City, L. I. The use of the church was offered to the Rev. John McGuire of St. Mary's church because the latter building had been destroyed by fire.

Considerable misplaced sentiment has been uttered by certain religious papers, founded upon the so-called "Christian spirit" of the Baptists who admitted Father McGuire and his people into their church to worship.

We are told that "an altar was erected in the chancel, and to this the Holy Eucharist was conveyed by priests and acolytes. A cross was placed in the center of the chancel, and near it many candles were arranged," and of course the service was recited in a pagan language, with all the genuflexions and intonations that distinguish the Roman Catholic worship.

In the present state of Christianity, the Protestant charges of vital error in the theology of the Roman Catholic church, and for other causes, there is room for some dissent to the action of the Baptist minister in this affair. But perhaps it should excite no great degree of wonder when we take into consideration the following facts:

The Baptist and many other so-called Christian churches number among their members hundreds of men who belong to secret lodges founded upon the ancient mysteries of paganism, which perpetuate the worship of Baal in their ceremonies and reject Christ in their rituals and lodge prayers. Furthermore, these so-called Christian churches often invite these Christless fraternities, as civic bodies, to hold special services in their houses of worship, bearing their society banners and insignia, wearing their regalia and jewels, and embracing in their numbers every class of sinners named in the Bible. These men come to these churches to hear their own lodge ideas of "benevolence" and "charity" extolled by a lodge minister, yet are devoid of the spirit of true worship, for they know not God and travestie his Word and in their lodges, ignore his Son and his salvation, and depend upon their lodge religion to bring them to everlasting bliss.

Really, it makes one feel, sometimes, as if "Ichabod" is about to be written upon a majority of our churches for the manner in which they harbor and encourage these abominations.

Christian church union is desirable; but a union of Christian churches with un-Christian organizations reminds one of the lady and the tiger—the former swallowed by the latter, which would be the inevitable result of such a combination.

EVANGELISTS MOBBED AND IMPRISONED.

A Chicago clergyman, in a recent discourse, stated that of the 800 policemen employed by the city of Chicago, 600 are Roman Catholics. If this is so, it will serve as a probable solution of the persecution by the authorities inflicted upon Justin Rice, the evangelist, and his wife, who were arrested last week for preaching the Gospel on the public streets.

Mr. Rice, for "obstructing the streets" with his meeting, was taken before a magistrate and fined $25 and costs. Refusing to pay what he considered an unlawful assessment for his offense, he was sent to the city bridewell to serve an imprisonment of sixty-five days.

Mrs. Rice was first mobbed by hoodlums, and then fined for a similar offence; but the payment of her assessment kept her from imprisonment. Both were ordered to desist from further street preaching.

The Chicago Record of last Thursday morning, commenting upon these events, remarks:

On the night that Mrs. Rice was set upon and mobbed by a crowd of roughs there was not a blue-coat in the vicinity who felt called upon to go to her assistance. Not one of the ruffians who pelted her with missiles was put under arrest and sent to his appropriate abiding place in the house of correction. Yet on the next night, when Mrs. Rice essayed to preach again, the police manifested a strange activity in arresting her. Both the unfortunate couple have now been brought before justice courts and fined on charges of obstructing the streets.

It is now time for Inspector Lewis to come forward and answer a few questions. Where were his men when the riot was in progress? Why didn't they quell the disturbance and arrest the disturbers? Why do they find themselves justified in bullying one lone woman and calmly ignoring the aggressions of a band of thugs? What is the secret of their intense and delicate reluctance in interfering with hoodlums?

It is a pretty state of affairs if the police of that district do not understand the plain duties of their office.

We have reason to believe that the opening sentence of this article sufficiently explains the action of the police.

Mr. Rice, during his examination before the police magistrate, was dignified and reasonable. He justly claimed his right, as an American citizen, to openly express his opinions in public without let or hindrance. But the policy of the Romish church is opposed to freedom of speech and the promulgation of the Gospel among the common people. Hence this outrage.

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

The following is the resolution, as amended by Mr. Gladstone, which passed the House of Commons June 16:

"Resolved, That this House has learned with satisfaction that both Houses of the United States Congress have authorized the President to invite from time to time, as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any government with which the United States has or may have diplomatic relations; to the end that any differences or disputes arising between the two governments which cannot be adjusted by diplomatic agencies may be referred to arbitration and peaceably adjusted by such means, and that this House, cordially sympathizing with the purpose in view, expresses the hope that her Majesty's government will lend their ready co-operation to the government of the United States upon the basis of the foregoing resolution."

The debate which preceded the vote took a wide range, and was participated in by some military as well as peace men. It puts on record, as the definite conviction of the two great English-speaking nations, that international wars ought to cease, and that arbitration is a safe and wise substitute. The resolution applies primarily to the United States and Great Britain and has been practically acted on ever since 1814.

Among the able speeches that of Sir J. Lubbock abounds in telling points. The following is a brief extract:

"It was impossible for any one to contemplate the present military and naval arrangements without the gravest forebodings. Even if they did not end in war, they would eventually lead to ruin and bankruptcy. The principal countries of Europe were running deeper and deeper into debt. During the last twenty years the debt of Italy had risen from £483,000,000 to £516,000,000, that of Austria from £340,000,000 to £580,000,000, that of Russia from £340,000,000 to £750,000,000, and that of France from £500,000,000 to £1,300,000,000. Taking the government debts of the world together, they amounted in 1870 to £4,000,000,000—a fabulous, terrible, and crushing weight. But what were they now? They had risen to £6,000,000,000 and were still increasing. By far the greater part of this enormous, this appalling burden was represented by no valuable property, had fulfilled no useful purpose; it had been absolutely wasted, or, what from an international point of view was even worse, thrown away on war or in preparation for war. . . . If the present military system was maintained no relaxation of the hours of labor is possible."

HUMAN CONTROL OF THE WEATHER.

For several years schemes for causing rain to fall upon certain districts when the meteorological conditions indicated nothing but continued dry weather, have been numerous; and, if the published statements are correct, some success has attended these attempts to artificially water the thirsty earth. The actual results, however, are shaded with doubt, caused either by popular unbelief, or by failure on the part of the operators. The abstract testimony as to the possibility of inducing artificial rain has been very favorable, and even the United States government expended considerable money in experiments on a farm in the State of New York; but the outcome, we believe, has never been given to the public. It will not do, however, to say that artificial rain cannot be produced. The trouble has been too strong a desire to make money out of farming communities; and this seems to have been the principal motive in conducting the business of rain-making. Some day or other, perhaps, the experiments in this direction, divested of greed, will resolve themselves into a fixed science and ultimate success.

Attention has been called to this subject by a later scheme, by artifice, to control the winds of heaven and regulate the temperature of the air and earth. For this purpose an "International Cold Wave Company" has been organized in a Western State, with an alleged capital of six million dollars and a reserve fund of two millions. The organizers are local capitalists, who, we are told, expect to realize untold wealth out of a secret process for vitiating and destroying the hot winds of the prairies, by bringing a counter-wind from the colder regions of the north. If it does not prove a fraud, of which there is danger, the result will be awaited with interest.

"REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP."

All parties claiming to publish the secret work of the order are frauds, and their publications are spurious.—The Companion (Odd-fellows' organ), Columbus, Ohio, for August.

The records of Odd-fellowship show that only three revisions of its ritual have been made since its first organization, the last of which, prepared in 1880, going into general use by the order in January, 1881.

"Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated: The Complete Revised Ritual of the Lodge, Encampment, Patriarchs' Militant, and the Rebekah Degrees," which is sold by the N. C. A., is a genuine copy of the written and unwritten work of the order. In the preface to this publication it is stated:

"The signs, grips, passwords, etc., which are known as the secret or unwritten work of the order, were given to the lodges and encampments orally; but all of the rest of the ritual was furnished them printed in what are called 'Charge-books.' The three charge-books containing the ritual of the lodge and encampment were furnished to us, and every line of the ritual" (in our book) "was carefully corrected thereby. The secret (oral) work had been taken down in shorthand, and even the description of the signs, grips, etc., is given in the very words prescribed by the Sovereign Grand Lodge."

This statement ought to be a full and sufficient refutation of the falsehoods, quoted above, in the Companion. The revision sold by us may be deemed perfectly trustworthy, and is rendered more valuable by the notes and comments added by the lamented ex-Pres. J. Blanchard.

DUPLICITY OF MASONRY.

Masonry out of doors and in the lodge presents a dual existence. In the former, it exhibits itself as the embodiment of brotherly love, kindness, benevolence and the friend and handmaid of Christianity. In the second, it develops its true character as an exacting, tyrannical, selfish and murderous institution.

Take, for example, the subject of Masonic punishments.

OUT OF DOORS.

Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, page 620: "Masonic punishments are . . . restricted to an expression of disapprobation, or the deprivation of Masonic rights, and are: 1. Censure; 2. Reprimand; 3. Exclusion; 4. Suspension, definite or indefinite; and 5. Expulsion;" . . . Imprisonment and corporeal punishment are equally adverse to the spirit of the institution, and are also prohibited by the laws of the land, which reserve the infliction of such penalties for their own tribunals."

IN THE LODGE.

First member—"Then you think Morgan was really killed?"

Second member—"Yes, — him! and served him right; but be careful how you say so out of doors."

Entered Apprentice degree—Obligation of the initiate; from "Ecce Orienti," the Masonic (cypher) charge book (Illinois), page 28: "To all this I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to keep and perform the same, without any equivocation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind whatever; binding myself under a no less penalty than that of having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots and buried in the rough sands of the sea, at low-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours, should I ever knowingly or willfully violate this my solemn obligation of an Entered Apprentice Mason. So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same."

The reader will note that this solemn asseveration and lodge-imposed immolation on the bloody altar of Masonry is not copied from any Anti-masonic exposition or ritual, but from a purely Masonic book, published in New York in 1890, for the use of the fraternity.

From it can be seen the authority under which William Morgan was killed in 1826, for "knowingly or willfully" violating this same obligation.

What was there in his case to indicate that he received only "censure, reprimand, exclusion, suspension and expulsion?" The evidence was all on the side of his suffering the extreme penalty which he had at least three times pledged himself to undergo.

The public should be very careful about accepting the self-published merits and benefits of any secret society, especially of the Masonic fraternity. They are all written to ensnare the unwary, to give glory to a system that merits only contempt, and to deceive, if possible, the very elect of Christ's kingdom.

MASONIC CONGRESSES.

The sessions of the Masonic congress convened in this city last week were held behind closed doors; but the published list of papers and problems to be discussed contained much of interest for anti-secrecy reformers as well as Masons.

Among them we observed the following titles: "The Creed of Masonry." If made public, it would be a curiosity indeed. "Are Entered Apprentices Masons? If not, what makes a man a Mason?" "Are outside refreshments desirable, and under what restrictions?" "Unlawful publications." This has reference, we suppose, to "Ecce Orienti," which is a "dead give-away" of Blue Lodge Masonry.

Perhaps the last problem with which the craft had to wrestle—"What is the Congress for?"—has the most interest, inasmuch as all previous Masonic congresses in this country, according to the American Tyler, have been flat failures. They were as follows:

The Congress of Washington convoked in the year 1822, at the call of several Grand Lodges, for the purpose of recommending the establishment of a general Grand Lodge of the United States. The effort was an unsuccessful one.

Congress of Baltimore, convoked in the year 1843, with the object of establishing a uniform system of work. Perhaps there was not, in any of the preceding congresses, a greater instance of failure than in this, since not a year elapsed before the most prominent members of the congress disagreed as to the nature and extent of the reforms which were instituted; and the Baltimore system of work has already become a myth.

Second Congress of Baltimore, convoked in the year 1847, the object being again to attempt the establishment of a general Grand Lodge. This Congress went so far as to adopt a "Supreme Grand Lodge Constitution," but its action was not supported by a sufficient number of Grand Lodges to carry it into effect.

Congress of Lexington, convoked in 1853, at Lexington, Ky., for the purpose of again making the attempt to form a general Grand Lodge. A plan of constitution was proposed, but a sufficient number of Grand Lodges did not accede to the proposal to give it efficacy.

North American Masonic Congress convened in the city of Chicago, Sept. 13, 1859, at the call of a large number of prominent members of the fraternity, for the purpose of organizing a general Grand Lodge of the United States. The convention held two sessions, adopted articles of confederation, which proposed that the congress should meet triennially; take cognizance of all cases of difference which may have arisen between two or more lodges; consult and advise on questions of Masonic law and jurisprudence, without power of enforcement of its decrees. No subsequent session was held; the project therefore failed of any definite results.

The American Tyler, from which we gather the foregoing information, confesses that the last question is "too difficult" for it "to attempt an answer."

Masonry is a mystery, as well as a law, unto itself.

IN MEMORIAM.

A kind letter from an esteemed friend and fellow-helper recalls a garland of fragrant memories clustering around the altar of family devotion in the Christian home of Bro. Andrew Stevens, in Rock county, Wis. If I had previously learned of the release of Bro. S., the fact had escaped me; but while he "sleeps the sleep of the just," the results of a quiet, peaceful, devoted and truly heroic life fall like sunbeams from above upon generations of waiting pilgrims to cheer and guide their footsteps away from the lodges and secret snares of the evil one, to the sanctuary, the home and the paths of integrity. May the faith and consolation which sustained the husband and father be the unfailing portion of widow and children, until a reunited family join the assembly of the "just made perfect," where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are forever at rest."

JAMES P. STODDARD.

—One of the most impressive corollaries upon the unjust Geary Chinese exclusion law is found in the story of a Chinaman in Denver, Col., who, during the recent suffering of unemployed and starving workmen there provided daily sufficient bread and meat to sustain thirteen of these hungry sufferers. This is another argument in support of Rev. J. M. Foster's theory of "Our National Distress," printed on page 2 of this issue of the Cynosure.

—Our Washington correspondent, recently, showed that Lutheranism is making wonderful advances in this country, having within ten years increased its membership 67 per cent. In Europe it has more than 44,000,000 adherents, 32,000,000 of whom speak the German language. Among the German Lutherans in the United States—the total number of both English and German exceeding 7,000,000, the anti-secrecy reform is earnestly studied and almost universally made a cardinal point in church doctrine.

—How the labor unions "help" their members is a story well-told by the Chicago Herald of Thursday last:

Day before yesterday a vessel was manned at Chicago for a lake voyage. The sailors' union learned that the men who had been shipped belonged to the union and had made a private bargain without its consent as to the wages which they were to receive for the trip. The union forces boarded the vessel, coaxed the crew away, had them at headquarters and fined them for violating the by-laws. In the meantime the captain found enough non-union sailors to man his vessel and sailed away. After being disciplined, the union men returned to the dock, but their job had been given to others. They then joined the mass meeting of the unemployed at the lake front and cheered the speakers, who exclaimed, "We must have work or bread."

—Under the head of "How to Treat Anti-masons," the Michigan Freemason advises members of the fraternity that "silence is the best rebuke which can be given to evident folly." Your "duly and truly prepared" Mason has four arguments with which to confront his opponents. Of these two are "secrecy and silence," and when these fail to intimidate or refute Anti-masonic charges against the fraternity, they resort to the other two—denial and abuse. As for argument in favor of their institution when exposed by its own publications and seceding members, the less they say the better.

—Rev. C. B. Small, referring to the split in the United Brethren church, and remaining firm to the original anti-secret Radical (or Conservative) branch, takes opportunity, in a recent letter, to prod the Liberals as follows: "The facts concerning our church controversy will be better known after awhile. The old church stands more favorably before the public now than it did four years ago. Dr. Bunnell, of Washington, Ind., a Mason, said to me that he had no confidence in a class of preachers who had lectured and preached against secret societies so long and loud, and then suddenly turned about to get money and influence." We find his letter in a recent number of the Christian Conservator.

—Debates on the financial situation continue to occupy the attention of Congress. The silver producers have a strong following, but are promptly met by the opposition. The Senate Finance committee, it is announced, has outlined a measure designed to relieve the monetary situation, in addition to Senator Voorhees' national bank bill, which was under discussion last week. Secretary Carlisle is considering a plan to transfer the silver bullion in the Treasury to the coinage fund and issue certificates against it—a step that promises relief. The tone of the silver men may be judged from the statement that "impeachment of President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle is demanded by the organ of the Kansas Populists for failure to purchase the prescribed quantity of silver in July." The debates will probably close in Congress within a week or two. In the meantime let us pray that God will give the legislators wisdom as well as a voice.

shame to allow such a benevolent and praiseworthy institution as Freemasonry to be assailed and traduced before the world, and that our exhibit ought to be at once removed from the Fair, etc. I tried to direct his attention to the statements of Pres. Finney, D. L. Moody, Wendell Phillips and Chas. Sumner; but as my efforts had the effect of inducing fiercer and more vehement assaults, I desisted from further attempts to enlighten my brother from across the sea.

In the midst of all that tries our faith there is some satisfaction in knowing that the lance reaches the tender spot, and that the opposition recognize the fact that their order is on trial before the world. Not all the seed sown will fall by the wayside, or among thorns, or on stony ground, but some will bring a harvest in due season. Let no friend of the cause say there are yet four months to the harvest, but lift up your eyes and behold the fields white already for the reapers, and cast in the sickle, and pluck the choice clusters before the husbandman returns to burn the bundled tares and set judgment in the earth.

I scarcely dare attempt an enumeration of friends who have called recently at our exposition, lest some should be omitted who are deserving of mention. Rev. H. H. Hinman rendered service to the cause while he remained for several hours to rest and refresh himself. T. C. McChesney, a friend and classmate, now living in California, stopped long enough to renew old acquaintance. Sister Mary Carnes, from Detroit, spent two days with us and brought inspiration and a blessing, as she is wont to every good word and work. Bro. M. L. Worcester's presence was a happy surprise, and he was not an idle spectator but active participant in the work while he remained. Bro. Palmer met the denials and cavils of the opposition by facts from his own experience, showing that he neither surrenders the right of private judgment or his freedom of speech to the dictum of the master to whom he was once a slave. A brief but pleasant interview with Mr. Johnston of Putnam, Conn., was very gratifying, as we talked of mutual friends and occurrences in that far-away city.

Two young men, from Pennsylvania, brought greetings from Bro. Nathan Callender, and showed a real zeal for reform. The presence and companionship of sympathizing friends is very helpful when the conflict is on.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

FROM REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Yesterday, the 17th, was my first day at the Fair. A greater part of the time I spent at the booth of the N. C. A., doing what I could to aid Bro. J. P. Stoddard in his arduous and successful work.

I was surprised to see the marked facilities both for the distribution of literature and personal conversation in advocacy of the principles for which we have so long contended.

It was somewhat remarkable that none of the adjoining exhibits of Christian and benevolent associations drew so large a crowd and awakened so much apparent interest. Persons are there from not only all parts of our country, but from every part of the world.

I was much interested in a conversation with an intelligent physician from Central America. He is apparently a Christian—a Lutheran; did not believe in secret societies, and knew but little about them. He was glad to listen and to accept our literature.

Occasionally there called some who were acquainted with the Cynosure and our work, and who cheered our hearts; but, in the main, the crowd was quite promiscuous, the Masonic element being largely dominant. Nearly all, however, were courteous, and many candid and appreciative.

The friends of the N. C. A. cannot do better than to heartily sustain this exhibit by their means.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE HOME.

A SONG OF YOUTH.

Early seeking, early finding,
Happy, happy we!
Looking up in life's sweet morning,
Looking up to thee!
We begin our children's days,
Lord of glory, with thy praise.

Early asking, early getting,
Happy, happy we!
We would daily, blessed Jesus,
Find our all in thee.
In thy fullness is the store
Of the life for evermore.

Early knocking, early opening,
Happy, happy we!
By the holy gate we enter,
Lord, to dwell with thee.
In the city of the blest—
In the home of heavenly rest.

Early loving, early trusting,
Happy, happy we!
Looking upward, pressing onward,
Day by day to thee;
Leaving this poor world behind,
All in thee, O Christ, to find.

—Horatio Bonar, D. D.

DEAD IN CHRIST.

The vital thought of all Christian disciples should be the continuation and enlargement, the exaltation and supremacy, of Christ in the life of the world. Not self, but Christ, should be the goal of all our religious culture. The devoted disciple will be blind to self in his ever-growing vision of the Lord. Indeed, there is no other honorable attitude which the redeemed can assume toward their Redeemer. We are the spiritual creations of the infinite Christ-life. We are the subjects of an eternal atonement. We are swathed in the infinite pity of the Christ-love. We have not an inch of spiritual standing-ground save the mercy of God revealed in Christ. We are redeemed with his fathomless sufferings. We are the heirs of his exhaustless grace. Our weakness is upborne and infolded by the almighty strength of his tenderness. He brings to us, as a gift, all the elements that make up the character of God. And, withal, it is his unwearying hand that arrests and wrenches us from awful abysses of spiritual destruction, invisible to our blindness. All in us that is eternal is what there is in us of Christ. The growing Christian is essentially the growing Christ. And no life, had it the earth with its ages in hand, could, by the consecration of all, give any comprehensive expression of the gratitude it should cherish for the gift of God in Christ. Hence the moving, abiding, solemn thought of our Christian experience should be: not, am I growing better or worse, in and for myself; but, am I increasing the influence, the reputation, the saving life of Christ among men? Not what I am, but what I show Christ to be, should be the end of all Christian aspiration. Christ is, to the world, largely what the Christian is—Christ increasing or decreasing according as Christians manifest him in their being and doing. We, the church, says Paul, are Christ's body. We are genuinely Christian, then, to the extent that we are Christ in all our earthly relationships. And it is a momentous thought that just to the degree that we are less Christ-like than it is our privilege to be, to the extent that we fail to fulfill all our possibilities of goodness and grasp all our opportunities for service, to the measure that we go without all the Holy Ghost power God promises to the receptive, we misrepresent Christ to men, and stand between Christ and the subjection of the world.—Rev. George D. Herron.

"THERE WILL BE ROOM IN HEAVEN."

She was a little old woman, very plainly dressed in black bombazine that had seen much careful wear, and her bonnet was very old-fashioned, and people stared at her tottering up the aisle of the grand church, evidently bent on securing one of the best seats; for a great man preached on that day, and the house was filled with splendidly-dressed people who had heard of the fame of the preacher, his learning, his intellect, his goodness, and they wondered at the presumption of the poor old woman. She must have been in her dotage, for she went into the pew of the richest member of the church, and took a seat. The three ladies who were seated there beckoned to the sexton, who bent over the intruder and whispered something; but she was hard of hearing, and smiled a little withered smile, as she said, gently:

"Oh, I'm quite comfortable—quite comfortable."

"But you are not wanted here," said the sexton, pompously; "there is not room. Come with me, my good woman; I'll see that you have a seat."

"Not room!" said the old woman, looking at her shrunken proportions, and then at the fine ladies. "Why, I am not crowded a bit. I rode ten miles to hear the sermon to-day, because—"

But here the sexton took her by the arm and shook her roughly in a polite, underhand way, and then she took the hint. Her faded old eyes filled with tears, her chin quivered; but she arose meekly and left the pew. Turning quietly to the ladies, who were spreading their rich dresses over the space she left vacant, she said, gently:

"I hope, my dears, there'll be room in heaven for us all."

Then she followed the pompous sexton to the rear of the church, where, in the last pew she was seated between a threadbare girl and a shabby old man.

"She must be crazy," said one of the ladies in the pew which she had first occupied. "What can an ignorant old woman like her want to hear Dr. ——— preach for? She would not be able to understand a word he said."

"Those people are so persistent! The idea of her forcing herself into our pew! Isn't that voluntary lovely! There's Dr. ——— coming out of the vestry. Isn't he grand?"

"Splendid! What a stately man! You know he promised to dine with us while he is here."

He is a commanding-looking man, and as the organ voluntary stopped, and he looked over the crowd of worshipers gathered in the vast church, he seemed to scan every face. His hand was on the Bible, when suddenly, leaning over the reading desk, he beckoned to the sexton, who obsequiously mounted the steps to receive the mysterious message. And then the three ladies in the grand pew were electrified to see him take his way the whole length of the church to return with the old woman, whom he placed in the front pew of all, its other occupants making room for her. The great preacher looked at her with a smile of recognition; and then the service proceeded, and he preached a sermon that struck fire from every heart.

"Who was she?" asked the ladies who could not make room for her, as they passed the sexton at the door.

"The preacher's mother," answered that functionary, in an injured tone.—Selected.

THERE CAME OUT THIS CALF.

Aaron professed to be greatly astonished that the calf should come out; but of course the calf took its shape from the mould in which it was cast; and who prepared that mould but Aaron himself?

Do we not see the same thing to-day?

Hear how that father laments over his son. "I could not have believed he would turn out so badly; he takes no notice of anything I say to him!" But when he was a child he was allowed to have his own way if he only teased and cried long enough. It was much easier to give the child the sugar he cried for than patiently to teach him that he would never get anything by crying for it. Much easier, a few years later, to let him choose his own companions and follow his own pursuits than to take some care about these things, so as, at the same time, to keep his affection and maintain a wise and firm control over him. The mould was made, and the result might have been expected.

Look at that mother, who is breaking her heart because her daughter is obstinately bent on marrying a godless young man! Yet the mother suffered her child to go where she would not have thought of going herself. True, the girl had professed conversion, but she was not taught how the Lord loves obedience, and how there can be no fellowship between light and darkness. "You know young people must have a little pleasure," was made the excuse for all sorts of worldly frivolity, and what has come out of the mould is nothing more than might have been looked for.

When Eli was very old he feebly remonstrated with his ungodly sons, and they did not heed him; but God's charge against Eli was that he did not restrain them when he might have done it (1 Sam. 3: 13). How different what God could say about Abraham—"For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment." A SENSIBLE LETTER FROM LINCOLN

TO HIS HALF BROTHER.

"WASHINGTON, Dec. 24, 1848.

"DEAR JOHNSON:—Your request for $80 I do not think it best to comply with just now. At the various times when I have helped you a little you have said to me, 'We can get along very well now;' but in a short time I find you in the same difficulty again.

"Now, this can only happen by some defect in your conduct. What the defect is, I think I know: you are not lazy, and still you are an idler. I doubt whether, since I saw you, you have done a good whole day's work in any one day. You do not very much dislike to work, and still you do not work much, merely because it does not seem to you that you could get much for it. This habit of uselessly wasting time is the whole difficulty, and it is vastly important to you, and still more to the children, that you should break this habit. It is more important to them, because they have longer to live and can keep out of an idle habit before they age in it easier than they can get out after they are in.

"You are now in need of some ready money, and what I propose to you is that you shall go to work 'tooth and nail' for somebody who will give you money for it. Let father and your boys have charge of things at home—prepare for a crop and make a crop—and you will go to work for the best money—wages, or in discharge of any debt you owe, that you can get. And to secure you a fair reward for your labor I now promise you that for every dollar you will, between now and the first of May, get for your labor, either in money or on your own indebtedness, I will give you one other dollar. By this if you hire yourself at ten dollars a month, from me you will get ten dollars more, making twenty dollars a month for your work. In this I do not mean you shall go off to St. Louis, or the lead mines, or the gold mines of California, but I mean for you to go at it for the best wages you can get close at home—in Coles county. Now, if you will do this, you will soon be out of debt, and what is better, you will have a habit that will keep you from getting into debt again. But if I should now clear you out, next year you will be just as deep in as ever. You say you would almost give your place in heaven for seventy or eighty dollars. Then you value your place in heaven very cheap, for I am sure you can, with the offer I make you, get the seventy or eighty dollars with four or five months' work. You say if I furnish you the money you will deed me the land, and if you don't pay the money back you will deliver possession. Nonsense! If you cannot live with the land, how will you then live without it? You have always been kind to me, and I do not mean to be unkind to you. On the contrary, if you will but follow my advice, you will find it worth more than eighty times eighty dollars to you.

"Affectionately your brother,

"A. LINCOLN."

PITH FOR THE PEOPLE.

Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D., of Detroit, Mich., is the author of the following points. They formed part of a "charge to the people" in an installation service:

One man cannot keep both sides of the contract.

The church bell rings twice on Sabbath, and just as loudly for the people as for the pastor.

The church makes the minister. Like people like priest. Each church has its own atmosphere.

A minister's day is only twenty-four hours long.

When one is introduced to 600 faces, the 600 know him 600 times faster than he knows them.

Pew rents do not have summer vacations.

If the church is the army of the Lord, the trustees run the commissary department.

A thoughtful usher is a means of grace.

Repair all roads that lead to the church.

Sabbath sickness is healed only by the unction from the Holy One.

A congregation gets what it brings.

A hungry man does not criticise the shape of the loaf.

A congregation as well as an individual may have the dyspepsia.

The end of a sermon is only its beginning.

Perfection is never in the pulpit, and it is seldom in the pews.

If Aaron and Hur are not on the church roll you may as well burn the books.

Children cry for sweets when they may need oil or the slipper—the same is a parable.

Hear with both ears.

Hear with your own ears.

The patron saint of church collections is St. Nickel-us.

The benediction is not an official order for overcoats.

Is any sick? Let him send.

As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is he that tasteth all the pulpits.

The rusty lock creaks the loudest, and the do-nothings make the most noise in the church.

The ox that pulls the least groans the loudest.

The croaker and the contentious one we may endure, but the whispering woman in man's clothes who can stand?

A machine does not run itself, and a list of officers, even when printed, does not make a society.

There are some things which even the young people do not know.

Faithful are the wounds of a friend, but that is no reason for sharpening the tongue whenever the pastor appears.—Selected.

CRADLE SONGS.

In the old New England cabin on Midway plains, among the quaint and old-fashioned bits of furniture, there is an old cradle made out of a barrel. The baby of to-day, even the pampered infant resting on pillows of down in its lace-draped bassinet, misses the luxury that the baby of olden times possessed when the busy mother pushed with her foot the cradle, as she hummed a soft lullaby. But if the cradle is out of date, cradle songs remain, and will endure as long as there are tired babies to be hushed to sleep. Every language contains lullabies, and every period of literature shows them.

The baby of ancient Rome drooped his eyes at the soothing words:

"Lalla, lalla, lalla, Aut dormi, aut lacta."

The Japanese mother tells her child that if he is a good baby he shall eat red beans and fish, while the Chinese mother sings:

"Snail, snail, come out and be fed,
Put out your horns and then your head,
And thy mamma will give thee mutton,
For thou art doubly dear to me."

The little Zulu listens to a song like this:

"Hush, thec, my baby,
Thy mother's o'er the mountains gone;
There she will dig the little garden patch,
And water she'll fetch from the river."

There is a Spanish song that tells how

"The moon was chewing a mellow fig,
The sun was gobbling cabbage big."

which shows a resemblance to our own Mother Goose melodies. Of course, among the Germans, with their love of home and children, beautiful lullabies may be expected. A sweet and familiar one is this:

"Sleep, baby, sleep! Thy father guards the sheep;
Thy mother shakes the dreamland tree,
And from it fall sweet dreams for thee;
Sleep, baby, sleep! Sleep, baby, sleep!"

Many of the familiar English cradle songs date back to the time of Henry VIII., though when they were first composed it is difficult to discover. Many of them refer to "Rock-a-bye, baby, on the tree-top," and may simply have been suggested by the swaying and soothing motion of the topmost branches of the trees, although one authority traces its origin to the Aryan ancestors of Britain, who dug their houses underground and covered them with the interlaced boughs of trees. Another authority is that "Rock-a-bye, baby," and "Bye, Baby Bunting" come to us from the Indians, as they had a custom of cradling their papposes among the swaying branches.

The early English poets felt it rather beneath their dignity to compose lullabies, but Tennyson did not think so, and no more beautiful lines came from his pen than the lullaby in "The Princess":

"Sweet and low, sweet and low, Wind of the western sea," that has been set to music as beautiful as the words.

Sir Walter Scott wrote another famous lullaby:

"O, hush thee, my babie, thy sire was a knight,
Thy mother a lady, both lovely and bright;
The woods and the glens from the tow'rs which we see;
They are all belonging, dear babie, to thee."

Who has not heard some mother as she nestles her babe to her breast sing Watts' fine old hymn:

"Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber,
Holy angels guard thy bed?"

We none of us can remember the soothing melodies our mothers sang during our days of babyhood, but we can guess at our portion by seeing how the younger brothers and sisters fared, and when we are grown up and too old to be sung to sleep, a remnant of the old hymn stays with us,

"Holy angels guard thy bed," and after the toil and trouble of the day are over we can close our eyes peacefully, grateful for the hovering presences we feel are near us, wise, tender and loving.—Anonymous.

TEMPERANCE.

THE TEMPERANCE SHIP.

(Isaiah 41:10-13.)

Take courage, temperance workers!
You shall not suffer wreck
While up to God the people's prayers
Are ringing from your deck.
Wait cheerily, temperance workers,
For daylight and for land;
The breath of God is on your sail,
Your rudder in his hand.

Sail on! sail on! deep freighted
With blessings and with hopes;
The good of old, with shadowy hands
Are pulling at your ropes.
Behind, your holy martyrs
Uplift the palm and crown;
Before you, unborn ages send Their benedictions down.

Courage! your work is holy,
God's errands never fail!
Sweep on through storm and sunshine,
The thunder and the hail!
Work on! sail on! the morning comes,
The port you yet shall win,
And all the bells of God shall ring,
The ship of temperance in.

—John G. Whittier.

ONTARIO'S LICENSED LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Now that it has been decided to take a prohibition plebiscite for the Province of Ontario in January next, the following facts and figures in regard to receipts and expenditure in connection with the licensed liquor traffic may be of interest and value.

According to the last published Ontario official reports there were, in all, 3,464 liquor licenses granted last year. Of these 2,968 were full tavern licenses and 72 for the sale of wine and beer only; 403 were shop license and 21 wholesale.

The total cash receipts for licenses and fines collected amounted to $965,604. Of this there went to the Province $300,604, and to the municipalities $289,487. There was deducted for the payment of License Inspectors' salaries, Commissioners' expenses and other items, $75,517.

The total amount of fines collected, which is included in the gross receipts given above, was $23,316.

The total number of persons committed to the fifty-two county jails of the Province for drunkenness alone during the year was 2,736, which was less than any year since the present license act came into force in 1876. The highest number of commitments of this kind was ten years ago, in 1883, when 4,897 were thus committed. The average for the past ten years has been about 4,000 a year.

Of course the commitments for drunkenness only represents a part of the crimes caused by drink. According to the observations and testimony of Sir Oliver Mowat, fully three-fourths of the crime and poverty and misery of the country comes from the drink traffic.

Here are some statistics of crime in Ontario and its cost to the people, obtained from the last published Prison's Report of the Province:

Total commitments to county jails.....	9,011
Total commitments to Central prison.....	935
Total commitments to Andrew Mercer Female prison	234
Total commitments to Penetanguishene Boys' Reformatory.....	252
Total commitments to Kingston Penitentiary.....	703
	11,144

It will be seen, then, that of prisoners alone the tax-payers of this one Province are carrying over eleven thousand on their backs. Three-fourths of these would represent 8,358 directly chargeable to this one cause. Remove that cause and the number left, all told, would be but a comparatively light burden on the people's shoulders.

Here are some items of expenditures for the punishment of these prisoners after they have been caught and tried and sentenced, as given in our official reports:

Annual cost of common jails.....	$135,706
Annual cost of Central prison.....	65,955
Annual cost of Mercer Reformatory.....	26,725
Annual cost of Penetanguishene Reformatory.....	36,977
Annual cost of Kingston Penitentiary.....	139,558
	$404,721

Three-fourths of that sum represents $303,541 to be chargeable to the drink traffic or more than the Province received, all told, from its entire revenue from the license business.

A million dollars more would not represent the amount of capital sunk in the cost and previous maintenance of these various public prisons, the interest of which must be added to this account.

We have not space now to go into details in connection with these matters, but purpose doing so in the near future. They ought to be better understood by the people than they are, and especially in view of the January plebiscite. Temperance speakers, either in the pulpit or on the platform, ought to pay more attention to them.

Turning to the last published Ontario public accounts here are some of the items of expenditure that the tax-payers had to provide for in some way:

Administration of justice.....	$391,639
Hospitals and charities.....	151,574
Insane asylums.....	185,081
Reformatory asylums.....	9,216
Central prison.....	46,915
Lock-ups in outlying districts.....	11,967
Crown Council prosecution fees.....	8,882
	$805,224

These are but a few of many items of the class of which three-fourths are chargeable to the drink traffic, and the burden must continue to be as heavy as it is while the traffic is licensed and sanctioned by law. These items do not include the Municipal and Dominion expenses in connection with them and similar matters. They go to show, however, that outside of all mere sentiment it will be a great relief to the tax-payers of Ontario to get rid of the licensed liquor traffic as soon as possible.—Hamilton, Ont., Templar, Aug. 11.

WHAT A SPECTACLE!

A case strikingly illustrating the horrible hold which the appetite for strong drink may acquire over a man is reported in a press dispatch from Columbus, Ohio. Years ago one Samuel White, while intoxicated, slew a man. His character, otherwise than in the matter of intemperance, was good, and his family connections were the best. For these and other considerations a strong effort was made, after his conviction and sentence to imprisonment for life, to induce the governor to pardon him. Finally a conditional pardon was obtained, the condition being that ever afterward he should abstain from intoxicants. October 25, on the occasion of his daughter's marriage, after eighteen years of abstinence, he violated the condition of his pardon, and was carried back to prison for the rest of his natural life. Eighteen years of sobriety had not quenched his thirst for liquor, and imprisonment for life was not sufficient to deter him from indulging this insatiable appetite!—Way of Faith.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Heavenly wisdom is profitable for the life that now is.—vs. 30-36. Paul was as calm and full of courage on board of a vessel seemingly doomed to destruction, as when addressing the mob on the castle stairs at Jerusalem. A Christian's peace of mind is independent of circumstances. He whose soul is anchored to the bed-rock of eternal truth is not moved by any surface tumult. The seamen were planning a cowardly desertion of the ship. Heathenism is selfish, whether it be what we generally think of by that name, or the kind which wears the colors of a false and formal Christianity. "Except these abide in the ship." The soldiers were no navigators, and the vessel thus bereft of its crew would have drifted to certain destruction. Paul, being delivered from the fear which possessed the others, retained his cool sagacity, and saw at once through their plan. He "besought them all to take meat". Their extreme peril had led them to neglect their bodily needs; and yet the very danger they were in demanded that they take sustenance so as to be able to endure what further hardships might lie before them. To neglect the requirements of our physical natures is no part of Christianity, but, on the contrary, Christian ethics properly applied teach us to take more and better care of our bodies, in order that we may have strength to adequately perform life's duties. And if the Master calls us to protracted or wearing labors in his cause, there is still less excuse for such neglect; for before we can "endure hardship as a good soldier of Jesus Christ," we need to have healthy bodies. Baths, simple food and daily exercise made the old Greeks and Romans the most athletic races the world ever saw. But with still more binding force does Christianity require us to care for the well-being of those about us. It would not be possible to find within the pale of heathenism, ancient or modern, anything answering to the various associations or the individual efforts by which Christianity is seeking at the present time to ameliorate the condition of the poor, and persuade them to adopt more hygienic methods of living. He "gave thanks". No combination of evil circumstances could make him forego what had become as natural to him as his daily breath. He practiced his own precept, "In everything give thanks," in evil as in good fortune; for the bitter as well as for the sweet. "Then were they all of good cheer." This is a part of Gospel work; to cheer instead of discouraging. Shakspeare truly says:

"A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a mile-a."

We need, as Christians, to cultivate a bright, courageous disposition. The Gospel is "glad tidings of great joy," but the world will not believe that this is so if its professors go about with sad and gloomy countenances, or are chronic grumblers. "Rejoice in the Lord," is as much a command as to "repent and believe".

2. The shipwreck—vs. 37-41. "They knew not the land." So we are often in ignorance of duties and relationships on which providential circumstances may suddenly cast us. It is enough that God knows. It was a gloomy, forbidding shore, but the shivering, shipwrecked sailors were thankful for its safe shelter. So the cause of reform may often seem to suffer shipwreck; its leaders may be cast on a strange coast, and not know, in the mist and darkness, where they are. But let them take courage who have risked their all for justice and right. "Not a hair of their heads shall perish." The ship's crew had the promise that they would be saved, yet they put forth just as strong efforts as if they had received no such cheering word. Lack of faith is shown not in our wise use of, but in our trusting to, means. "They lightened the ship." So we, if we would win the heavenly port, must "cast aside every weight." The wheat was valuable, but the lives on board were infinitely more precious. So millions of money and all the honors of the world cannot be weighed in the scales for an instant with eternal life.

3. The crew saved.—vs. 42-44. Again, we see illustrated the selfishness of the natural heart. "The soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners," lest through their escape they should forfeit their own lives; and the probability is that if Paul had not been on board, and the centurion anxious to save one whose counsel had been of such material benefit, this would have been done. So one righteous man may often save the lives of many sinners.

LITERATURE.

THE HAMMER AND THE NAIL; or, The Relations of Power to Force. By Adam Miller, M.D., author of "Life in Other Worlds," etc. Chicago: Published by the author at 172 Ashland Boulevard. Price 25 cents; five copies for $1. Sent by mail, on receipt of price, to any address.

Dr. Miller, now in his 84th year, yet vigorous in mind, and not decrepit in body, has made a life-long study of causality—the tracing of effects to their causes; and in this booklet he calmly reviews the fallacies of scientific hypothesis relating to evolution, and refutes the doctrine of self-creation in the material world. By the simple figure of a perfect hammer and a perfect nail laid side by side, he maintains the idea that without a superior force and intelligence to use them properly, they would continue in a condition of inertia forever, would benefit nobody, and be no better than a clod in the economy of nature. Comparing larger things in the cosmos with these smaller examples, he argues that in spite of all the dogmas of philosophy (so-called) there is in the universe a "great First Cause," to which all matter is subject, and which moulds and fashions it by superior intelligence and energy to the needs and use of created beings who also owe to it their existence. In this connection he quotes the following from the late Prof. Winchell: "If a hypothesis be not sustained by scientific evidence, it behooves the Christian world to overthrow it from scientific data. If she can use science to overthrow a false and dangerous position, she is derelict to neglect the opportunity." As a Christian and a scholar, Dr. Miller has in this form undertaken to show young men the false lights that would lure them from the existence and power of Almighty God and wreck them on the fatal shoals of infidelity. In this labor of love he discusses the relations of power and force; the limitations of human knowledge when brought into opposition to divine revelation; the speculations of philosophers in relation to solar physics; reviews the writings of sundry astronomers, and their attempts to displace the Christian religion by their fancied discoveries; dissects the peculiar dogmas of Tyndall, Spencer, Drummond and others of that ilk; points out the atheistic features of their writings, and sharply criticises their errors; and manfully takes the position that "theology cannot consistently yield to the demands of speculative science;" in other words, that the Bible and Christianity have nothing to fear when brought into contradistinction with any erratic system of natural religion. Whatever in science, art or nature cannot be brought into harmony with revelation and simple truth is not worthy of acceptance.

Dr. Miller's treatise is warmly commended by distinguished orthodox clergymen, thoughtful doctors of medicine and intelligent journalists.

NOTES.

Mrs. M. O. W. Oliphant will contribute an article on Daniel Defoe, author of "Robinson Crusoe," to the September Century. She says that no man in his age was a more complete paradox than Defoe. "His fame is world-wide, though all that is known of him is one or two of his least productions." He was fifty-eight years of age at the time "Robinson Crusoe" was written, and he was then a man who had fallen and failed, and had made but little of his life.

The August number of American Gardening has for its opening article a description (finely illustrated) of the spring pomological exhibitions of the World's Fair. Other illustrated papers are: Farleyuse, a beautiful maidenhair fern; Indian Azaleas; The Moccasin Flower; Persimmons; The Cineraria; Cultivating a Fenced Garden; A Peculiar Fuchsia; The Pepperidge Tree; Viburnums for Lawn Planting, etc. Other information is both valuable and timely. Every horticulturist of intelligence and good taste will find much to interest him in this excellent monthly. New York: Rural Publishing Co. 10 cents.

The Bureau of Education, in its first circular of information for 1893, issues a comprehensive treatise on Shorthand—a thorough revision of Mr. Julius Ensign Rockwell's former volume, published by the Bureau in 1884, entitled: "The Teaching, Practice and Literature of Shorthand." The present issue bears the title of "Shorthand Instruction and Practice." Much of the former matter is omitted in this, and some new material is inserted. Among the latter is a digest of legal decisions in regard to shorthand writers. For those who desire to secure a trustworthy history of the origin and progress of this useful science, this work will be found very appropriate and gratifying. It can be obtained on application to the Bureau of Education at Washington.

Brief reference was made, a few weeks ago, to the little Manual on Kindness to Animals, published by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, No. 10, East 22d street, New York. The experience of the society shows that far more cruelty is done through ignorance and want of thought than through vicious intention. To educate children to avoid cruelty, with sufficient reasons why, is the object of this pamphlet. For this purpose the author has divided his booklet into fifty-two sections, each representing one week's instruction, in the form of questions and answers, to be studied and memorized. The lessons are short, but very comprehensive, very easily learned, and their teachings of a very salutary nature. Used in homes, Sunday-schools and day-schools, its effects should be promptly and beneficially felt. Price 4 cents each, or $2 per hundred.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—In Wales there are 100 Welsh ministers and 24,955 Welsh members; English Methodism in Wales has eighty-one ministers and 16,206 members, making a total of nearly 200 ministers and over 40,000 members. The work was begun in Wales in 1800.

—A French Roman Catholic church in New York "has received through Mgr. Marquis of Quebec a piece of what is claimed to be a bone of the body of John the Baptist, from eight to ten inches long." "Father Fetureau," it is stated, already had "another piece in his church about two inches long." "Fresh miracles are expected to be worked with them."

—There are nineteen Moravian missionaries among the Mosquito Indians in Nicaragua. No work is yet opened to over 200,000 Spanish-speaking natives in this republic.

—There is a small Protestant community in the little village of Husinec, Bohemia, where John Huss was born. The reformer's house is national property, but a neighboring barn is to be transformed into a chapel and a pastor's house.

—An Ohio minister has earned the undying gratitude of the exquisitely nice people whose sense of cleanliness has been outraged by having to drink at the communion of the Lord's Supper out of a common cup. This ingenious gentleman has invented a tray which will hold 40 real cute "individual cups" at a time.

—Bishop Newman arrived in New York Aug. 4 from South America. To a reporter he said: "There are 4,000 communicants and about 18,000 adherents of the Methodist church in South America."

—The Illinois Christian Endeavor union has engaged Mr. John G. Woolley for a tour of the State in the interest of Gospel temperance. The campaign opens Sept. 1 and the union is rapidly making engagements in different parts of the State.

—As a result of the Salvation Army campaign at Lake Bluff there were 250 conversions.

—The St. Jean Baptiste Society of the Province of Quebec, whose watchword has always been "Our language, our religion, and our laws," has lately so amended its regulations as to admit Protestants to become members.

—The venerable Daniel A. Payne, D. D., LL.D., of the African church, is to preside over the African Methodist congress to be held in Chicago, Sept. 22-26. Bishops Tanner, Turner, Lee, Ward, and Brown, Drs. Derrick, Coppin, Mitchell, Embury, and Morris, Hon. Fred Douglass, and many other dignitaries of the African churches are to take part in the congress.

—The Friendly Islands fifty years ago had not a native Christian; now there are more than thirty thousand church members, who give from their scanty store $15,000 annually for religious objects. This is none other than a miracle of the Gospel of Christ.

—Four grandsons of Garibaldi, the Italian patriot, have been placed by their father in the Methodist Episcopal Institute in Rome to be educated. The father said in entering them, "I do not want my boys to be taught by the Romanists."

—Another great Presbyterian church, on the corner of Fourth avenue at Thirty-fifth street, New York, which pays its pastor $10,000 a year, is to be pulled down and the congregation is to unite with another great Presbyterian church on the corner of Fifth Ave. and Thirty-seventh street. The property, according to the papers, has been sold for $350,000. This is the third Presbyterian church sold within a year. They aggregate a money value of nearly $1,000,000. Two of them are to try their fortunes "up town," where the money is to be put into magnificent structures. The other drops out of sight.

OBITUARY.

MRS. CATHERINE A. GOODWIN

passed to her rest at Berwyn, Ill., June 8, 1893, aged 77 years. The funeral services were held at the family residence by Rev. C. O. Snyder, pastor of the Riverside Presbyterian church; after which her body was taken to Logansport, Ind., for burial.

Mrs. Goodwin, whose maiden name was McFarland, was born in Frederick county, Maryland, January, 12, 1816. With her parents she moved to Ohio when eleven years old, and in her fourteenth year, at a protracted meeting held by Michael Marley, she was soundly converted and joined the Methodist church. For conscientious reasons she afterwards withdrew from the M. E. church and united with the Presbyterian, in which church she took a most active interest.

For many years she was a constant reader of the Cynosure and heartily endorsed all its attempts at anti-secret reform. She was most radical in her opposition to secret societies, especially Masonry.

For sixty-three years she was a consistent Christian, loving the right in all its forms; and when the Master called her she was willing and ready to obey the summons. M. A. G.

COUNTRY.

A terrible condition of things exists in the counties of Clark, Cherokee, Wilcox, and Marengo, Alabama, where the illicit distillation and sale of liquors, and the counterfeiting of money, have given rise to great excitement. Several crimes have been committed; several men opposed to such practices have been killed. The promoters of these practices are a family named Meacham, and their relatives. The condition has become so aggravated that 500 men have banded together to exterminate the Meachamites.

A circular, dated Chicago, has been sent to labor organizations throughout the country urging the unemployed to move on Congress for relief.

By direction of the Finance Committee Mr. Voorhees introduced in the Senate a bill to repeal the silver purchase clause of the Sherman law.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT

of the Holy Ghost,
BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Sanctification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personality. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Trinity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few opinions:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record:

"This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger:

"Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by perusing it."

..... Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polemical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages. 75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been long called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftentimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appears, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun 'forgive him. Old massar once giv me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer!'"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedmen is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ill., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ill.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far exceeding any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established."

Polo, (Ills.) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townsman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the 'sixties' among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices."

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,

12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-Saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the written word, and preaches with an earnestness born of conviction.

FARM NOTES.

The loss of butter by reason of the annoyance of the cows by flies in the pasture is so much as to suggest the possibility of relieving the cows from this exposure. The protection of the cows by a sheet-strapped over the back and under the belly has been tried with satisfactory results, and, if there were no gain made in the butter product, it would be a gratification to the humane man that the suffering had been avoided. The amount of this suffering, closely approaching torture, may be realized from the fact that a cow on examination was found to have more than one hundred lumps raised by fly bites on her body and legs, and that more than forty of the lumps were bleeding when the cow was brought in from the pasture. There are many kinds of these pestilent insects. Mosquitoes, black flies, the large buzzing flies, whose bite is like the sharp cut of a lancet and causes blood to flow in a stream; the fly that buzzes about the ears, and, lighting, bites and sucks the blood; the bot flies, the greatest terror to all animals; the flesh flies; the stable fly, which accompanies cattle to the pastures and then awaits them on returning from the stable; the gnats, ticks, lice, fleas, all do their share in annoying the farm animals. But most of them are kept at bay by the precaution mentioned, and this long list is given to show the necessity for at least some protection to the patient sufferers.

Mohammedans and the "Mystic Shriners" interchangeably sport the "cross and crescent," as their insignia, and one is quite as allied to Christianity as the other.

DWIGHT L. MOODY.

HIS TESTIMONY AGAINST THE LODGE.

"I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. They are unequally yoked with unbelievers."—Address in Farwell Hall, Chicago.

Since the police persist in arresting street preachers without sufficient cause, it has been deemed advisable, in the interest of free speech, secured to every citizen by the Federal Constitution, to apply to the legal tribunals for redress. This course has resulted in the deliverance and protection of Mrs. Rice. The Salvation Army also seeks redress in this manner for its persecuted workers. Let the agitation continue until the open preaching of a pure Gospel shall not be reckoned a breach of the peace, and every preacher shall be fully protected in his or her vocation.

REV. GEORGE F. PENTECOST.

HIS TESTIMONY AGAINST THE LODGE.

"I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the 'grip' of Masonry and all other secret and un-Christian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Letter to Conference of Christians on Secret Societies, Chicago, 1887.

A "work or bread" parade of unemployed men; riotous conduct in the open street; a collision with the police, several of whom were injured, and the arrest of a number of rioters, were among the incidents of Chicago last Saturday. Result, a municipal order forbidding such parades in future. In New York great strikes were inaugurated last week by alien-born laborers, with the usual excitement, unrest and disorder. Times are "hard," no doubt, but strikes and riots will never make them better. Public and private charity, however, will find a fine field for exercise in the care of the suffering families of these malcontents, who deserve no sympathy.

The warfare waged under the banner of the National Christian Association's exhibit at the World's Fair, against all secret organizations, is productive of many happy results, inasmuch as it is teaching thousands who never before thought of it, what an evil system is that of the lodge. To many it is a revelation of truth that will remain rock-rooted in their memories and in this and other ways our reform is receiving the publicity which it only needs to increase the number of its friends and patrons. The reports of Rev. J. P. Stoddard, regularly printed in each Cynosure, not only possess great interest, but continually confirm the righteousness and need of a reform, like ours, that grapples fearlessly with the iniquity of secrecy and paganism.

Concerning the N. C. A.'s exhibit at the World's Fair, we are pleased to announce that the Board of Directors has re-engaged Rev. J. P. Stoddard to represent the Association and the cause at the booth during another month. In view of his highly satisfactory work in that difficult position, and the many commendations which he and our exhibit are receiving, it is very evident that the action of the Directors will be gratifying to all our friends and patrons.

A CARD FROM BRO. STODDARD.

I do not intend to neglect New England or any part of the field having special claim on my time or services; but I agree with the committee of the Directors in the importance of keeping the exhibit manned at the World's Fair. It is the judgment of the committee that I ought to continue my work for a time, and I have acceded to their request. I do so the more willingly as it gives an opportunity to meet many New Englanders and explain to them the movement centered in Boston. I want to ask the forbearance and prayers of our New England friends until I shall give the order "Go hence" to their fellow laborer.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

NEBRASKA CONFERENCE, SEPTEMBER 1893.

AT WAUSA, NEBRASKA.

An audience of some 1,500 is promised, and that many doors will be opened in surrounding communities.

The Conference will be held in connection with the fall meeting of the Swedish Evangelical Lutherans. There will be an address in Swedish by Rev. N. F. Swanberg, the Moderator of the Lutheran meeting. Rev. William Fenton will represent the anti-secrecy cause in English.

A question-drawer will allow a wide range of topics to be discussed in connection with this reform.

MINNESOTA STATE ANTI SECRECY CONVENTION.

The convention which it was proposed to hold in St. Paul on the 12th and 13th of September HAS BEEN POSTPONED UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.

CHAS. G. FINNEY.

HIS TESTIMONY AGAINST THE LODGE.

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. God demands, and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."—From Pres. Finney's book, "Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," pp. 260, 263.

CONFLICT WITH THE SECRET EMPIRE.

SERMON BY REV. J. M. FOSTER, AT HEBRON CAMP, MASS., AUG. 15, 1893.

Text: "They sacrifice to devils, and not to God."—1 Cor. 10:20. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."—Eph. 5:11.

Satan is the god of this world. The whole world lieth in the wicked one. There has been a world-old and a world-wide conflict between Christ and Satan. The first organized opposition of Satan to Christ's kingdom was when Cain went out from the presence of the Lord and builded a city. In Noah's day this organized rebellion was universal and the world was destroyed by the flood. Next we find Satan's throne set up in Sodom; and it is significantly added that Lot, a just man, "pitched his tent toward Sodom".

I often think that a student at college who joins a Greek-letter fraternity is doing the same thing. For we soon find Lot located in Sodom; and so the student generally goes from the Greek to the worse orders. After this, Satan used the government of Egypt to oppress the people of God. But his instrument was broken when the plagues had desolated the land and the flower of the Egyptian army had been swallowed up in the Red Sea. Later he formed combinations with the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Syrians, Assyrians, Philistines and Ethiopians, to overpower Israel. But his alliances always came to naught. Still later, he used Nebuchadnezzar and the Chaldean empire to deport the chosen people to Babylon. But after seventy years this ended in their peaceable restoration.

When Christ appeared, Rome pagan was mistress of the world, and Satan was supreme. Through this he made war upon the church. "There was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought, and the dragon fought, and his angels; and prevailed not." Paganism went down and Christianity ascended the throne of the Cæsars and occupied "the golden palace," which occupied 200 acres and concerning which Nero remarked, "I am now accommodated like a man". Satan's party was broken up. He was cast out into the earth to organize a new party. Soon after, the papal system arose. Through this "mystery of iniquity" Satan made war upon the saints, chasing them like hunted deer among the Alps and through the Low Countries, until "every mountain became a monument, every valley saw executions, and every village had its roll of martyrs". But when the time came God spoke, and by Martin Luther was the papacy driven back and the kingdom of righteousness started upon a new career.

In 1540 the Society of Jesus was organized, and to-day Jesuitry is an organization as perfect as my hand, the wrist of which is yonder on the Tiber and the fingers are in every nation, manipulating their civil and political institutions.

In 1717 Jesuitry conceived by Satan, her husband, and brought forth Masonry. This order has grown into alarming proportions in England and America. Masonry has given birth to a large family. Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, and the orders whose name is legion, all bear the image of their father, the devil. In Russia Satan has Nihilism; in Germany, Socialism; in Spain, the Black Hand; in China, Highbinders; in Italy, Mafia.

Satan has also several divisions of innocent children, wearing uniforms, plumes, sashes, and carrying pewter swords, and drilling for future usefulness in his army. These are the Orange-men, Sons of Temperance, the G. A. R., the Knights of Labor,—harmless in themselves, but ignorantly training on the wrong side. The "secret empire" is Satan's army to-day.

Organized opposition to the lodge system is of recent date. The first convention was held in Aurora, Ill., in 1867. Rev. J. Blanchard, D.D., was president. The first National Convention was held in Pittsburgh, in 1868. Here the National Christian Association was organized, and they are marching on to Appomattox and the "sour apple tree". There are two great principles upon which they base their movement.

1. The state, as the divinely appointed keeper of the Decalogue, should authoritatively and judicially suppress all open and public violation of the Ten Commandments by the lodge.

The state is not a human device, but a divine institution. It has its necessity in the constitution of our nature and its authority in God's Word. "The powers that be are ordained of God." It is clothed with authority and powers which transcend all human institutions, and so becomes the heaven-ordained and heaven-commissioned agent representing the divine authority among men. Both tables of the law have been committed to the custody and guardianship of the state. Here is the basis of all moral legislation. The Ten Commandments are both a civil code and a spiritual rule of life. In the second sense they belong to the church. The church deals with matters of faith. But in the first sense they belong to the state. And in keeping them the state is "a terror to evil-doers and a praise to them that do well". The first commandment teaches that the being, authority and law of the state come from God. It follows that obedience to just and legal authority is obedience to God. Rebellion against just and legal authority is rebellion against God. Patriotism is not a mere sentiment, but a duty to God. Rebellion is not mere mistaken political sentiment, but resisting the authority of God. "And they that resist shall receive judgment to themselves."

Hence Roman Catholics cannot be loyal citizens, for they acknowledge the Pope's authority above our government. "The Roman church has a right to exercise its authority without any limits set to it by civil power; the Pope and the priests ought to have dominion over temporal affairs; the Roman church and her ecclesiastics have a right to immunity from civil law; in case of conflict between ecclesiastical and civil powers, the ecclesiastical ought to prevail."—Pope Pius IX. THAT IS TREASON. Those holding it ought to be disfranchised, or, if not naturalized, should be refused citizenship. But Masonry is chargeable with the same crime. Mackey's Lexicon, page 8, says: "The Master is supreme in the lodge. Such a thing as an appeal from the Master to the lodge is unknown in Masonry. The power of the Master is supreme." Page 103: "The government of the Grand Lodge is completely despotic: its edicts must be respected, obeyed without examination by its subordinate lodges." THAT IS TREASON. Masons should be dealt with as Roman Catholics.

The second commandment requires the suppression of the open and public practice of idolatry. King Josiah was commended of God because he went through the kingdom of Judah and cut down the groves, broke the images in pieces and burned them. That means that our government should send officers to go through these Roman Catholic cathedrals, pull down the images of Christ, the Virgin Mary and the saints, break down their altars, overturn their burning candles and imprison their mitred priests until they are cured of their devil-worshipping propensity. It means that the government should tear down these Joss houses, burn the idols and forbid the importation of Chinese idolatry to this Christian land. Let the Chinamen come, but prohibit idolatry.

But Masonry is a religion. They have their altar, mutilated Bible and chaplain. Mackey speaks of a Mason as "free from sin by living up to the rules of the order". But they exclude Christ from the lodge. What is worship without Christ? It is sacrificing to devils and not to God. The government should take the broom of the law and sweep these Masonic temples clean of every vestige of devil-worship.

The third commandment requires that the oath be protected against profanation. The Supreme Court of the United States decided that those taking the oaths of the Endowment House in Utah were disqualified for citizenship. In the trial of the Clan-na-Gael for the murder of Dr. Cronin in Chicago, the court decided that their oaths were disloyal and the murderers should be placed behind the bars, although the anarchistic governor of Illinois has pardoned them out. In 1833 the legislature of Vermont passed a law that anyone taking the Masonic oath should be fined $100. In 1839 the fine was increased to $200. New Hampshire and Massachusetts passed a similar law. Daniel Webster said: "All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another and are bound together by secret oaths, are natural sources of jealousy and just alarm to others, and especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under public institutions; and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and justice. Under the influence of this conviction I heartily approve the law lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen, for abolishing all such oaths and obligations."

The horrid imprecations of the lodge oaths, having their throats cut from ear to ear, their bowels torn out, and thrown upon the rough sands of the sea, their bodies burned to ashes and scattered to the four winds of heaven, make them an abomination in the sight of heaven.

The fourth commandment requires the state to prohibit public Sabbath desecration. Jeremiah was required to stand in the gate of Jerusalem and say to the rulers in the land: "Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall bear no burden on the Sabbath." That means that they were to prohibit common labor on Sabbath. Were that message addressed to our President and Congress, the governors and legislatures, it would read: Thus saith the Lord, You shall allow no railroad trains, or U. S. mail service, or Sunday newspapers, on Sabbath-day." But this would include Sunday parades, Sunday picnics, and Sunday excursions by secret orders. What a pity!

The fifth commandment establishes the divine authority of the family, and that parental authority is to be assiduously guarded. But the lodge is the enemy of the home. Think of a man staying out until after 12 o'clock, Monday night, at the Masonic lodge; Tuesday night at the Odd-fellows'; Wednesday night at the Knights of Pythias, etc.! Think of his wife asking him, "If I were to stay from you this late every night, how long would you live with me?" and he replies, with arms folded, head thrown back and eye glittering: "Just about five minutes!" Think of a Mason in all the paraphernalia of a gorgeous uniform, costing $100, and his wife at home wearing a $1.50 calico dress! It costs from $10 to $125 to get into the lodge. For every $2,000,000 distributed in benevolence they spend $3,000,000. That is, it takes $3 to disburse $2. A missionary society that spends more than $5,000 in disbursing $100,000 is extravagant.

The sixth commandment requires the prohibition of murder. The liquor traffic murders 60,000 American citizens every year. A writer says that the 240,000 saloon-keepers in our country are worse than so many cannibals. Lord Chesterfield, that cool-headed statesman, calls them "artists in human slaughter". They are red-handed murderers, and should be punished. But the Masons murdered Wm. Morgan in 1826. In the words of John Quincy Adams, "hundreds were proved to have been accessories to the Morgan murder crimes before and after the fact." Forty-five out of every fifty members left the lodge on this account. The lodge went South and allied itself with slavery. The Southern Confederacy was conceived in the lodge. The "boys in blue" crushed the rebellion. But they were enamored with the lodge and brought it back with them. It has grown to monstrous proportions and is winding its tentacles about the political body. In 1880 the Massachusetts legislature abolished the anti-secret law, and now gives charters to Masonic lodges. Other States do likewise. They may strangle the republic. The head of the monster should be cut off.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Perhaps but few Protestants fully realize the imminent danger from the papacy in this country. To be sure, there is increased agitation everywhere, but it is by no means commensurate with the demands of the hour. The A. P. A., P. S. A., and other rapidly forming organizations indicate an awakening, and mayhap it is none too soon.

Startling rumors are flying. It is charged that Romanism is fast gaining control of our cities; that by some means it is holding vast property and wealth; that it is most persistently pushing for position and power; that it is systematically assailing our public school system; that the Pope has ordered all Catholics to push their way into politics and governmental affairs; that they should pervert and Catholicize our Federal Constitution and all our laws; that the Federal, State and municipal offices are largely in the hands of papists; that the priesthood and auricular confessional are a standing menace to morality, virtue and individual safety; that the secular and spiritual power of Rome is already officially set up in the United States; that the Jesuits and Inquisition are established and in full operation; that Roman Catholics are arming, drilling and threatening death and destruction to all heretics; in a word, we are to have war and blood not many days hence.

What means all this talk and excitement? Can it be that ten millions of papists are assuming control of our free Republic? Will fifty millions of Protestants quietly submit to Catholic dictation and domination? Will the children of the Pilgrims bow to the yoke of the cruel power from which their forefathers fled? Are not all Catholics foreigners, and are these foreigners to rule America? Has popery changed since the days of the martyrs? Does she not breathe the same spirit and practice the same abuses as in the days of Luther and Huss? Shall Protestants organize, arm and prepare for civil upheaval? Does not the very toleration of Romanism mean the destruction of free thought, free speech and free press? Or is all this Protestant imagination? Is there any immediate danger? Are there not ample reasons why Catholicism will not at present resort to arms in her conquest of America, which she claims by right of discovery?

The first reason why Rome will not carry out her threats is her love of wealth. The papal hierarchy is the most covetous, avaricious and greedy element on earth. The nation is crazy for filthy lucre and the Catholics are as mercenary as the rest. Nine-tenths of the Catholics and their wealth is in the cities. To inaugurate war would mean the speedy destruction of the consolidated wealth of Romanism. War means the demoralization of commerce and trade. The breweries, distilleries and factories with other avenues of papal revenue would be destroyed. Ninety per cent of the saloons and doggeries are kept by Catholics. Thrown out of employment, their income cut off, the cities in ashes, out of food and provision, the papal hordes would take to the country to pillage and plunder as they go. And as nine-tenths of the Protestants live in the rural, the great battlefields would begin at city limits. And if Protestants would not fight for their religion they would to the death for their property and their homes. To surrender to Catholics has always meant confiscation of property and death. Civil wars are barbarous but religious wars are more fanatical and mean extermination. Rome has never failed to totally annihilate her conquered Protestant enemies. But are there not other good reasons why Rome does not want war just yet? We will see.

INDIANS AS AMERICAN SOLDIERS.

Rev. Geo. A. Beecher sends from Kearney, Neb., to Mr. Herbert Welsh, secretary of the Indian Rights Association, Philadelphia, Penn., the following interesting report, under date of August 2, 1893:

DEAR SIR:—While I was a student in the Episcopal Seminary at Philadelphia I had the honor of attending some of your lectures on the Indian question.

Soon after my graduation and ordination, in the spring of 1892, I came West and took up work in the western part of Nebraska. One of the interesting features of my work is that connected with the services at Fort Sidney. There are four companies of the 21st Infantry stationed at this post.

Company I is composed of Indians enlisted from the Brule and Yankton agencies, South Dakota. Lieut. Seay, 2nd Lieut. of the 21st Infantry, is in command of this company. It is of these men that I wish to speak to you.

There has been, of late, much dissatisfaction expressed in the newspapers and army journals about the Indian soldiers; and there is a report that the Indian companies will all be discharged. I take this opportunity to express my own idea in regard to this measure, in the hope that it may concur with you in taking some steps to prevent, if possible, the issuing of such orders from headquarters.

I have known the Indians in Company I for one year. I became acquainted with them principally from holding services with them, but also through frequent visits to their quarters with Mr. Seay. In all my dealings with these Indians I have been a close observer and a careful student of the details in their new life as soldiers. I believe their present condition to be far better than any in which they have been placed before. They are all perfectly contented in their new life; and now the company reports for the past year show plainly that they are making remarkable progress. Their quarters are as neat and clean as any of the white men; in person each soldier is as tidy as can be. He takes pride in everything he does when the merits of the deed are based upon the principles or true qualities of a soldier; he is proud of his uniform, and is more than willing to give up his striped blanket and bear the flag. It may be unnecessary for me to tell you any of these things, but I do not know that you have seen the Indian as a soldier. You know of what he is capable, and I have learned that he can become a good man, a good citizen, a good Christian, if the proper steps are taken to aid him to this plane of living. The army provides for him proper food and compels him to be regular in all his habits. A proper diet and certain regulations in regard to his personal cleanliness are two very important steps which the army affords for the civilization of the Indian. In this first step toward civilization he gains a certain amount of self-respect and a desire to be more like the "good" white man. As a soldier he is obedient to the minutest detail.

Mr. Seay, the commanding officer of this company, is thoroughly fitted for his position. If the commanding officers of the other Indian companies were as thoroughly devoted to their work and to the cultivation of the individual men of their companies as Lieut. Seay, I am sure there would be no orders from headquarters to discharge Indian companies. There was an attempt made last winter, by some man who claims to be a missionary among the Indians in South Dakota, to secure the discharge of certain Indians in Company I. A petition was sent to the headquarters (signed?) by members of the company who never saw the petition. When the matter was made known to the men whose names were signed to this paper they all said they wanted to remain in the army and knew nothing of such a petition.

Drinking and drunkenness is not more common among the Indians than among the whites.

I am confident that if the companies now enlisted are given the same amount of drill and individual training as the white man, there can be no question as to the result. The Indian wants to become civilized, and I feel that there is no better way to civilize the Indian than by making a soldier of him. If these men are turned back to roam about their reservation, they will become discontented, and there is no telling what may result from such a measure.

Before closing allow me to make one request of you: If you cannot exercise some influence in having all the companies of Indians retained, please make a special effort for Company I of the 21st Infantry at Fort Sidney. I feel that it comes within the range of my duties to do all I can for the uplifting and bettering the condition of the Indian.

Please let me hear from you and state in your reply just what you think in regard to the army. Most sincerely yours,

GEORGE A. BEECHER, Chaplain.

OUR CITY EVANGELISTIC SERVICES.

Mr. Moody is pushing the Gospel campaign with great vigor. He has now five tents in which meetings are held every night. At four other places, either churches or halls, revival services are also held on most of the evenings of the week. All of these services are remarkably well attended, some of them by more people than can be seated. Inquirers respond readily to the appeals, and every night quite a number seem to be brought to a wise decision to lead a Christian life.

The meetings on the West Side have showed a decided advance in interest on the part of the people. The Haymarket Theater was crowded to its utmost capacity on last Sunday morning, and the Empire Theater was very nearly full at the same time. This latter theater was packed Sunday afternoon and night and many inquirers tarried for conversation. Tuesday afternoon this theater was very full at the special meeting for prayer. There was no preaching, no exhortation, but the whole hour given to pouring out the heart for the fullness of the Spirit to come upon believers, and for the conversion of the unsaved, for whom many petitions were presented. At night Mr. Moody preached on "The Prodigal" to a crowded house. A very large number of men were present, many of them able to appreciate the story from their own personal experience. The Gospel net which Mr. Moody cast into the deep came back quite full, and of all sorts of fish. Skeptics, infidels, backsliders abounded; and a number of habitual and hard drinkers expressed a desire to be freed from their chains. On the whole, Mr. Moody feels greatly gratified at the success of these efforts to reach the people with the Gospel. He has said repeatedly that if only Christian people would pour out their hearts in prayer, and lay hold of their opportunities for Christian work, we should see such a revival as our city has never experienced. Let us respond to the appeal and as much as lies in us seek to push the good work on. Let us attend such of the week-night meetings as we can, and help in the work with inquirers. Above all, let us continually remember the meetings in prayer. Here will lie the real secret of any success realized and the measure of its largeness. This is the hour of unusual opportunity for us. Not only are there inquirers to be helped into the light, but they are from every part of our land, and from other lands also. This has been a most noticeable feature of all the after-meetings. If now we can by prayer and testimony bring these strangers to the knowledge of the Gospel, this gathering together of people from all parts of our land, and from beyond the seas, may prove a veritable Pentecost. And these pilgrims, like those of that early day, may go to their homes to tell the "wonderful works of God," and it may be to kindle the fires of revival in scores and hundreds of churches. Mr. Moody believes that if Christian people are only faithful now this country will have such a blessing as it has never seen. God grant that his hope may be realized.—Rev. Edw. P. Goodwin, in Our Greeting.

THE PRIBOLOV ISLANDS.

These adjuncts of our Alaskan territory, whose name is sometimes misspelled Pryboloff, are just now the center of new interest in connection with the recent Behring Sea arbitration. They also form the subject of a richly illustrated article in Worthington's Magazine for September. It is from the pen of Joseph Stanley-Brown (formerly secretary to Pres. Garfield), who, in the interest of the United States government, spent many months at the islands, which are the home of the seal during at least half the year. These isolated, rock-bound, fog-drenched islands are the seals' chosen resort, and a necessity to their existence. To them they return with unerring certainty from their winter pilgrimage, completing one of the most extraordinary migratory circles known in the animal kingdom. Upon these little islands, which, since the purchase of Alaska in 1867, have yielded no less than $10,000,000 to the United States treasury, the writer studied the habits and family life of the seal and the methods of selecting and despatching the "killable" animals, convincing himself and his readers of the evils of pelagic sealing, which by its indiscriminate and wasteful slaughter is calculated to deplete the herds, until the islands of the Behring Sea shall be as barren of seals as are those of the Antarctic Ocean. Both Great Britain and the United States will find here a fine field for the practice of commendable humanity.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPALIAN MASSES.

The Catholic Champion reports something like a hundred places in the country "in which there is a daily mass". It might be imagined that The Catholic Champion is a Roman Catholic paper. It is not, but a Protestant Episcopal paper; and there are Protestant Episcopal churches, hospitals and schools in which a daily mass is said; fourteen of them in New York, eight in Philadelphia, six each in Newark and Chicago, five in Baltimore, and four in Phillips Brookes' city.—Christian Guardian.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An August storm.—The death of a mother in Israel.—A Romish miracle in Beverly, Mass.—Some problems arising from "hard times."—The endowment orders.

New England is now experiencing one of those chilly and protracted storms of wind and rain which at first strike us as unseasonable. It seems an anomaly,—this steady weeping of steely-gray skies, and sobbing moan of east winds falling into the matured ripeness and bloom of summer. And then we remember, with a sudden start, how long it is since the roses went; and, after all, such a Euroclydon in August is not a very exceptional thing, as the records of past seasons show. But it is like some great sorrow which comes into a human life when it is just passing its glowing meridian;—peace will succeed the storm, and yet there will always be a subtle, unexplainable difference. It will never be quite the same again. And so we shall have days royal with sunshine, whose garments are purple with the blood of grapes, and whose breath as it comes wafted over the hills is a very elixir of life, but they will never be just like the days that went before. Yet is not the season of fulfillment better than that of mere aspiration? And sweet as is the time of seed-sowing, with the sweetness that can never come but once, can it weigh for an instant against the joy of harvest home?

"Better a death when work is done, than earth's most favored birth," sings George Macdonald, and this may well be said of the recent death of Mrs. E. B. C. Washburn, the lifelong friend of the Blanchards, as well as of the cause to which they gave their lives. On Jan. 23, 1812, that famous but shadowed year in American history—in the town of Hallowell, Maine, she first saw the light; and on Sabbath morning, August 12, she passed away at the old family residence in Worcester, where she had so long resided with her brother, Rev. Henry T. Cheever. She was the third of the seven sons and daughters of Nathaniel Cheever and Charlotte Barrell, and a worthy worthy sister of the veteran Dr. Geo. B. Cheever who was put in jail just for writing "Dea. Giles's Distillery"—perhaps the most remarkable production which the anti-saloon war, with all its tons of literature, has yet produced. We hear a great deal about heredity nowadays, but in those primitive times this doctrine was not so much talked of as it was quietly illustrated in homes of New England, where the heroes and heroines of many a moral battlefield yet to come were being brought up on the regimen of "plain living and high thinking." It was not strange that Mrs. Washburn was ever, from the days of her early womanhood, a warm sympathizer in all those lines of reform in which her brothers took so active a part:—antislavery, temperance, and, last but not least, the warfare against the lodge.

"Of homespun gowns and manners, and noon-marks on the floor,"

As the co-administrator of the large estate left by her husband, Dea. Ichabod Washburn, she showed such executive ability and soundness of judgment that threatened litigation was avoided, to the great advantage of the various benevolences, public and individual, for which his will made provision. A long and beautiful life, active to its very sunset—until the stroke of paralysis on June 22d, from which she never recovered, she could thread her needle and read fine print without her glasses—has ended, and all that made it so sympathetic and helpful are among "the treasures of memory." Her deep interest in the Worcester campaign for no-license, and her grief at Sunday opening by the World's Fair managers, showed how near to her heart, even to the last, was everything that concerned her Redeemer's kingdom, and gives peculiar point and pith to these words from her bereaved brother, Rev. Henry T. Cheever: "It is plain now that until women like Mrs. Washburn are allowed the franchise by law, the millennium of temperance and morality cannot come."

A Roman Catholic miracle in Beverly (Mass.) is just now taking up more space in the papers than they have ever seemed willing to devote to any Protestant case of divine healing, no matter how marvelous or well-attested. It was a case of paralysis resulting from fever, and not of long-standing,—only between three and four months, both of which circumstances rather discount from "the miracle." The prayer for recovery was made to St. Ann. Thus a Romish saint gets all the credit, and He in whose name every miracle was wrought which is recorded between the lids of the New Testament, none!

One of the effects of the hard times in Boston is to keep the recruiting officers for the army and navy exceptionally busy. Many men are thrown out of work by the closing of the mills and factories, and accept Uncle Sam's service as better than to go to the workhouse, or join the great army of tramps. They are said to be a much superior class to the trash who seek to enlist in time of prosperity, both morally and in bodily physique. It is a pity that these men should feel obliged to take a step which it is certain many of them will look back upon with regret. Americans, and the better class of foreigners are too independent and self-respecting to like the restraints imposed upon them by army life, or to choose it unless forced in by untoward circumstances. Another question which naturally arises is, Why is it almost an impossibility for farmers in the country to obtain help while these able-bodied men loiter about the streets, "because no man hath hired us?" A letter from New Hampshire to the Springfield Republican tells of a farmer, seventy years old, who has been obliged to do all his haying with the sole assistance of a man of 83. I could match this case by one nearer home. A passion for herding in the cities and large towns, and an inveterate dislike to the country, is one of the peculiar and perverse phases of human nature which has to be taken account of in dealing with the labor question. For the same reason country housekeepers have to do their own work. Every woman willing to engage in domestic service, almost without exception, prefers the city. It is one of the stubborn facts which stand in the way of ameliorating the condition of the city poor, that they themselves are not more anxious for it. The slums exist, not entirely because of the greed of tenement-house owners, but because there is a large and increasing class who seem to prefer to live in the slums, and would actually choose its vilest smells and hardest medley of noises to a robin's song in the elm, or the odor of fresh-mown hay on a June morning. I should consider this hardly believable if personal observations had not led me to this conclusion, which sounds uncharitable but is only truth.

Speaking of the money stringency, is it not strange that the laws which govern a thing in daily use by everybody, and which stand in the most intimate relations to our happiness and comfort, should be so little understood? The papers talk wisely, but I think very few people who read those learned editorials see through the muddle.

There is over $300,000 in the State treasury awaiting members of endowment orders, but it is not the fault of the receivers, for the "supreme grand" officials have taken care to keep the books in such a wretched condition that it would take a wizard to straighten them out, and know exactly the condition of the corporations. One of the mysteries about ordinary life-insurance is that it discriminates between men and women to the prejudice of the latter. The old tradition that a woman is not presumed to be self-supporting, and so in need of any such help, still clings about her; yet why they should decline to take risks on the sex least liable to accident, is, as I said, one of the unexplainable things, though perhaps it does explain, in some measure, why workingwomen embarked so eagerly in the bogus endowment orders, which roped in all without discrimination of age or sex.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 23, 1893.

Congress is apparently working towards a solution of the vexatious financial problem, although the end is not yet in sight. Senator Voorhees, whose position as chairman of the Senate committee on Finance gives his opinions additional weight, made a long speech yesterday, which was listened to by nearly all the Senators, and by as large a crowd of outsiders as could be very well packed into the galleries. The Senator, although what is popularly known as a "silver man," favors the immediate and unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the present silver law.

The House will vote on this question next Monday.

Speaker Crisp having this week announced the committees, the House is now ready to proceed with general legislation as soon as the silver question is out of the way. The first bill passed by the House was that admitting, free of duty, all articles from foreign countries intended for exhibition at the proposed California mid-winter international exposition. The bill had previously passed the Senate, and now only needs the President's signature to become a law. By unanimous consent of the House, Representative Johnson, of Ohio, was yesterday allowed to introduce a bill providing for the exchange of U. S. bonds for treasury notes, and the bill was referred to the committee on Banking and Currency, of which Representative Springer, of Illinois, is the chairman, with leave to report at any time after the vote on the bill for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the silver law has been taken. This bill has been widely discussed here, and many regard it as a good and wise measure. Under it any holder of U. S. bonds may deposit those bonds with the government and receive their face value in treasury notes, which may at any time be returned and the bonds be again obtained, the payment for the accommodation being the interest on the bonds, which shall cease so long as they remain in possession of the government. The House also passed, by unanimous consent, a joint resolution extending to the Cherokee outlet, which, in accordance with the President's proclamation, yesterday made public, is to be opened to settlement on September 16 next, the provisions of the act providing for town-site entries of land in Oklahoma.

U. S. Minister Blount arrived in Washington yesterday, direct from Hawaii. He had a long conference with Secretary Gresham, and it is expected that as soon as President Cleveland returns, which will be in about ten days, a new Hawaiian treaty will be submitted to the Senate.

It has for many years been contended that Washington city officials were, as a rule, controlled by the rumsellers, and the contention is constantly being borne out by the action of some of those officials. The last public occasion was during a somewhat remarkable trial, a few days ago. A police sergeant raided the grocery store of a notorious character who was well known to be engaged in selling liquor without a license, and arrested the proprietor and several members of his family, besides seizing a quantity of liquors. When the case came to trial a stranger would have supposed that it was the police sergeant, and not the rumseller, who was being tried. He was accused of being a temperance man, and with belonging to an organization which was opposed to the liquor traffic, and when he admitted the accusation, the whisky lawyer said the testimony of such a man was not worthy of belief, and introduced a police lieutenant to swear that he would not believe the sergeant on oath. Right there is where the plot came in. This same sergeant was under that lieutenant last Inauguration day, and preferred charges against him for being intoxicated while on duty, and, what is more, he proved them, although the authorities dismissed the charges, and the sergeant was transferred to another precinct, and given a hint that he had better not make any similar charges in future. This matter may not seem important to the average reader, but it is of the most vital importance to every man and woman who has the future welfare of the country in view. It involves a great principle, one which many try to ignore, but which has got to be faced sooner or later by us all. The city of Washington is the capital of the United States—your capital, reader, as well as mine; and if the liquor men are allowed to control officials, high or low, here, there will come a time when they will control them everywhere. The trouble is that people who do not investigate the matter fail to realize the full extent of the cursed liquor power, and by their indifference really aid the rumseller in extending that power.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion."

REFORM NEWS.

THE PACIFIC COAST CONVENTION.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Pacific Coast Association, opposed to secret societies, met in its second annual session at Canby, Ore., August 15, 1893.

The attendance was not quite as large as last year, owing, first, to its being mid-harvest, which means a great deal here, engrossing all the time and energies of farmers; secondly, to the stringency of money matters, as indicated by the numerous letters received; thirdly, because each person was expected to pay his own way this year, which was not the case in 1892.

Notwithstanding the decrease in numbers at the convention, the increase in enthusiasm more than atoned for it. The interest, especially in the afternoon and evening, was intense.

President Mathew presided.

The forenoon was devoted largely to prohibition. Very excellent addresses were delivered by Revs. Messrs. W. I. Gardner, of Canby, and J. N. Dennison, D.D., of Portland. These were masterly efforts, showing clearly that the only consistent position for a spiritual Christian to take is that of "legal prohibition".

Father Mathew followed with an earnest and able address on the lodge, showing it to be a most potent agency in advancing the saloon interests.

Luncheon was served on the camp ground.

At 1:30 P. M. the convention again assembled and proceeded to elect officers for the ensuing year, as per constitution. The election resulted as follows: President, Bishop Wm. Dillon, D.D., Salem, Ore.; vice-president, Rev. Samuel Mathew, Canby, Ore.; secretary, Rev. P. B. Williams, Philomath, Ore.; treasurer, Samuel Terry, Canby, Ore.

Bishop Dillon will remove to Salem early in October and will add great strength to our cause.

Philomath was chosen as the place for holding the next annual convention; and in order to get out of the way of harvest, the fourth Tuesday and Wednesday in September, 1894, were appointed the place and date.

The convention adjourned in a body at 2:00 P. M., to attend the funeral of an aged sister, who died, as she had lived, a faithful Christian.

Prof. L. B. Baldwin arrived on the afternoon train from Salem. He conducted the song services, presiding at the organ and adding great interest to the convention.

During the afternoon and evening sessions telling addresses were made against the lodge, embracing almost every phase of the question, by the following: Messrs. Mathew, Wyatt, Organ, Watson, Morgan, Baldwin, McLain, Mrs. Organ, Ridgeway, Franklin, McKensie and Williams.

Bros. Organ and Watson gave their experience while Odd-fellows. Both, in a most conscientious manner, left because they could not endure it longer as Christians—one for being refused the name of Christ in the prayer; the other, while being installed as High Priest in the Encampment. In this way both got the load which drove the institution from them forever, and sent them out as bright lights against the darkness of organized secrecy.

Among the ministers in attendance were: S. Mathew, J. N. Dennison, D.D., W. J. Gardner, T. H. Organ, H. C. Morgan, John Watson, H. B. Ridgeway, Arvilda Organ, A. Wiles, W. H. McLain, A. Ernst, and P. B. Williams, representing the following denominations: Methodist Episcopal, Wesleyan Methodist, Free Methodist, Evangelical Association, and United Brethren in Christ (Old Constitution). Lay members were present and gave their support to the convention from the Baptist, Christian and Presbyterian churches, in addition to those named.

It amounts to something to see such very promising young men as Prof. Baldwin, C. H. Merryman, and W. H. McLain, standing with us in the very front rank of this reform movement. We greatly revere the aged reformers, like Fathers Mathew and Loggan, and are glad, as young men, to be associated with them in this noble work.

There were encouraging letters read from a host of men and women who could not attend. We shall give your readers, in the future, some extracts from these which we think will be of interest.

The Association unanimously voted to allow Rev. J. C. Scott to lecture in Washington, as opportunity offers, against the lodge, in the name of this Association.

The constitution was changed so as to read: "All secret societies," instead of "All oath-bound" secret societies. This puts us, as an association, squarely against the whole brood, which is the only consistent position to take.

The lecturer for the Association reported fifty-eight addresses on Moral Reform, besides a number of other discourses preached during two and one-half months.

Now, we ask for, and must have, help from some source to carry forward our plans for the future, or we fail. Father Mathew cannot bear the whole burden. P. B. WILLIAMS.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

If it is true that "Politics makes strange bed-fellows," it is even more evident in lodge relations. While it would be unfair to hold the more sensible and candid member responsible for the utterances of his "hot-headed" brother, it is perfectly fair to test the claims of both the conservatist and the enthusiast by the law and teachings of the system to which they adhere. It seems a marvelous inconsistency for men who profess Christianity to join with scoffers of the Bible and traducers of Christ in defending an order that rejects both the Word and the Son of God. In my present work this unholy alliance is a painful fact that I am compelled often to witness.

An Odd-fellow, having examined the expose of his order, threw it violently upon the table and with an oath exclaimed, "The scoundrel who wrote that book, whoever he was, ought to be hung." When asked if he approved of the secret lodges trying, condemning and executing the penalty of death upon offenders without reference to civil tribunals, he replied: "Most certainly I do; any man who would violate his obligation to keep the secrets of an order ought to die." I suggested that such a course might bring a conflict between the lodge and the civil authorities; to which he replied: "The highest tribunal in our land has decided that the oaths of an organized body of men are binding." I suggested, again, that such a multiplication of oaths might lead to complications in our courts and serious confusion in society. He still insisted that the secret obligation must prevail.

Not long after, another member of the order, who named the church to which he belonged, looked over the same book. When interrogated, he would neither deny nor affirm its correctness. He said that the order numbered ministers and eminent men in its membership, and if a man lived up to its laws and teachings, he would be a good man and put the church to shame by its benevolence, etc. He admitted, after parrying my questions for a time, that Christ was excluded to placate the animosity of Jewish and other unbelievers in the atonement, and attempted to justify the omission in the interest of a "broad-gauge religion," ignoring all narrow and bigoted views.

Looking at the claims of these two men, we see the first superseding constitutional law and putting the "Star-Chamber" decision above the civil tribunal, and the second, rejecting Christ at the behest of his enemies, and leaving the poor "cowans" without protection by civil authority in this world and without a "daysman" in the world beyond. Certainly these men could not have pondered the words of Paul, in the 13th of Romans: "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers," or Christ's declaration (Matt. 10:33): "Whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven."

A member from Boston made some damaging admissions about the despotic government of the I. O. O. F. system. Finding his claim to its benevolence untenable, he took refuge in the insurance feature of his order. Finding this unsatisfactory, he again betook himself to the plea of feeding the orphan and drying the widows' tears. When asked by what authority they carried on their work in Boston, he replied: "By authority of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the World." I asked, "Has the Sovereign Grand Lodge given you authority to act outside of your own membership and their relatives, AS A LODGE, in your relief work; or are your authorized benefactions officially and lawfully bestowed only in your own household?" He said truly, "Only such as have complied with our laws are legally entitled to help from our funds." To make sure of the fact, I inquired: "Could your lodge in Boston meet in a regular or special session and as a lodge vote to appropriate lodge funds in aid of those who had no connection with your order?" "No," was his prompt response; "it would be a misappropriation of funds," etc. I asked again, "What would be necessary to make an appropriation to an outsider legal in the eyes of your law?" "It would require the sanction of the Sovereign Grand Lodge," was his reply—a declaration showing the despotism and the un-Christ-like character of the order, and giving the lie to all its pretended charity.

A volume of incidents occurring during the week might be written, but one wearies of such heartless, selfish and puerile boasting, which is endurable only in the hope that the many who thoughtfully listen may receive "a word in due season," and that some may be won from these terrible delusions to Christ.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

have been well represented at our exhibit during the week, and conversations with an elderly lady from Ireland and three gentlemen from Scotland specially interested me.

A large reinforcement of friends has been especially gratifying, all of whom have my thanks for encouragement and assistance. I trust the work will go on, and that there will be no flagging of the interest in the hands of whosoever the Lord shall choose to "drive the battle on" to the close of the Fair.

TRUE AND FALSE RELIGIONS.

Many pass the N. C. A. exhibit without saying a word; some without even noticing the faces or mottoes on the walls. A single remark from others, and the reception of a tract, closes the brief interview, never to be repeated until the judgment day. Those who linger for a better acquaintance are far from being of "one mind,"

CORRESPONDENCE.

"MYSTERY" IN LODGERY AND POPEY.

ROGERS PARK, Ill., August 21, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The late distinguished and talented Archbishop Whately of Dublin wrote thus on "Vicarious Religion," which some of our readers will no doubt apply to Freemasonry or lodgery generally, as well as popery—the competitors for that supremacy over mankind to which the risen Lord Jesus Christ alone has the rightful claim. He says: "It is very important to observe that in all passages (of Scripture)—and they are numerous—to which he applies the word mystery to the Christian faith, or to any part of it, the circumstance to which he is directing the reader's attention is not the concealment but the disclosure of the mystery . . . Truths formerly unknown by men's unaided powers, he speaks of now as no longer concealed, except from those who willfully shut their eyes against the light of divine revelation. . . The apostle draws attention to the revealed portion of the divine dispensations . . . in manifest allusion to the mysteries of the ancient pagan religions with which he contrasts Christianity; inasmuch as in this last there was not, as among the pagans, a distinction between the initiated and the uninitiated; a revelation to some of the worshipers of certain holy secrets from which the rest were excluded." (How applicable is this description of pagan mysteries and their holy secrets to Freemasonry, from which those in the lower degrees are excluded!). . . "But the great mysteries of the Christian faith were made known . . . to all alike—Jew or Gentile—who were but willing to embrace the truth. . . There was not one system of religion for a certain favored few, and another for the mass of believers; but the mystery of godliness was made accessible, gradually indeed, in proportion as they were able to bear it, but universally. To all Christ's disciples it was 'given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven.' There was 'one Lord, one faith, one baptism,' and (though with diversity of gifts) one and the same Spirit, sanctifying the church, and dwelling in all its members. The opposite system to this—that of recognizing different degrees of access to the Deity, and of keeping certain sacred rites and holy secrets confined to a few, and set apart from the multitude, is one of the characteristics of natural religion; by which expression I mean not what is commonly, though improperly, so called, but such a religious system as men naturally fall into when left to themselves."

The learned Archbishop charges Romanism with fostering the corruptions described; but readers will be equally ready to charge Freemasonry and its allies with the like corruptions. He says: "The . . . profane speculations of scholastic theologians ('not all of them members of the Romish church') which are extant, afford a melancholy specimen of the fruits of this mistake as to the Christian mysteries, 'this corruption from the simplicity that is in Christ.'"

The volume from which we have taken the above was published in 1864; and in our United States, to-day, as well as in the United Kingdom, the invasion and consequent increasing corruption of Protestant churches by lodgery makes the references to paganism in a great degree as applicable to such churches and members as to popery itself.

Rome has but lately begun to cultivate popular political favor, and considers, as she ever has done, that States and nations should be her servants. She is acquiring great wealth by her political power and would delight to receive support from national taxes.

Are the American people willing to have it so? in fact, to change the Constitution of the country?

JNO. G. WOOLLEY'S ILLINOIS TEMPERANCE CAMPAIGN.

ILLINOIS CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION, TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

99 WASHINGTON ST., CHICAGO, }
August 19, 1893. }

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Christian Endeavor Temperance campaign seems to have struck a popular chord in the hearts of the young people of this State.

We have received already a large number of requests for Mr. Woolley's services. These have come from all parts of the State.

Mr. Woolley is to speak Sunday evening, September 3, and Tuesday evening, September 5, at Evanston. Monday morning, September 4, he will deliver an address before the ministers at the First Methodist church, this city, and in the evening of the same day he will lecture at Oak Park. The entire month of September will be spent in Northern Illinois. From the present outlook there will be a splendid uprising in all our churches on temperance lines during the coming fall.

We enclose a copy of our battle hymn and also a copy of Mr. Woolley's letter to the young people. Very sincerely,

E. D. WHELOCK, Superintendent.

MR. WOOLLEY'S LETTER.

REST ISLAND, Minn., Aug. 1, 1893.
To the Christian Young People of Illinois:

DEAR FRIENDS:—I never meant to be a lecturer for money, and have gladly given nearly six years, asking no pay. But now it seems I must; for having undertaken a great enterprise of help to fallen men, and so incurred a heavy liability, it surely seems the will of Him we serve that I should pay the debt, and I am confident the work itself is of His planning.

So I have authorized the friends who send you this to make appointments for me in your State on terms that will in time lift Rest Island's burden and free my hands and head and heart for wider labors also pressing.

If this tour among you and in your name shall realize a considerable sum of money—which may God grant—I want you to know that all of it except a decent frugal living for myself and mine will go, without reserve, to the Rest Island Mission.

I am so glad the wonderful campaign these friends propose is laid in Illinois, for it was in her saloons my light went out and in her soil my parents laid them down in sorrow, years ago. Greetings in Jesus' name, JNO. G. WOOLLEY.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 31, 1893.

THE WORLD'S CONGRESS, NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

OCTOBER 5TH, AT 2 AND 7:30 P. M.

We are now planning for the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies. It will be held, God willing, in the Fine Art Building, Lake Front, Chicago, October 5. The sessions will be at 2 and 7:30 p. m. Papers are promised by Rev. Joseph Cook, Rev. H. L. Kellogg, Bishop H. J. Becker, and Rev. M. A. Gault. Other gentlemen will be on the program, and there will be opportunity for others interested to speak. This will probably be the most representative gathering held on this subject for years, and all our readers should plan to attend. The program will be announced in the near future.

FINANCIAL.

The present paper contains a statement of money donated since the annual meeting in June. While this amount has not equalled the expenses of the Association, yet we are very grateful to our God for what his children have done in these "stringent" times.

We shall go forward, trusting that the next two months will not only find your gifts equalling the necessities of the work, but allowing the payment of the debts of the Association.

The Lord put it into the heart of one man to have Bro. Phillips, our General Secretary, write his will, which provides some hundreds of dollars for the future.

Others are corresponding about the matter. It will cost you but little to write, and it may be the means of doing much good.

You will read with interest of the Oregon Convention, just closed.

In another week we hope to have a report from the Nebraska Conference.

The blessing of God is resting continually on the labors of W. B. Stoddard in New England, while his father is delivering, on an average, four or five addresses per day at the World's Fair, that reach the uttermost parts of the earth.

Notwithstanding the "stringent times," take it all in all, it is a season of blessing. God be praised!

This article is headed financial, and so it closes with the thought that we may each be partakers of the blessing, being co-workers, by furnishing funds for carrying on the work as God has prospered us.

DR. LORIMER MISQUOTES SCRIPTURE.

That Freemasonry is Gentile or devil-worship has often been demonstrated in the Cynosure with mathematical certainty. That this institution makes use of the Scriptures in the same way that Satan did in his temptation of Christ and for a similar purpose has also been clearly shown, and that such use must inevitably destroy reverence for the Word of God in Masonic devotees is equally certain. The fact that Masonic preachers often get lodge legends so mixed up with Bible truth that they are unable to accurately quote either the words or teachings of Scripture, has often been remarked. Nor are those misquotations always intentional, as is very clearly shown by the following quotation from Dr. Lorimer, formerly of this city, but now of Tremont Temple, Boston, which is taken from the Union Signal of August 10th:

When Jesus took the piece of money from the fish's mouth he asked, Whose image and superscription are these? Like coins, Christians are in circulation in the world, and the only question it asks of them is, Whose image and superscription do ye bear? "Ye [are] epistles known and read of all men," and whether you will or not, the only confession of faith the world wants of the church is the disciples it sends out. It will not ask whether a church believes in vicarious atonement when it sees its disciples, the pastor, the pew-holder and Sunday-school superintendent, vicariously sacrificing themselves day by day for the sins and sufferings of others.—Dr. Lorimer of Tremont Temple.

Christ not only did not take the money from the mouth of the fish, but evidently was not present when Peter by divine command went "to the sea and cast a hook," caught the fish, and, taking the piece of money, paid it as tribute money for Christ and himself, to save giving needless offense to the Romans. See Matthew 17:24-27.

The account of Christ's asking the Pharisees: "Whose is this image and superscription?" when one of them, at Christ's command, "Shew me the tribute money," held up a penny, is given in Matthew 22:17-21.

That this doctor of divinity should be so unfamiliar with the simple narratives of the New Testament, must seem astonishing indeed to those unaware of the fact that Dr. Lorimer is a 33-degree Freemason and has himself blasphemously assumed many titles belonging exclusively to the Deity, such as Prince of Mercy, Most Puissant, Worshipful Master, Perfect Master, etc.

Dr. Lorimer may not have intended to cast a slur on the doctrine of the vicarious atonement of Christ in this quotation; but we cannot see how any one can overlook the fact that this atoning work is belittled by comparing the work of pastor, Sunday-school officer, or teacher therewith.

Errors in the life breed errors in the brain,
And those reciprocally those again.

"ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS."

A mass convention of Royal and Select Masters of Illinois will be convened in the city of Peoria, Sept. 5, continuing two days. P. M. Ill. Comp. Warville has consented to read a paper before the convention, entitled, "The Genesis of the Degree of Royal Master." The several degrees of the rite will be conferred upon actual candidates.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, article "Royal Master," describes this Council degree as "by no means of ancient origin, intimately connected with the degree of Select Master, and with it explanatory of the Royal Arch degree;" also, that it is "sometimes conferred on Royal Arch Masons by a distinct and independent body called 'A Council of Royal and Select Masters.'"

The Select Master degree is described as the ninth in the American Rite of Freemasonry. (Both the Royal Masters' and Select Masters' degrees are fully exposed in "Knight Templarism Illustrated," which is sold at this office.) Secrecy, silence and darkness are its characteristics. It is filled with lying statements about the power of the heathen gods, about the name of God giving Saul and David wisdom, and fabulous traditions concerning the finding of immense treasures by Solomon, the death of Hiram Abiff, and other Masonic "history."

The obligation of the Royal Master binds him to the degree under a penalty of being burned alive. The Select Master submits him to have his eyes torn from their sockets, his hands chopped off, his body quartered and thrown among the rubbish of the temple, if he ever dares to reveal the trumpery secrets of this degree.

There is unequivocal Masonic authority (Mackey's Ritualist, pp. 508 and 515) that Freemasonry, through the Royal Master's degree, proposes to give its members eternal life, without Christ; and Mackey also gives us to understand that the Select Master's degree is still more potent in the work of Masonic salvation. See Mackey's Ritualist, p. 549.

In a degree-conferring council like that which is to meet at Peoria next month, no less than nine, nor more than twenty-seven, Royal Masters can work together. If more members of either degree are present, they can take no part in the ceremonies.

In Masonry these degrees are considered "great, grand and glorious." Christians will find them blasphemous and insignificant beyond their purpose of revealing Freemasonry, as it is, a mighty poor religion.

PERSECUTING WOMEN EVANGELISTS.

Mrs. Justin Rice, whose husband is serving a 65 days' incarceration in the city bridewell for "obstructing the public streets," by preaching the Gospel, has been frequently arrested by the police, both before and since Mr. Rice's imprisonment, for the same offense.

On a recent occasion, at the corner of Madison and Peoria streets, while speaking to fifty persons, she was arrested and carried to the police station, from which, after two hours of detention she was released on her own cognizance. In explanation she said she had not enough people in her audience to obstruct the streets, while a patent medicine man who had a large crowd on another corner was not molested.

There has been, in these arrests of Mr. and Mrs. Rice, a very apparent discrimination against the Gospel, for when Mrs. Rice applied at the DesPlaines street station for protection in her work, she was laughed at and ordered to "get out."

Although her husband is locked up, and these interruptions are to her very annoying, Mrs. Rice maintains a calm, Christian courage which has enlisted warm friends in her behalf. Among others, the Free Speech League has espoused her cause, and calls upon all liberty-loving citizens to join it in restoring to these evangelists the rights given to them by our forefathers. By its help it is probable that they will be relieved from the spite-work which oppresses them.

But Mrs. Rice is not the only woman evangelist that has fallen into the hands of the police for preaching in the streets of Chicago. On a recent evening one of the Salvation Army women, Mrs. Captain Peterson, was arrested, with her lieutenant, for conducting an open-air meeting on Thirty-ninth street. The patrol wagon was called to take herself and the lieutenant to the police station, at Forty-third and Halsted streets. On the way to the station the officers having them in charge, and who had heard her voice in the street, asked her to sing. While the wagon rattled on to the station the captain did sing—not the rollicking songs that enthuse the crowds, but, soft and low, a touching and familiar religious hymn. Then she prayed with the officers, kneeling in their midst on the floor of the wagon. The captain, as she told the story, said she thought there was a gentleness in their demeanor toward her, when they got out of the wagon, that she had not experienced before.

When it is remembered that these faithful Christian soldiers are engaged, as a labor of love, in carrying the Gospel to the poor, degraded and lost denizens of our city slums and working hard to save a few out of the neglected masses, it seems hard that they should meet with these adverse adventures. If they were fakirs, or thieves, endeavoring to rob the poor and ignorant, instead of leading them to better lives, they would, evidently, be more esteemed. Let them alone.

THE "NEGRO PROBLEM."

Quite a little interest has been created in certain quarters by the lectures of a certain Professor Graves, who proposes, as a final settlement of this question, that a territory somewhere in our Western wilds shall be set aside for the formation of a distinctively Negro State, and that to this territory all persons of African descent shall be consigned; and from its borders all white persons are to be excluded.

The reasons assigned are: 1. The irreconcilable prejudices of the races. 2. The impossibility of the Negro successfully competing with white men. 3. That Negroes can, by competition with each other, secure the highest and best moral and material development.

For more than fifty years we have heard this same line of argument. It has always come from those who never had, or, if so, had quite forgotten, their Christianity and their arithmetic, as well as their geography. It has always met with a hearty response from those who took counsel of their race prejudices and never stopped to enquire whether it was practicable or just.

It is a recognized principle in civil jurisprudence that before a man can be tried for murder it must be shown that some one has been killed. So it will have to be shown that we have such a territory of sufficient size, fertility and mildness of climate to contain some 8,000,000 of mainly agricultural people, and with a capacity of enlargement of at least 25 per cent for each decade. Suppose, for example, we had a region four times as large as the State of Iowa, and of equal fertility; that it was unoccupied and accessible, we might have room to commence the experiment, but without a similar region adjoining we could not long carry it on.

Now it is plain: 1. That there is no such territory. 2. That if there were, it would be impossible to keep white men out of it. The mad rush for Oklahoma and the newly-opened Indian reservations illustrates the Anglo-Saxon's greed for land. We should need our entire standing army to protect our Negro State from invasion. 3. It would be impossible to persuade all the Negroes to go there, even if such a region were provided. Many of them are well-to-do citizens, with pleasant homes and favorable surroundings.

Nothing short of a repeal of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution and a return to the spirit and practice of the days of slavery could accomplish such an object. Revolutions do not go backward in that fashion.

The reasons for the proposed movement, even if it were just and practicable, are wholly inadequate. 1. Prejudices. These are not inevitable or unreconcilable. They yield to Christian education and community of interest. 2. Inability to compete with the white race. But some Negroes can compete with most white men and all white men cannot successfully compete with all others. This does not prevent their living together in harmonious relations. 3. The isolation of the Negro race. This has not been found favorable for their development. In countries like Hayti, where such isolation has been complete, the upward progress has been much slower than where the two races have lived together in harmonious relations.

But the true solution of the Negro problem is in practical obedience to civil and divine law. If those who prate about the deportation of the Negroes would use their influence to secure the execution of the laws both for the restraint and for the protection of the Negro, and if, above all, they would heartily unite in the grand work of Christian education by which the race has made such marked and commendable progress since their emancipation, there would be a wise and certain solution of the so-called race problem.

—From a Mason's wife in Ohio we have received the following clear-cut testimony against the lodge and in favor of our reform: "I think that Satan could not have done better than start secret societies; they are keeping both our old and young men out of the church. I think the Cynosure the best Christian paper I take, and as long as it keeps its present Christian character, I feel that I am a life-subscriber."

—Quite a full and interesting report of the Pacific Coast Anti-secrecy Convention, held at Canby, Ore., Aug. 15 and 16, will be found on our fifth page. While the attendance was not as satisfactory in point of numbers as at the previous gathering, the spirit of Christian unity and earnestness was very apparent in its deliberations. The election of Bishops Dillon as President of the P. C. Association, and the hearty co-operation of the Christian men and women on the coast, indicate a year of determination and industry that gives assurance, under divine favor, of gratifying success.

—Among welcome callers at the Cynosure office during the past week were the following: W. O. Norval, of McCook, Western Nebraska, one of the staunch friends of our reform, and an industrious farmer. Formerly, as a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal church, he frequently seized an opportunity to warn his hearers against the evils of the lodge system. For this he was severely rebuked by his presiding elder for overstepping the bounds of duty. In consequence of this treatment he decided that it was his duty to step out of the M. E. church into the Congregational, where he now enjoys more freedom of speech. Upon his departure from this office he left a material token of his interest in our work. Rev. H. H. Hinman was with us for a few days prior to his departure for a brief visit in Wisconsin. Bro. and Sister J. F. Browne, the former well known as an old-time lecturer for the N. C. A., passed through here while on their sad journey from their home in Ohio to Wenona, Ill., to inter their little child beside another whom they had at an earlier day buried there. The World's Fair is bringing many kind friends to the city and their visits are always appreciated.

and their approval or disapprobation of the Association is often very emphatic.

One thing has impressed me deeply by its frequent occurrence. When anyone takes decided ground against our work and in favor of the lodge, it is my custom to ask, "Do you read the Bible, and believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the only Saviour of lost men?" Some hesitate, while others respond promptly; but in nine cases out of ten, and I think I may safely say in ninety and nine cases out of every hundred, those who attempt to defend Masonry and Odd-fellowship, in the last analysis of their creed reject the atonement and repudiate the Bible as the unchangeable and perfect law of God. Nothing is more common with this class than to ask, "What Bible or what Christ do you mean?" There are a great many sacred books and a great many Christs, and who is to decide which is true or which is false. You are too narrow and old-fogyish for this age. It is time for people to get out of the superstitious prejudices and ruts of Jewish tradition, and escape the craft of priests, and come into the broad and universal brotherhood of all mankind," etc. I suggest that I have heard of two ways before, and that I prefer to be narrow enough to walk in the "straight and narrow way that leadeth unto life" rather than to join the multitude treading the "broad road that leadeth unto death".

There is something about this lodge worship that seems to possess its devotees, and make them cry out against Christ and his Word, as did the demoniac who dwelt in the tombs. While its fullest development appears in the older fraternities, it finds frequent expression in those "fledglings" that "peep and mutter" through "holes in the wall," or croak like frogs in dark cellars, or windowless rooms, in the darkness of night. Very few among this class show any knowledge of the Scriptures, and confess that they never read them. Most of them are equally ignorant of the history, literature and teachings of their own religious systems, and, having little beyond assertion to offer in self-defence, they suggest that their time and thought is so fully occupied with "lodge work" that they have neither time nor inclination to bestow upon anything better.

Of the other class it may be affirmed that, with very rare exceptions, they are not only Bible readers but Bible students. They hold firmly to the divinity and the vicarious offering of Christ, and a life of purity preceded by a "birth from above," as the only "hope of immortality and eternal life". They are, moreover, ready to give a reason for their hope "with meekness and fear". They are neither "heady, high-minded," boisterous, boastful or profane. The contrast is so marked that only the spiritually blind and deaf and dead can fail to note it.

When subjected to the Scripture test, "By their fruits ye shall know them," the church is as much above the lodge in its effects upon the character and conduct of men as the influence of the Christian home is superior to that "house which is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death". J. P. STODDARD.

FROM REV. S. S. PALMER.

CHICAGO, Aug. 23, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Will you allow me to say a word about the N. C. A. exhibit in the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building?

August 17 was my first day at the Fair. After a somewhat extended search, I discovered the location and found Mr. Stoddard so busy attending to the callers that I was much pleased and surprised.

A lengthy stay convinced me thoroughly of the importance of the work there, and of this exhibit. The secret society men are having their eyes opened, I think, as never before to the fact that these things they call secrets are all published to the world, and scattered broadcast. Many young men about to enter the lodge, also, are learning the fact that they can buy for 40 cents all they would get for $25 to $100 on uniting with the lodge.

Discussions, some warm, and very earnest, are almost constant, and the thoughtful, inquiring young men—yes, and young women, too—are stopping to learn all about these things, and take away with them tracts and facts that may save many of them from eternal ruin; for when the Satan of the lodge once gets hold of a young man, the chances are very largely against his escape to perfect freedom. After eight years of nominal membership in the Masonic fraternity, and twenty-odd years of most bitter and unrelenting persecution because of my renunciation, I can speak with positive knowledge that few men possess; and I make this appeal to those who have means to spare for this work: Do not allow Mr. Stoddard to leave that work until the last day and the last hour of the World's Fair.

We may not see results. That is not our part. Let us be faithful. It is the "good and faithful" servant, not the "good" and "successful" servant. Don't forget that the work costs something. Eternity alone can tell the results; but God's promises are sure. A courteous, kind, efficient man is doing a noble work in this field. Keep him there to the last moment. Truly yours, S. S. PALMER.

THE EASTERN SECRETARY IN NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON, Mass., August 24, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The papers of this city have been printing long and sensational accounts of the trial of Rev. N. B. Thompson, of Campello, Mass. He was charged with adultery. After a thorough trial, in which I judge from the evidence that he was given every advantage, the charge was sustained and he was expelled from the church by a two-thirds vote.

When in Campello two years ago, lecturing and securing readers for the Cynosure, I was frequently told that the lodge could not be so bad or Rev. Mr. Thompson, who was regarded as a godly man, would not belong to it.

He has been a recognized leader in the K. of P. lodge in his town. This lodge now receives him with open arms. Last Sabbath he preached before Damocles Lodge K. of P., his subject being "The wonderful love of two men." He related the fable of Damon and Pythias, and the story of David and Jonathan.

It is the custom of this lodge, I am told, to have dancing sprees to raise money. Who knows how far this poor deluded man has been led in his downward course by these dancing Pythians?

Mr. Thompson purposes to lecture in the Brocton Theater next Sabbath evening, and announces his subject as "Inside-out, or the secret workings of a church trial." Every man who hates God and his church in the city, who can, will undoubtedly attend and hear the bride of Christ ridiculed by this unworthy man. But there is a judgment day coming, thank God! Those who are called good bymen do not always prove to be good.

The standpoint from which you view an object has much to do with your like or dislike. My first view of the city of Providence, R. I., was from the standpoint of a stranger seeking a temperance hotel. I was told there was but one in the city. Going to this one, "The Central," I remarked to the clerk, "I understand you do not sell liquor here." "No," said he, "but you can get it next door." He assigned me to a back room with a broken transom and the plaster partially off the wall, and charged me one dollar for occupying the same overnight. I found some friends and Cynosure subscribers in this Roman Catholic and rum-cursed place. My introduction was anything but pleasant.

Sabbath evening I preached the Word to those who gathered in the United Presbyterian church in this city. Bro. Hood, the pastor, was most cordial, and aided me in securing Cynosure subscriptions among his people.

Tuesday evening I filled my appointment at West Mansfield, Mass. I was met at the train and conveyed to the home of Bro. Purdy, who cared for my temporal needs and rendered what assistance he could. The evening proved to be pleasant, and the attendance good. There had never been an anti-secrecy lecture there before, so far as I could learn. Several lodgemen came in. All did not remain until the benediction was pronounced. Those who left evidently did not feel very kindly toward the speaker, as loud words outside, and pounding on the building followed. At least one man renounced the lodge as a result of this lecture, and I trust others. The brethren rejoiced in the truth, and will stand by it. I expect to hear that the battle is going on at West Mansfield. Four copies of our paper will be read each week there hereafter.

To-day I met Bro. E. T. McIntire, whose experience appeared in the Cynosure some weeks since. He had just returned from the Alton Bay Adventist camp meeting, where he did some telling work in opposing lodgery. I hope he will report to the Cynosure. Strong opposition only tends to intensify his earnestness in the fight. May God bless him. Yours till the final victory, W. B. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

ABIDE WITH ME.

Abide with me; fast falls the eventide,
The darkness deepens; Lord! with me abide;
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless! oh! abide with me.

Swift to its close, ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim; its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see:
O thou who changeth not! abide with me!

I need thy presence every passing hour.
What but thy grace can foil the tempter's power?
Who like thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, oh, abide with me.

I fear no foe, with thee at hand to bless;
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness:
Where is death's sting? where grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if thou abide with me.

Hold thou thy cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies;
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee:

In life, in death, O Lord! abide with me!
—Henry F. Lyte.

THINK OF IT, YOUNG MAN!

"Hope to help some poor soul to look to Jesus before joining secret orders. I feel so sad when thinking of the way people are led away from God by joining them. Many of our best young men are ruined by them. Instead of prayer meeting they have balls and other entertainments; and then pretend they are as good as a church. It is awful, awful to think of!"

The words of our correspondent are timely words. These things are pitfalls for the young. It is not to be wondered at that the careless and the unregenerate, the worldly and the infidel flock to them. They are well calculated to feed the sinful heart. They are of the world, worldly, and belong not to God. All should let them alone.

Are there no differences of degree in the evils of these orders? No doubt. But all of them are sufficiently out of the way to be let alone. Many of them are particularly Christless, and spiritually disastrous.

Why should a true child of the King mix up with these unspiritual institutions? He has high and pure fellowships; why should he seek the low and the impure?

You will notice that of those Christians who are not entirely free from them when they become intensely spiritual, the relish for the lodge grows proportionally smaller and disappears. Christ weans us from anti-Christ, and holds us to himself. Praise his name!—Harvester.

PRAY MUCH.

True prayer is the language of an earnest soul breathing after God and a knowledge of his will. The praying spirit is a search for the presence of God and a continued craving for a conscious blessing from him. "Give ear to my prayer, O God, and hide not thyself from my supplication." "O Lord God of my salvation, I have cried day and night before thee; incline thy ear unto my cry: for my soul is full of troubles." "Hear me when I call, O God of my righteousness; thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress; have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer." These are the cries of a dependent, trusting and enriched heart. They show the natural disposition of troubled man to fly to God for succor and relief.

Man has always prayed. He cannot help it. He is made so. His prayers may not always be prompted by the right motive, nor couched in acceptable phraseology, nor offered in the proper spirit. "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss." But man will pray. The very nature of his earthly life demands prayer. He may rebel against his environments, scoff at the necessity for supplications, for years neglect his duty, yet sooner or later, secretly or openly, he will call upon a higher power for that aid which earthly help cannot render.

There is no substitute for prayer. Praise is excellent, and good works are noble, but prayer is indispensable. "Ask, and ye shall receive," has its counterpart in, Ask not and ye shall not receive. The prayerless life is a barren life. Jesus said, "Men ought always to pray." He set a glorious example—"Sit ye here while I go and pray yonder." His human life was the grandest life ever lived, yet it was a life of conscious dependence upon God and constant supplication for his aid and blessing.

Prayer is successful when offered in faith and with obedience. No man can expect God to bless him while conscious of willful and unrepented sin. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." "If I regard (cherish) iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." Man knows that his heart must be emptied of Satan, if it is to be filled with God. Just in proportion as his life is straight and pure will his trust take hold upon the Infinite. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."—Anonymous.

TRUE WOMANHOOD.

We are foolish, and without excuse foolish, in speaking of the "superiority" of one sex to the other, as if they could be compared in similar things. Each has what the other has not; each completes the other, and is completed by the other; they are in nothing alike, and the happiness and perfection of both depend on each by asking and receiving from the other what the other only can give.

Now, their separate characters are briefly these. The man's power is active, progressive, defensive. He is eminently the doer, the creator, the discoverer, the defender. His intellect is for speculation and invention; his energy for adventure, for war, and for conquest, wherever war is just, wherever conquest is necessary. But the woman's power is for rule, not for battle; and her intellect is not for invention or creation, but for sweet ordering, arrangement, and decision. She sees the qualities of things, their claims and their places. Her great function is praise. She enters into no contest, but infallibly judges the crown of contest. By her office and place she is protected from all danger and temptation. The man, in his rough work in open world, must encounter all peril and trial; to him, therefore, the failure, the offense, the inevitable error; often he must be wounded or subdued, often misled, and always hardened. But he guards the woman from all this; within his house, as ruled by her, unless she herself has sought it, need enter no danger, no temptation, no cause of error or offense. This is the true nature of home; it is the place of peace; the shelter, not only from all injury, but from all terror, doubt and division. In so far as it is not this, it is not home; so far as the anxieties of the outer life penetrate into it, and the inconsistently minded, unknown, unloved, or hostile society of the outer world is allowed by either husband or wife to cross the threshold, it ceases to be home; it is then only a part of that outer world which you have roofed over, and lighted fire in. But so far as it is a sacred place, a vestal temple, a temple of the hearth watched over by household gods, before whose faces none may come but those whom they can receive with love; so far as it is this, and roof and fire are types only of a nobler shade and light, shade as the rock in a weary land, and light as of the Pharos in the stormy sea, so far it vindicates the name, and fulfills the praise of home.—Ruskin.

MISSION WORK AND WORKERS.

All cannot become missionaries, but those who cannot go themselves can help to send others. The venerable George Muller earnestly desired, when a young man, to go as a missionary to heathen lands, but the way did not open for him to go; and he then determined to do all in his power to promote the work. He has since been enabled to assist missions in various parts of the world by contributions to the amount of more than a million dollars. During one year 138 missionaries were thus assisted, at a cost of $30,000. And this with no organization or society, but simply an earnest-hearted godly, man giving his life to the work of the Lord.

Many people think nothing can be done without a society, corporation, or board of directors;—and often very little is done with them;—but greatly as they are sometimes blessed of God, yet much good is also done without such agencies; and good work was done long before any such societies existed. And by individual action self-supporting work is developed, and new centres of labor and influence are developed.

Thus some twenty-five or thirty years ago George Muller was helping on a young missionary to China, who had not long before left all societies, and determined to put his trust in God. That young man's work has grown, and now he is working independently, and he has led forth some five hundred missionaries who work in the "China Inland Mission."

When we teach a child to walk, we want him to walk off and then teach some one else; we do not want to keep him forever in leading strings. It is good for birds to try their wings; and the sooner a missionary or mission can be well started and become independent and self-supporting, the better.

There are evils and dangers in independent labor, and so there are dangers in societyism, officialism and red-tape. We must guard against them all, and each for ourselves try to do our own work, whether others work with us or not.

One of the most useful and fruitful methods of doing mission work is by means of books, tracts and papers, wherever the people can read them. This is a work that makes no show, and sounds no trumpet, but is quiet as the coming of spring; yet doubtless thousands of souls have been saved by this means. A penny may send the message of salvation to some remote corner of the earth, where a missionary might be unable to go; and the word thus sent forth may win a soul for Christ who shall shine in glory forever. There is plenty of work to do,—where are the workers?

WISE AUNT MARTHA.

"Do, child, take time to live as you go along," said Aunt Martha to me one day.

The words were "spoken in season and fitly chosen," and gave a new turn to my life, and I am going to write down what followed, so that some other woman may hear what Aunt Martha had to say.

She was a little woman, with kindly face set in soft grey hair, with the brightest eyes showing behind glistening gold-rimmed "specs," and her seventy years had been lived faithfully to her God and to herself.

As far from selfishness as ever a woman could be, yet she preached and practiced the glorification of self as I never knew another to do.

It was toward the close of a busy, hurrying Saturday; little things upstairs and down had claimed my attention all day, and at the moment Aunt Martha spoke I was agonizing over the trimming of a bonnet, not because I needed the article, but because it was a part of the week's work I had set for myself.

The bows would not settle themselves gracefully under my nervous fingers, and the bit of bias velvet refused to stretch a required half-inch in length. Just then the door-bell sounded, and my exclamation of dismay at the prospect of a visitor called forth auntie's remark, and clinched the thought that to begrudge one's time to a friend for the sake of a few ribbon bows was anything but a sane state of mind.

Away went the offending bonnet; ribbons, lace and pins were all tumbled into the convenient bandbox, and, turning to the open fire, I shook off the threads into the blaze; and, dropping down on the hearthrug, gazed into the heart of the glow like an old Persian fire-worshiper. Aunt Martha knew I was ready for a talk, and she took up her knitting. "That's right, my dear," she began, "the world will do as well and you'll do far better without that bonnet to-morrow. I sometimes wish the good Book had said 'Remember Saturday night to keep it holy.' Sunday would be smoother if it had. I've been watching some time, and you're getting no good of yourself, child," she continued. "Human beings are a sight of trouble, to start with: teething, and the measles and the rest; but just as soon as they are old enough to be something, away they go; rush and scramble from Monday morning till Saturday night, with no attention to the best part; as if we weren't made just a little lower than the angels, and expected to live up to that pitch."

The old lady's needles ceased their click as her voice increased in earnestness. "I'm sick of this cry of 'no time! no time!'" she said. "As we're going to have all forever and forever, we might enjoy a little of it while we're in these wonderfu bodies. I hate this talk about worms of the earth, and poor miserable beings; 'tis a fine compliment to the Lord who breathed into each one of us the breath of life. He stamped a different 'I' in goodness knows how many billions, and if he thought you and me of as much consequence as that, we ought to do all we can to keep up our ends."

"But, Aunt Martha," I protested, giving the fire a vigorous poke, "many people are so tied down by circumstances, with their noses all their lives to the grindstone, that cultivation of what you call the best part is an actual impossibility."

"Don't talk circumstances to me, Jane" (auntie generally called me Jennie); "anybody can keep his soul on top, for that's where the Lord meant it should be, and any living that's worth while makes its own circumstances. The Lord will help the child who respects and tends the part which the Creator made in his own image; is that to be dwarfed and smothered that there may be one more embroidered doily in the world, or an extra frill on a petticoat?"

"Now, I'm the last one to advise anybody to laze through life" (and I knew from experience she was); "but this out-of-breath-scrambles isn't living at all, and we lose the every-day's getting ready to enjoy the to-morrows which never come. We'll never travel over to day, and every one ought to lift us a mite up, or it is worse than lost."

"Now, my boy John hardly knows that the Lord has trusted the children to him to finish off for him, he's so busy toilin' and moilin' every day for them. When Sunday comes its hurry, scurry, just the same; to church twice and to Sunday-school, where John teaches Mr. Lee's boys, Mr. Lee teaches John's; and its early to bed for the whole tired family, so as to get a fair start to begin all over again Monday morning."

"But, Aunt Martha, how can you disapprove of church and Sunday-schools?" I asked, wondering if my good aunt was letting her hobby run away with her. "You surely don't want Uncle John to bring up his boys to be careless about Sunday?"

"No, child, no! The Lord made the day sacred, but he made families sacred too, and John and Milly seem to forget that side. One day last spring I was there, as pretty a morning it was that ever shone, and in rushed the children to beg the mother to go to the woods with them, and she actually kissed them all around, and sent them off with a basket of cookies, saying that she hadn't time. To be sure there was a fancy pie for dinner, and little Mill had an extra frill on a new gingham, and what did they cost? The mother spent the next day in bed with a nervous headache, and the children lost the mothering they had a right to. What is time good for if a woman can't use it to mother her own children? What else was lost no one can count. Surely the Lord doesn't spread out a May day for his little creatures to snub and turn their backs upon. A fresh-made world, new every morning, and never two after the same pattern at that time of year. Folks are made different, there's no doubt of that; and the Lord touches one by music, and one by a picture, and another by a sermon; but I believe he means sky, and trees, and flowers, and sunshine, and ocean, and mountains to speak to every one who will take time to listen. Despising the works of the Lord will have to be explained some day, and when that day comes, and we go up with a poor, miserable, little dried-up soul, the excuse 'no time, no time,' won't sound as well as it does here, for the Lord gave us all the time there is, and all the privileges we can use to make something of ourselves that will be a credit to the pattern."

"But, Aunt Martha," I said, hoping to draw her on, "everybody looks upon Aunt Milly as a model wife and mother. She has even given up her music, which used to be her very life, for the sake of the children, and she is the most unselfish woman known, most self-sacrificing."

"Jennie, my child," said Aunt Martha, putting her hand gently upon my shoulder, "never be self-sacrificing in the same way. The Lord gave Milly a wonderful musical talent, and he expects some return for it. What right has she to neglect such a blessing, such a means of glorifying him? 'Tis your sacred duty to cultivate your painting; 'tis hers to cultivate her music; and if, as is the case with most of us, we think we have no special gift to cultivate, then do, day by day, something which makes the soul a little larger, just a little higher, and by-and-by we discover there is a point to cultivate. Perhaps 'tis a fresh way of telling a story, or a quickness at seeing the funny side; all these little things make all the difference between happiness and misery in this grand old world."

"Take time, child. Take it. Don't feel that you are stealing it, but take it as the right of a free-born citizen, and use it to make the best kind of a citizen for the heavenly country, for this is the only training ground for that."—Sydney Methodist.

THE NEGRO BATTLE HYMN.

One of the songs sung at the recent closing exercises at the Hampton Institute was one the colored soldiers in General Armstrong's regiment used to sing during the war and which he used to call the Negro Battle Hymn. These are the words:

Hark! listen to the trumpeters,
They call for volunteers;
On Zion's bright and flow'ry mount
Behold the officers.

Chorus:

They look like men,
They look like men,
They look like men of war,
All armed and dressed in uniforms,
They look like men of war.

Their horses white, their armor bright,
With courage bold they stand,
Enlisting soldiers for their King,
We march to Canaan's land.

It puts my heart quite in a flame
A soldier thus to be;
I will enlist, gird on my arms,
And fight for liberty.

We want no cowards in our hand,
That will their colors fly;
We call for valiant-hearted men,
Who're not afraid to die.

To see our armies on parade,
How martial they appear!
All armed and dressed in uniform,
They look like men of war.

They follow their great General,
The great eternal Lamb;
His garment stained in his own blood;
King Jesus is his name.

The trumpets sound, the armies shout,
They drive the host of hell;
How dreadful is our God to adore,
The great Emmanuel!

TEMPERANCE.

THE INSTITUTION, NOT THE INDIVIDUAL.

One day Canada was accosted by one of her citizens who demanded that the liquor traffic be suppressed. "But, sir," replied Canada, "a prohibitory law won't work. I cannot make men sober by an act of Parliament." "No," replied the citizen, "but you can make them drunk by act of Parliament, and what I protest against is your continuing to do so. I do not propose that you shall undertake to superintend the moral character of the individual, and regulate what he shall eat or drink, but on the other hand I demand that you shall no longer sustain upon your back a public institution which is a public nuisance, whose only product is drunkards. You cease to uphold the saloon as a state establishment and we will undertake to look after the individual with moral suasion and bi-chloride of gold. You outlaw the licensed traffic, throw off that drunkard factory you are now carrying, and before long the inebriate will be as extinct as the Dodo!" And Canada departed to think it over.

MORAL.—Prohibitionists are fighting a public institution, not an individual appetite.—Hamilton (Can.) Templar.

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR.

The following excellent paper was read by Mrs. M. Strong at the last regular temperance services of the Fairfield, Ill., F. B. Sabbath-school:

Thinking of home missions, let us, in the spirit of Paul, inquire earnestly, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" What work ought we to be doing now and here? When our missionaries go to heathen lands we expect them to weaken and undermine the influence of their idols, great and small, and as soon as possible banish them from the lands they cannot save.

In our loved country there is an idol, a god, if you please, whose influence is more debasing to his devotees than Moloch, Astarte or Baal. It is not a wooden or stone image, but a living, aggressive, terrible power for evil. The liquor traffic is its name and Bacchus is its divinity. Every brewery is its temple and every saloon a shrine. As Baal, in the guise of a charming wife, seated himself on the throne with Solomon and regulated the religious ordinances of God's chosen people until their certain ruin was accomplished, so now in the counsels of the nation the rum power casts the deciding vote. His shrines are built upon every street, and men and women, boys and girls are hourly laying upon those shrines gifts. What gifts? Money, health, honor, virtue, love, life and heaven. The most damning sin of which the rulers of Israel and Judah were accused was that they caused their children to pass through fires to Moloch.

What are we doing? We plant a saloon by every roadside, and from its gilded Bacchus shrine there streams a fire of temptation a hundred-fold more deadly than any Moloch fire of old. That may have killed the body, but this destroys the soul. That, we suppose, was only kindled on great festival occasions, and the number sacrificed was probably not large. The fires of Bacchus burn day and night, and our sons and daughters are compelled daily and hourly to pass through them. A few escape, but statistics show that year by year more fall helpless victims. The duty of the hour in our own town or city is to destroy the rum power.—Advance.

WOMAN'S PRACTICAL ARGUMENT.

"What brings you here, Mary?" said Truesdell to his wife, as she entered the liquor shop.

"It is very lonesome at home, and your business seldom allows you to be there," replied the meek and resolute wife. "To me there is no company like yours, and as you cannot come to me, I must come to you. I have a right to share your pleasures as well as your sorrows."

"But to come to such a place as this!" expostulated Tom.

"No place can be improper where my husband is," said poor Mary. "Whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder."

She took up the glass of spirits which the shop-keeper had just poured out for her husband.

"Surely you are not going to drink?" said Tom, in huge astonishment.

"Why not? You say that you drink to forget sorrow, and surely I have sorrows to forget."

"Woman, woman, you are not going to give that stuff to the children!" cried Tom, as she was passing the glass of liquor to them.

"Why not? Can children have a better example than their father's? Is not what is good for him good for them also? It will put them to sleep and they will forget that they are cold and hungry. Drink, my children; this is fire and bed, and food and clothing. Drink; you see how much good it does your father?"

With seeming reluctance, Mary suffered her husband to lead her home, and that night he prayed long and fervently that God would help him to break an evil habit and keep a newly-formed but firm resolution.

His reformation was thorough, and Mrs. Truesdell is now one of the happiest of women, and remembers with a melancholy pleasure her first and last visit to the dram-shop.—Selected.

One day several colored men met Bishop Keene, of Richmond, and asked him if he was the Catholic bishop who sometimes preached to their people. The bishop said he was. "And you say your religion is the only true one?" "Yes, so we believe," replied the bishop. "Well, then, if your's be the true religion, how is it that your people sell rum to our people and make them drunk?" And do you know the bishop says he couldn't answer that simple question?—Griffin's (Catholic) Journal.

BIBLE LESSON.

LESSONS FROM THE LIFE OF PAUL.

LESSON XI.—Third Quarter, 1893.—September 10.

SUBJECT.—Paul at Rome.—Acts 28: 20-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.—Romans 1: 16.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Acts 28: 20-31. T.—Acts 28: 11-19. W.—Luke 24: 15-27. T.—John 5: 39-47. F.—Matt. 13: 10-17. S.—2 Cor. 3: 9-18. S.—Rom. 11: 13-25.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. To the Jew first.—vs. 20-23 The darkness of those hours, when battling for life with the angry waves, was succeeded by two years of peace and quiet, in which Paul had his longed-for opportunity to "preach the word at Rome also". The Christians in that city had heard of his coming and testified their joy and delight by coming forty miles to meet him on his way. No wonder that when Paul saw this proof of that faith which he writes afterwards in his epistle to the Roman Christians "is spoken of throughout the entire world," he "thanked God and took courage". Through the favor of the centurion he was not remanded to a dungeon like the common prisoners, but allowed to dwell by himself, only chained to a soldier who was his keeper, the guards being relieved at stated times. To this chain, so irksome to a free-born Roman citizen, he touchingly alludes in his address to the chief of the Jews, whom he called together, both because the terms of his commission bade him preach the Gospel "to the Jew first," and also because it was highly necessary to meet his own countrymen, and conciliate their prejudices, as well as explain his own doubtful position as a prisoner. "For the hope of Israel"—the earnest expectation with which every true son of Jacob hoped and waited for the Messiah—"I am bound with this chain". Nothing can surpass the gentleness, the dignity, the tact, with which Paul tries to show them that because he is a true Jew, holding fast to the one grand doctrine which formed at once the line of division and the bond of union between them and all other nations of the world, he was now a prisoner, waiting his trial before Cæsar. Paul's departure had been so sudden that his enemies in Jerusalem, if they learned of it, had no chance to send any letters to Rome to his prejudice before he himself arrived. As a consequence, they were ready to hear what he had to say regarding the new sect which were "everywhere spoken against" by both Jews and Gentiles,—the former, because they considered it heresy, the latter, foolishness, and both because it enforced a purity of heart and conduct for which neither the works of the laws, nor the most refined and philosophic teachings of paganism, had prepared them. Then came "many" to his lodgings, not only of the invited chief ones, but of the multitudes who were anxious to hear and see the great apostle. From morning till night "he expounded and testified". His longed-for opportunity had come at last, and he embraced it with all the fervor of his soul.

2. Rejecting and rejected.—vs. 24-29. "And some believed...and some believed not." Wherever the Gospel is faithfully preached it will create these two classes—believers and unbelievers. "They departed after that Paul had spoken one word:" the same that Christ spoke when met by the same persistent unbelief; which Isaiah, their chief prophet, spoke long before to the Jews of his day, and which may as aptly describe the formal, worldly membership in our churches to-day, who have a name to live, but reject all spiritual truth in their practice. They hear the Bible read every Sabbath, yet are deaf to its true meaning. Its urgent appeals not to be conformed to the world fall on unheeding ears. They see the holy lives of those Christians who separate themselves from the world, and yet like one who is color-blind they do not see. And the worst of it is, it is they themselves who have shut their eyes, closed their ears, and allowed their hearts to grow so fat and sluggish in the pursuit of gain or sensual pleasures that it is impossible for them to "turn about"—the original meaning of repent—and be healed. They think they have no need of healing. They are blind and deaf; poor and naked, yet know it not. But salvation was next to be offered to the Gentiles, Paul tells them; and they would accept it. They who were the first in God's divine order must be the last. They themselves had willed it so. So let us have a fear who are so highly exalted in point of privilege, lest we fall in the same manner from our high position, and heathen nations press into the coming kingdom before us.

3. The Gospel freely preached.—vs. 30, 31. Though a prisoner and uncertain what fate might await him, it is probable that these were the happiest two years in Paul's life. He preached "with all confidence, no man forbidding him". It might seem an unfortunate thing, at first view, not to have his liberty; yet this very circumstance protected him from the Jewish assaults to which he had been exposed in other cities. The rock which looks so dark and forbidding in the sunshine of prosperity may be God's appointed means of shelter from the storm and tempest. God will give us our heart's desire when it is in accordance with his will, but not always in the way we would choose.

LITERATURE.

LOOKING WITHIN: The Misleading Tendencies of "Looking Backward" Made Manifest. By J. W. Roberts, author of several other thoughtful books. One volume, cloth, pp. 279. Published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York City.

Socialism was the basis of Mr. Bellamy's work, "Looking Backward," as it is of the narrative embraced in this work. Yet they differ widely in their theories; and, it must be confessed, Mr. Roberts' story is a blow at "Paternalism" delivered with energy and good effect. But it will not do to place too much dependence upon theories in the direction of government and social reform. "Fourierism," in the palmy days of Horace Greeley, the New York Tribune, and Chas. Mackay's "Good Time Coming," captivated many by its factitious views of social success and happiness; but in every instance where the Fourier "Phalanxes" were established, in which the production and preparation of food, clothing and other household necessities was conducted by the community, with a division of the labor among its members, dissatisfaction crept in and dissolution followed. The whole system proved a failure.

It is too soon to predict the result of Mr. Bellamy's system of socialism. Like "Fourierism," it may have many salutary features—on paper; but it will be long before a general adoption of his views will ensue.

Mr. Roberts' narrative shows up the fallacies of the Bellamy style of building society on a new and untried model; and rather encourages individual and intelligent control of one's own affairs, in contradistinction to submitting them to the supervision of the government or associations or corporations. As for a society, as well as any institution or enterprise that depends upon the public for support because of its utility, if it cannot thus sustain itself, it had better die at once rather than become a burden to the community, by direct or indirect taxation for its maintenance.

Mr. Roberts goes quite generally over the problems which at present are prolific in theories for their solution, and states his position in a manly manner. The reader may seldom agree with him, and it is possible may antagonize many of his arguments. There never was a perfect government on earth except a Theocracy; and when the people condemned its methods, the Almighty suffered them to adopt another system, which led to perplexity and often to defeat; and since that the "science of government" has always been unsettled, because it was so very human in its structure and accomplishment.

Christians who are looking, through the eyes of faith, for the new heavens and the new earth do not expect to find perfection in society and government during the existence of the world-powers that now have control of us.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Sunday, Aug. 20, was African field-day at Union Park church, Chicago. In the morning Bishop William Taylor of the Methodist African Mission spoke to a very large audience, and in the evening there were short addresses by Mr. W. E. Blackstone, Bishop Arnett of the M. E. Church (colored) South, and ex-Commissioner John Eaton of Washington, and singing by the Jubilee Singers. The house was packed, and many went away unable to get in.

—The Congregational Year Book this year shows an increase in every respect over last year. One hundred and fifteen churches have been added to the list, making a total of 5,140. The number of church members in 1892 was 525,097; this has been increased to 542,725. The number of pupils in Sunday-schools has been increased from 625,975 to 694,053. The benevolent contributions for the year 1892 amounted to $2,448,875. This year it has been increased to $2,651,892. Home expenditures have been increased slightly, from $6,791,607 to $7,146,092.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Presbyterian church South has 13 synods; 72 presbyteries; 1,271 ministers; 2,652 churches; total communicants, 188,546; total contributions for all purposes for past year, $1,943,580.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The latest statistics of the Salvation Army show that their work is established in 23 countries; in 21 different languages; has 40 newspapers, with an annual circulation of 43,000,000 copies. They also report 3,070 stations; 10,826 officers; and estimate that they reach not less than 7,000,000 persons every week.

SWEDISH AND NORWEGIAN LUTHERANS.

—The Workman contains a most interesting account of the development of the Swedish Lutheran church in the West. It states that in 1850, just 43 years ago this summer, the Pittsburgh Synod sent one of its ministers to the Northwest, to look after the interests of the Scandinavian immigrants who were beginning to make small settlements in that region. The Joint Synod of Ohio likewise appointed one of its members to accompany this brother, and together they visited Chicago and Milwaukee and the Norwegian settlements on Koskonong Prairie, Wis. The sudden breaking out of the cholera in Pittsburgh necessitated a return, and made further progress impossible. The results of this visitation cannot be given in words. This only need be mentioned—that a solitary Swedish Lutheran minister was found in the entire West—the devout pastor Esbjorn who accompanied a little band of pious people from Sweden, and was serving them at Andover and other places in Illinois. Now, after 43 years, the Synod which he was largely instrumental in establishing, contains 679 congregations, 370 ministers, and a membership of 153,000! It has one theological seminary, three colleges in operation, and two which are projected, with a number of superior academies and numerous parochial schools. Under its auspices three hospitals and six homes for orphan children are in operation, while a deaconess mother-house is engaged in training sisters for various works of mercy. From 1 to 370 ministers, and from 3 or 4 small congregations without a single church edifice, to 679 congregations.

—The three Norwegian Synods in the West now contain no less than 682 ministers and some 1,700 congregations. In these synods there are 3 theological seminaries, 6 flourishing colleges, with numerous well-attended academies and congregational schools, together with 3 deaconess institutions, as many hospitals, and 4 orphan homes.

—A Lutheran congress is announced for Chicago, for Sept. 10-12. The participants are all members of the General Synod, no other Lutheran body participating.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Congregationalists and the United Presbyterian church publish figures showing how the membership in each body stands as regards the proportion between male and female. The proportion in each is nearly two to one in favor of female members. The returns made by these two religious bodies may safely be taken as representing the general condition in this respect in all our denominations. The men are certainly the "lesser half" in the churches. This may be truthfully attributed to the influence of the secret lodges and the "social clubs."

—The governors of the provinces of Kuban and Stavropol, Russia, have given orders to close Baptist meeting houses within their jurisdiction. In the province inhabited by the Kuban Cossacks the Baptists have recently made a considerable number of conversions from the Orthodox church.

—After fifteen years' agitation, one of the three great Bible societies working in China, the Scottish National, has acceded to the united prayer of the missionaries, and agreed to issue single portions of the Scriptures, with annotations specially adapted to the Chinese mind.

—The Conservator learns that five of the leading ministers of the United Brethren (Liberal) Oregon Conference withdrew from that conference at its late session; four of them transferred themselves to other conferences and one of them went to another church.

—Bishop Kephart, who has recently visited the mission of the United Brethren in Christ on the west coast of Africa, says that the practice of circumcision is very general among all the African tribes of that coast. It is practiced among the converts to Christianity as well as among the pagans.

—Special services in memory of Rev. George C. Haddock, who was assassinated Aug. 3, 1886, by friends of the liquor power in Iowa, were recently held in Haddock Memorial church, Sioux City, Iowa.

—The Congregationalist says: "The University of Chicago conferred its first degree of Ph.D. upon a Japanese, who is to be a professor of Old Testament literature in a Methodist college at Tokyo."

OBITUARY.

REV. J. W. MORTON.

The death of Rev. J. W. Morton at St. Paul, Minn., July 27, 1893, will cause sincere sorrow to all those who have known him as an earnest and faithful Christian minister and a consistent advocate of the anti-secrecy reform.

Bro. Morton was formerly a Reformed Presbyterian minister, and retained the essential reform principle that he had inherited from his Covenanter ancestry.

Some years since, he became connected with the Seventh Day Baptists, through a change of conviction, and was a faithful and honored minister among them. He was a man of great kindness and gentleness of spirit, but strong in his convictions for what is right and true.

FOREIGN.

Duke Ernst of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha is dead. The Duke of Edinburgh, Queen Victoria's son, succeeds to the throne.

In an address at Kissingen Prince Bismarck declared himself opposed to the centralization of the imperial power.

At Moscow, Russia, within three days, 171 new cases of cholera were reported, with 74 deaths.

The prospects of the passage of the Irish Home Rule bill in the British Parliament at an early day are very encouraging; but its utter defeat in the House of Lords is a foregone conclusion, and the battle will have to be fought all over again, or the scheme dropped until a more favorable sentiment is cultivated.

The elevation of the Duke of Edinburgh (Queen Victoria's son) to the throne of Saxe-Gotha, an important principality in Germany, is displeasing to the people of that empire. Prince Albert, the husband of Queen Victoria, belonged to the royal house of Saxe-Gotha, and the accession of his son is in the line of kingly succession.

Don't buy a blood purifier because it is "cheap." The best—the Superior Medicine—Ayer's Sarsaparilla, is, in the end, the cheapest blood-purifier in the market. The ingredients of which it is composed are the most expensive and medicinally efficacious that can be obtained.

THE DEVIL IN SPIRITUALISM.

Send 10 cents to the Editor of the Cynosure for his pamphlet, "SPIRIT POSSESSION," giving his experiences in Spiritualism, and his release from its perils through divine grace. Should be read by all.

Lord and Thomas, advertising agents, who have purchased the advertising space in the Cynosure, ask attention to the following:

We caution our readers against having any dealings with Daniel F. Beatty, of Washington, N. J. The Postoffice Department has put the stamp of "fraud" on his transactions, declining to deliver any registered mail to him or paying any money orders drawn to his order. Our readers and friends will consult their own interests by letting him severely alone. We regret that his advertisement should ever have appeared in our columns.

Good Temperance Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the lodge, temple and council. 25cts each.

Just a little Gumption, in the matter of washing, will lead you to use Pearline. Look about you, and see the work of your friends who use it. Isn't the work easier? Isn't it better done? Can't you see that it must be easier and better without all that rubbing that tires out women and wears out clothes? Gumption is the seeing why and the knowing how. You can't know how to wash with the least work and the most saving, unless you use Pearline.

HOME AND HEALTH.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

Beware of unripe or decaying fruit. There is no more fruitful cause of bowel complaints. Children especially need to be guarded from such unwholesome food. The standard newspaper joke about the boy and the little green apple has been a sad reality in many homes where children have died of supposed cholera infantum, caused by eating green or decaying fruit.

Beware of eating stale or decaying meat this hot weather. When flesh of any kind decomposes it develops poisonous gases of various kinds. After flesh meats have "spoiled" some people doctor them with soda and suppose that and the cooking will make them wholesome. This is a great mistake, as nothing will either restore or neutralize such poisons.

The untrained nurse and nervous mother generally begin to cultivate dyspepsia in the babe as soon as it is born. The helpless little creature is stuffed with sweetened water, herb teas, and too frequently with cow's milk, and when fermentation results and baby cries it is drugged with paragoric, brandy, etc. A young infant needs nothing but what nature provides. If it has a colic a few teaspoonfuls of warm water will relieve the pain and not injure the babe.

"Taking thought" in the old Bible times meant needless worry. Many people die of the complaint and it is called "neurasthenia" or some other big name. Nothing is more sure to kill than fretting. It does not kill quickly always, but it is sure and it takes all the sweetness from life before it destroys it. One has said that we should not worry over things we can help but go to work and remedy the evil. As it is utterly useless to worry over things we cannot help there seems no proper time for worry.

Hall's Hair Renewer is pronounced the best preparation made for thickening the growth of the hair, and restoring that which is gray to its original color.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT

of the Holy Ghost,

BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,

Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts. The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Sanctification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personality. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Trinity of God. 8. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few opinions:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record:

"This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by perusing it. Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polemical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

FARM NOTES.

STOCK AND DAIRY.

One never sees extremely fine cattle on a poor, neglected, run-down farm. Can the farm reader tell why?

One rarely sees a lot of poor, half-starved cattle on a first-class farm. If the farm reader cannot tell why, let him think a moment.

One of the incidental results of breeding fine cattle is better farming. The man who is proud of his cows, gives more attention to the character of his farming, and studies into the question of how to make it pay handsomely.

When a farmer tells a buyer that a certain cow is great in her yield of dairy products, but has no record by which to prove it, it amounts to but little. What horse without a record will bring more than a few hundred dollars?

A cow's milk record tells the owner a great deal besides the milk yield. It shows the effect of different sorts of feed, of extreme changes in the weather, particularly in winter, of warm or cold drinks, of early cut and dead ripe hay, of sexual heat, and any other excitement. It will show the owner also when he is keeping his cows at a loss.

The raising of early lambs is often a profitable industry to such farmers as study into it thoroughly. The most it requires for success is care as to many small details of work, among them warm quarters for the mother and the lambs, plenty of good feed, and an almost loving interest in the work.

The idea that dairy cows will suffer in health without considerable exercise is slowly passing away as farmers study more carefully into dairy methods. Experience shows that the less exercise a cow has in getting her food the greater her milk yield. Feed and ventilate well, and there will be little call for exercise.

The unruly cow gets a great many kicks and curses, but who can blame her if she jumps fences to keep from starving? She will rarely take the trouble to jump fences or hook them down when she can get plenty to eat without it. If anybody should be punished it is the owner who neglects her wants.

Every dairyman should have a cream tester. It may tell him disagreeable stories sometimes—for instance, that some favorite cow is a poor butter maker; but it is the truth that the dairyman wants, not poor cows.

The successful stock breeder should have more than a money interest in his work. Affection for his animals must be part of his outfit.—Philip Snyder, in N. Y. Observer.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages. 75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftentimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun 'forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out for dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer!'"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. 'Seven Years Among Freedmen' is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ill., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling, very simply and graphically, the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ill.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far exceeding any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands, and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established."

Polo, (Ills.) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the 'sixties' among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices."

FOOD HYGIENE.

SOME SANITARY ASPECTS OF BREAD MAKING.

BY CYRUS EDSON, M. D.

Health Commissioner, New York City.

It is necessary, if one would understand the sanitary aspects of bread making, to fully comprehend the present theory held by scientists of germs and the part played by them in disease. The theory of disease germs is merely the name given to the knowledge had of those germs by medical men, a knowledge which is the result of innumerable experiments. Being this, the old term of a "theory" has become a misnomer. A germ of a disease is a plant, so small that I do not know most often collected on the hands. Any person who has ever kneaded dough understands the way in which the dough cleans the hands. This means that any germs which may have found a lodging-place on the hands of the baker before he makes up his batch of bread are sure to find their way into the dough, and once there, to find all the conditions necessary for subdivision and growth. This is equivalent to saying that we must rely on heat to kill these germs, because it is almost certain that they will be there. Now, underdone or doughy bread is a form which every man and woman has seen.

It is a belief as old as the hills that underdone bread is unhealthful. This reputation has been earned for it by the

It needs but a glance to see that it is, in its effects on the dough, purely mechanical. The dough, which was before a close-grained mass, is now full of little holes, and when cooked in this condition is what we ordinarily call light. This porous quality of bread enables the stomach to rapidly and easily digest it, for the gastric juices quickly soak into and attack it from all sides. The fermentation of the dough, however, uses up a portion of the nutrient elements of the loaf. If it be possible, therefore, to produce a light porous loaf without this destruction and without the "kneading" process, which fills the dough with germs and filth, and without the long period during which the raising process goes on, the gain in food and the gain in the avoidance of the germs is exceedingly plain.

But while we can easily see the dangers which attend the use of yeast it is certain that the vesiculating effect produced by it on the dough is to the last degree perfect. It is apparent that if we are to substitute any other system of breadmaking we must have one which will give us, first, mechanical results equally as good, that is, that will produce minute bubbles of carbonic acid gas throughout the mass of dough. Now it is in no way difficult to produce carbonic acid gas chemically, but when we are working at bread we must use such chemicals as are perfectly healthful. Fortunately these are not hard to find.

The evils which attend the yeast-made bread are obviated by the use of a properly-made, pure and wholesome baking powder in the lieu of yeast. Baking powders are composed of an acid and an alkali which, if properly combined, should when they unite at once destroy themselves and produce carbonic acid gas. A good baking powder does its work while the loaf is in the oven, and having done it, disappears.

But care is imperative in selecting the brand of baking powder to be certain that it is composed of non-injurious chemicals. Powders containing alum or those which are compounded from impure ingredients, or those which are not combined in proper proportion or care-cream of tartar and soda, are perfectly harmless even when eaten. But they are combined in exact compensating weights, so that when chemical action begins between them they practically disappear, the substance of both having been taken up to form the carbonic acid gas. More than this, the proper method of using the powder insures the most thorough mixing with the flour. The proper quantity being taken, it is mixed with the flour and stirred around in it. The mixture is then sifted several times and this insures that in every part of the flour there shall be a few particles of the powder. The salt and milk or water being added, the dough is made up as quickly as possible and moulded into the loaves.

These are placed in the oven and baked. But the very moment the warmth and moisture attack the mixture of cream of tartar and soda, these two ingredients chemically combine and carbonic acid or leavening gas is evolved. The consequence may be seen at a glance, the bread is raised during the time it is baking in the oven, and this is the most perfect of all conceivable methods of raising it.

Here, then, there is no chance for germs of disease to get into the dough and thence into the stomach, more than that the bread is necessarily as sweet as possible, there having been no time during which it could sour. This involves the fact that the bread so made will keep longer, as it is less likely to be contaminated by the germs that affect the souring process.

It will be strange if the crowds of visitors to the World's Fair do not greatly increase the number of contagious diseases, which we will have to treat. Under these circumstances it is not folly of follies to open a single channel through which these germs may reach us? Is it not the part of wisdom to watch with the greatest care all that we eat and drink, and see that none but the safest and best methods are employed in the preparation of our food? To me it seems as though there could be but one answer to questions like these.

I have shown the danger of using the yeast-raised bread, and with this I have shown how that danger may be avoided.

"DISEASE GERMS FOUND THEIR WAY INTO THE YEAST BREAD."

how to express intelligibly to the general reader its lack of size. When this germ is introduced into the blood or tissues of the body, its action appears to be analogous to that which takes place when yeast is added to dough. It attacks certain elements of the blood or tissues, and destroys them, at the same time producing new substances.

But the germs of the greater part of the germ diseases, that is, of the infectious and contagious diseases, will develop or increase in number without being in the body of a human being, provided always you give them the proper conditions. These conditions are to be found in dough which is being raised with yeast. They are warmth, moisture and the organic matter of the flour on which the germs, after certain changes, feed.

It is necessary to remember at this point that yeast is germ growth, and when introduced into a mixture of glucose or starch, in the presence of warmth and moisture, sets up a fermentation. If the mixture be a starchy dough the yeast first changes a portion of the starch into glucose and then decomposes the glucose by changing it into two new substances, viz., carbonic acid gas and alcohol.

Now the gluten, which is also a constituent of dough and moist starch, affords, with the latter, an excellent nidus for the development of germs of disease as well as for the yeast germs. The germs of cholera, and of typhoid fever, would, if introduced into dough, find very favorable conditions for their growth.

I do not wish to "pose" as an alarmist, nor am I willing to say there is very much chance of the germs of typhus and of cholera reaching the stomachs of the people who eat bread which has been raised with yeast. But I have not the slightest cause to doubt that other diseases have been and will be carried about in the bread.

I have met journeymen bakers, suffering from cutaneous diseases, working the dough in the bread trough with naked hands and arms. I have no reason to suppose bakers are less liable to cutaneous diseases than are other men, and I know, as every housewife knows, yeast-raised bread must be worked a long time. This is an exceedingly objectionable thing from the standpoint of a physician, for the reason that the germs of disease which are in the air and dust and on stairways and straps in street cars, are experience of countless generations, and no careful mother will wish her children to eat bread that has not been thoroughly cooked. The reason given for this recognized unhealthfulness has been that the uncooked yeast dough is very difficult to digest. No one but a physician would be apt to think of disease germs which have not been killed during the process of baking as a cause of the sickness following the use of uncooked yeast bread. Yet this result from this cause is more than probable. I have not the slightest doubt that could we trace back some of the cases of illness which we meet in our practice we would find that germs collected by the baker have found their way into the yeast bread, that the heat has not been sufficient to destroy them, that the uncooked yeast bread has been eaten and with it the colonies of germs, that they have found their way into the blood and that the call for our services, which followed, has rounded off this sequence of events.

I have already pointed out that the germs of disease are to be found in the air and dust. The longer any substance to be eaten is exposed to the air, the greater the chance that germs will be deposited on it. Bread raised with yeast is worked down or kneaded twice before being baked and this process may take anywhere from four hours to ten. It has, then, the chance of collecting disease germs, during this process of raising, and it has two periods of working down or kneading, during each of which it may gather the dirt containing the germs from the baker's hands. As no bread, save that raised with yeast, goes through this long process of raising and kneading so no bread save that raised with yeast has so good a chance of gathering germs.

What is meant by "raising" bread is worth a few words. The introduction of the yeast into the moist dough and the addition of heat when the pan is placed near the fire produces an enormous growth of the yeast fungi—the yeast "germ," in other words. These fungi effect a destructive fermentation of a portion of the starchy matter of the flour—one of the most valuable nutrient elements in the flour. The fermentation produces carbonic acid gas, and this, having its origin in every little particle of the starch which is itself everywhere in the flour, pushes aside the particles of the dough to give itself room. This is what is called raising the bread.

BREAD WITHOUT YEAST—"THE MOST PERFECT OF ALL CONCEIVABLE WAYS OF RAISING IT."

fully mixed and which will leave either an acid or an alkali in the bread, must not be used.

It is to sound a note of warning in this direction, or the change from the objectionable yeast to an impure baking powder will be a case of jumping from the frying pan into the fire.

The best baking powder made is, as shown by analysis, the "Royal." It contains absolutely nothing but cream of tartar and soda, refined to a chemical purity, which when combined under the influence of heat and moisture produce carbonic acid gas, and having done this, disappear. Its leavening strength has been found superior to other baking powders, and, as far as I know, it is the only powder which will raise large bread perfectly. Its use avoids the long period during which the yeast-made dough must stand in order that the starch may ferment, and there is also no kneading necessary.

The two materials used in the Royal,

The ounce of prevention which in this case is neither difficult nor expensive is certainly worth many pounds of cure, and the best thing about it is that it may be relied on almost absolutely. Those who eat bread or biscuits or rolls made at home with Royal baking powder may be sure they have absolutely stopped one channel through which disease may reach them.

THE WORLD'S CONGRESS, NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

OCTOBER 5TH, AT 2 AND 7:30 P. M.

We are now planning for the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies. It will be held, God willing, in the Fine Art Building, Lake Front, Chicago, October 5. The sessions will be at 2 and 7:30 p. m. Papers are promised by Rev. Joseph Cook, Rev. H. L. Kellogg, Bishop H. J. Becker, and Rev. M. A. Gault. Other gentlemen will be on the program, and there will be opportunity for others interested to speak. This will probably be the most representative gathering held on this subject for years, and all our readers should plan to attend. The program will be announced in the near future.

ATTENTION, IOWA!

The annual convention of the Iowa Christian Association will be held on the second Tuesday and Wednesday of November. Where shall we meet? The Executive Committee desire to locate the meeting where the largest measure of good may be accomplished. Invitations are solicited, and they will be carefully considered. Address all communications to T. P. ROBB, Linton, Ia.

INDIANA CONFERENCE.

SEPTEMBER 28, AT LAPORTE.

Addresses and discussions on secret societies and their antagonism to the church, the family and the state, will be conducted by a competent corps of speakers. Fuller announcements will be made next week. Let there be a full attendance.

An interesting description of the national finance discussion in Congress is given in our Washington Letter this week.

The total number of paid admissions to the Columbian Exposition, from the opening day until Saturday evening last, was 10,279,747, an average of about 82,238 daily.

Judge Goggin's decision, continuing the Clingman injunction case for sixty days, and thus opening the gates of the World's Fair until its close, meets with much opposition, and may not be sustained.

It is but justice to the Directory of the Columbian Exposition to say that its members were, weeks ago, in favor of closing the gates of the World's Fair on Sabbath; but they have been forced to submit to the arbitrary decision of a local court, against their expressed wishes, and must open the Fair grounds to the public on the Lord's day. The exhibits, however, need not, and probably will not, be uncovered on that day.

The "World's First Parliament of Religions" is to convene on Monday, September 11, in the "Hall of Columbus" in the Art Palace on the Lake Front. The hall will seat about 3,000 persons. The sessions will continue seventeen days. There are many who believe that this parliament will degrade Christ and his religion by parading them on the same plane with the spurious and pagan worship extant, without a hope of gaining an expression in favor of his superiority to all other religions.

Harrison county, Ind., has the reputation of being the stronghold of the White Caps, and it is stated that every township in that county had, a few years ago, an organized band of these ruffians. The same informant also states that at the present time there is but one lodge or band in the county, and that the organization is going to pieces because of the public sentiment that is growing against the methods of the fraternity. It seems likely to disappear altogether in that vicinity.

A New York dispatch of Saturday last shows an improved condition of the banks in that city, and that all indications point to a healthy resumption of business activity, with confidence restored and money flowing in the channels of trade. Reports from all sections of the country are considered cheering. In Chicago the banks, it is reported, are well-supplied with currency, and prospects for business improvement at an early day are encouraging. The greatest sufferers by the recent depression have been speculators and those whose purchases on credit were in excess of the current demand.

The order of the "Mystic Shrine" (of which an abundant exposition is published at this office) is composed of Masons of the higher degrees of Scotch Rite Masonry and Knights Templar. In reply to a question whether a "Shriner" can remain in good standing in the Shrine after he has been suspended in his commandery, provided that he is still a member in good standing in the Scottish Rite, it is replied that "an offense committed by a Noble which has caused his suspension or expulsion in any order, membership in which is prerequisite to this order, such suspension or expulsion must similarly affect his standing in his Temple".

Amid much enthusiasm, at an early hour on Saturday morning last, Mr. Gladstone's great measure, the Irish Home Rule bill, was passed in the British House of Commons by a majority of thirty-four. The vote stood: For the bill, 301; against it, 267. There is great rejoicing among the friends of Ireland over this result. The battle has been long and hardly fought, and the triumph of the measure in the Commons, even should it suffer defeat in the House of Lords (as predicted), adds another to the many successes of Mr. Gladstone during his busy public career.

Events of the past week in Chicago show that the only danger of "bread or work" parades and gatherings lies in the fact that the most lawless and discontented of unemployed men are roughs and bummers, mostly of alien birth and unacquainted with our republican institutions and circumstances, or careless of their own true interests or those of their fellow-men. There is a large army of honest, industrious persons who are unable to obtain employment, or earn a competent livelihood. For all such, organized charities have been established, where palatable bread and meat are distributed freely, and starvation kept from many doors until work can be obtained by those who seek it.

In view of the fact that the Massachusetts Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows, at its recent session, showed a total membership of the order in that State of 46,982—a gain of 2,173 over that of the previous year, C. E. Mather (P. G.) writes to us from Braggville, Mass., that he wants missionaries to convert these nearly 50,000 deluded individuals. The annual financial report shows that the total receipts of the order during the year were: From dues, $151,703 82; from fees for initiations and degrees conferred, $57,649 43; from all other sources, $57,012 67; total, $266,365 92. Total paid for "charity and benevolence," same time, only $96,973 17; leaving a very snug balance for "the good of the order"—whatever that may be.

A statement has been widely published that Sir Francis Jeune, the presiding judge in a British court of justice, recently decided that secrets confided to a clergyman must be told in court. An Episcopalian clergyman from this country writes that the story is misleading. "There was no mention of confession in the case before the court. The clergyman simply declined to say anything in the witness-box which was told him confidentially in the course of his ministerial office. Sir Francis Jeune then observed that of course he could not listen to any such plea, but, as the evidence was not material in the case, he should say nothing further; and the matter was dropped." The report served, however, to stir up the Western Catholic News, as an attack upon the Romish Confessional.

Rev. John Milbank, rector of St. John's Episcopal church at Elkhart, Ind., on Wednesday of last week, refused to allow Masonic burial services to be held in his church over the corpse of Thos. W. Stalker, a member of his flock, and a Mason of high degree. He plainly told the fraternity that it was contrary to the rules of the organization to hold the funeral of any member of a secret society in a church. He subsequently consented that the prescribed religious service might be said over the remains in the church; but during this ceremony none entered the sanctuary except the undertakers and pall-bearers. After the church rites were ended, the Masons received the body at the door and proceeded to the cemetery, where the fraternal exercises took place. The clergyman was requested to dismiss the cortege with a benediction, which he refused to do. Mr. Milbank is a son of Commodore Milbank of the British marine service. The bishop of the diocese is a 32-degree Mason, and chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Indiana. He is yet to be heard from in connection with the case.

CONFLICT WITH THE SECRET EMPIRE.

SERMON BY REV. J. M. FOSTER, AT HEBRON CAMP, MASS., AUG. 15, 1893.

(Concluded.)

The Seventh Commandment requires the suppression of Mormon polygamy, free-love, and speedy and easy divorce. Rome has 100,000 confessionals in our land. Through them the unwedded priests make an assault upon the virtue of the wives and daughters who resort to them. These should be judicially suppressed. They are a great national scandal. The priests in the monasteries and the nuns of the convents are too often guilty of unholy commerce to be tolerated. In the name of public decency these institutions should be broken up and their inmates compelled to return to the home. Orders of unwedded priests and unmarried nuns are inimical to the republic. But the lodge and the saloon are twin sources of domestic infelicity, leading to divorce. They should be included in a common destruction.

The Eighth Commandment guards property against thieves and robbers. But stock-gamblers are giant robbers and should be punished. The lodge is a robber. It should not escape the penalty.

The Ninth Commandment requires the punishment of perjury. The Master Mason's oath reads: "I promise and swear that a Master Mason's secret, given to me in charge as such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own discretion." The oath of the Royal Arch degree amends this, "murder and treason not excepted." Now let a Mason of this degree be on trial for murder, and a Mason of the same degree be sworn as a witness against him, which oath will the witness break—the one administered by the court, or the lodge oath? There is here the defeat of justice.

The Tenth Commandment requires the cutting off of the growth of the poisonous plant of covetousness, as in the case of Achan and Ahab. The Jesuits are coveting America. Pope Gregory XVI. said: "Out of the Roman States there is no country where I am Pope, except the United States." Pope Pius IX. said: "A cardinal used to say, so earnestly, that the salvation of the church would come from America, that it made a deep impression on my mind, and I hold to it." The Masonic lodge tried, by the Southern Confederacy, to destroy our government. These and all other treasonable orders should be banished at once. Let the state authoritatively and judicially apply the Ten Commandments to the evils of the lodge system, and it will be swept away with the besom of destruction.

II. The church should require absolute separation from the lodge system as a condition of membership.

1. Because secrecy belongs to the kingdom of darkness, and is opposed to the kingdom of light. All secret, oath-bound fraternities, whether gilt-edged or guilty-edged, whether indifferent, bad, worse or worst, are alike in the element of secrecy, and this is the badge of Satan's kingdom. God's people must have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

2. Because they administer immoral oaths. The oath is a divine ordinance. Only legally qualified officers in church and state have a right to administer it. But the blasphemous oaths of the lodge no child of God should take.

3. Because they use the time and money belonging to the family and the church in the lodge. The church has a right to one-tenth of the income of her members for the support of the Gospel. How many church members give $50 to their lodges for every $5 to the church? That is a great wrong. The man who spends his money in paying lodge dues and buying regalia, and lets his wife earn the living for the family at the washtub, is a black-hearted villain. The church cannot afford to have such in her membership. The Sabbath belongs to God. But the lodge takes church members from God's house on Sabbath to go on excursions and pilgrimages. Church members vowed to attend prayer-meeting. But the lodge takes them away to enjoy a banquet. A man should spend his evenings with his family. But the lodge keeps him away night after night, and the way the time is spent will not bear the light. "For it is a shame even to speak of the things that are done of them in secret." It is time for "judgment to begin at the house of God."

4. Because they are idolatrous. Their worship is a mingling of heathenism, Judaism, and Christianity with Christ left out. It is spiritual adultery. It is worshiping Satan. Those guilty of it should be excluded from the privileges of Christ's house. "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils."

Now we raise the question: What is the present duty of the friends of Christ who repudiate the lodge to make their reform complete? I answer:

1. Let them refuse to commune in any church that allows members of the lodge to commune. In proof of the validity of this position, I cite the case of Moses when Israel made the golden calf their god. He was indignant and broke the tables of the law to pieces. He interceded for the people with such zeal and earnestness that he even asked to have his own name blotted from God's book rather than have his prayer fail. But he was still identified with the people, and their sin was his, and God did not hear him. But when the pillar of cloud, the emblem of God's presence, removed from the camp and stood afar off in the wilderness, Moses was convinced that he must separate himself from this idolatrous people. So he removed the tabernacle from the camp and set it up afar off, and those who feared the Lord came out to the tabernacle to worship; and the pillar of cloud overshadowed the tabernacle, and the Lord talked to Moses. Separation from that idolatrous church of Israel was essential before Moses and the faithful could commune with God.

Now the parallel is complete. The Reformed churches have largely apostatized in and through the secret empire. The lodge members are admitted to full communion in the majority of them. This is idolatry, of a worse type than Israel at Sinai. God's people must separate themselves from it, else God will not hear them. They must have faith strong enough to part company with sin and lay hold upon the divine arm, else they cannot have fellowship with him. Hence the significant command of Paul in Hebrews: "Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach."

2. Let them refuse to exercise their political privileges in the voting society so long as the members of the lodge are permitted to vote and hold office in that body. In proof of the correctness of this position, we cite the case of the two spies, Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua, the son of Nun. When Israel first came to the borders of Canaan, Moses sent twelve men, one from each tribe, to view the land. They brought back a cluster of Eschol grapes and reported that the land was indeed good. But ten of the spies raised a false report. They said the Anakims are there; they have walled cities and chariots of iron, and we were in their sight and in our own as grasshoppers. And they advised the people against going over. Immediately they began organizing the people and appointing officers to return to Egypt. But Caleb and Joshua protested. They would have nothing to do with this organized rebellion. The ten men died by the plague, but the two dissenters lived. Then the Lord commanded the people to return to the wilderness for forty years. Now they are anxious to go up and possess Canaan, and in spite of the remonstrance of Moses, they do go up and are smitten. But Caleb and Joshua would not be identified with them in going up contrary to God's command. They dissented and stood aloof, until the people were willing to go in God's way.

Now the voting body in our land admits lodge members to every political privilege, and makes them eligible to every office and trust in the land. Satan has a larger share of the control of our politics through the secret empire than Christ has through his church. Now if the friends of Christ would please him; if they would be his honored instruments in bringing about a reformation, and if they would have his blessing, they must separate from the political body as political dissenters. This frees us from responsibility for the iniquity.

In Ezek. 14th chapter, we have an account of Israel's apostasy, and God says: "Though these three men, Noah, Daniel and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness." A reference to the history of these men indicates that they overcame by separation from the evil. This makes the evil odious and creates public sentiment against it. The apostles and early Christians made idolatry odious by separation from it. The Reformers of the sixteenth century made Roman Catholicism odious by separation, and the hierarchy was checked in its mad career. The Covenanters of Scotland, by separation, made the Prelatic Establishment odious, and secured the revolution of 1688. Wendell Phillips and the Garrisonians and the Covenanters made slavery odious by separation from the government that supported that sum of all villainies. And to-day the Covenanters are making the political atheism of the United States Constitution odious by separation from the political body that has accepted of authority under it. Now let the anti-secret society people make the secret empire odious by refusing to have political fellowship in the political body that receives the members of the lodge.

This will make their testimony efficient. Gideon and the three hundred swung their lamps and shouted, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!" And the host of the Midianites fled. God gave the word; the people published it; kings and great armies fled away.

In the sixth book of "Paradise Lost," Milton describes the battle between the good and bad angels in heaven: Michael and his angels fought with Satan and his angels. Millions of spirits are on either side. All day long the battle rages; night closes upon them. Although Satan is worsted, neither is finally victorious. On the second day the legions of darkness bring out horrible engines and hurl chain-shot into the ranks of heaven. The bright angels pluck up mountains and overwhelm the forces and the machines of Satan. The day closes with the forces on both sides resting on their arms. On the third day the Messiah appears, riding in his chariot of fire. "Under his burning wheels, the steadfast empyrean shook throughout." He drove upon his foes. He rode "o'er shields and helms and helmed heads." He "drove them before him to the bounds and crystal walls of heaven." "Headlong themselves they threw down from the verge of heaven; eternal wrath burnt after them to the bottomless pit."

The church had her first day's conflict with Rome Pagan. The second day's battle was with Rome Papal. And now the third day's engagement is with Jesuitry, Masonry, and Political Atheism, with its Sabbath desecration, licensed saloon, speedy and easy divorce, etc. The victory is certain, because Jesus leads. When the Ammonites, Moabites and Syrians formed an alliance against Jehoshaphat, King of Judah, God said: "Be not afraid; the battle is not yours but God's." "Ye shall not need to fight in this battle; set yourselves, stand ye still and see the salvation of the Lord." So Jehoshaphat marched out with singers before his army, to say: "Praise the Lord; for his mercy endureth forever." And the Moabites and Ammonites turned against the Syrians and destroyed them. Then the Ammonites and the Moabites slew one another. And Judah took the spoil. In this battle we shall see the salvation of God. The glory will be his.

AN ARMED PEACE—IS IT WAR?

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The present condition of the nations of Europe is that of a so-called "armed peace". Their immense armies and navies are all professedly in the interests of peace. None of the great powers express a desire, or even willingness, for war, provided it can be safely avoided. With one consent they deprecate the supposed necessity of the vast expenditure essential to their several military establishments. This is especially true of Germany. The emperor, in demanding the recent increase in the army, did so in the interests of peace, and as the only means by which it could be honorably secured.

It is not necessary to call in question the sincerity of the rulers and statesmen of these nations in order to show the greatness of their mistake, and that their vast preparations for war are, above all things else, likely to provoke and promote it.

The heritage of barbarism is universal distrust. They literally "take heed one of another, and trust not in any brother;" and hence in all barbarous states war is regarded as natural and inevitable. Among the rude tribes of Africa every man goes armed, not because he desires war, but to secure safety and peace. The result is that conflicts are frequent and human life is very cheap. There is a similar condition of society in some part of the mountain region of the South. Though there are laws against carrying concealed weapons, yet every man who can afford it has his Winchester rifle and carries his revolvers. The result is seen in the fierce mountain feuds, the frequent murders, and the general lawlessness of that unhappy region.

This condition of chronic warfare, whether among individuals or nations, is largely the result of the constant preparation for war. This is evident from the fact that both those individuals and those nations that discard such preparation, that seek for peace and safety in doing justly and in appealing to the kindlier impulses of humanity, are far more likely to escape the horrors of war than those who trust in their weapons of defense.

Nor is this immunity from the horrors of fratricidal strife obtained at the expense of individual or national humiliation. Men of peace who go unarmed among barbarians not only, as a rule, escape all conflicts, but often are greatly honored and beloved.

Men of war may escape. They may triumph over their weak and ignorant adversaries; but there rests upon them the hatred of the people, and this hatred often extends to all of their nation and their race. During the last 200 years every one of the great nations of Europe, though armed to the teeth, has been repeatedly humbled before its adversaries, while those countries that have trusted to the justice and forbearance of mankind have generally, if not always, escaped.

To illustrate: Take the history of those two eminently noble and conscientious men, Col. Gordon and Dr. David Livingstone. Both notable, self-sacrificing and philanthropic, both gave their lives for Africa—the one at Khartoum and the other on the headwaters of the Congo. But Gordon was a man of war. He sought to overcome the hostile people of the Eastern Soudan by force and guile. He excited their intense hatred, and miserably perished in his attempt. The returning wave of barbarism swept over the waters of the Upper Nile, and it has, since then, been utterly closed to all Christian influences. Not so with Dr. Livingstone. He traversed the vast interior of Africa for many years, and everywhere conquered hearts by the power of love. When he died in the little hut which they had built for him, he was deeply mourned by all those Africans who knew him.

No man has ever done so much to lift the veil from the Dark Continent, and to make it possible to send Christian enlightenment to her people. This principle is equally true of other nations. None of the great powers of Europe enjoys so much of the respect and confidence of the Christian world as the little republic of Switzerland, and none is less likely to be assailed.

An "armed peace" is an outgrowth of barbarism, and corresponds with barbarous society. Peace, through universal disarmament, is as much to be preferred to such a condition of things as a Christian civilization is better than barbarism.

CHINESE QUEERNESS.

A writer in the current number of Wide Awake says:

If one argues that China, being upon the opposite side of the globe, must be literally upside down, he will not find himself much mistaken. Dinner begins with cake, pudding and confectionery and ends with soup. Lemonade is always as hot as hot can be. If a friend sends you a letter, he often sends only an empty envelope addressed to you, and the bearer delivers the message orally. But what seemed to me one of the oddest of all the odd customs of the Chinese was the mode of resenting an injury. There is seldom a real fight. Sometimes they resort to hair-pulling, and they pull with a vengeance; but, as a rule, when one feels deeply injured in any way, he goes right out on the street and begins to tell his wrongs "at the top of his lungs," shouting all sorts of family secrets and abusing the relative or neighbor who has wronged him with all the hard words and hard names he can think of. I have seen women on low flat roofs of their houses screaming all sorts of horrible things about their husbands, and men sitting in the streets, with their backs against the wall, shouting till they were dark in the face and too hoarse to speak, telling everybody about their cross, obstinate wives. The most curious part is that no one seems to listen or care anything about it, and, really, I do not think that the people who are howling care either, whether any one listens or not. Out upon a country road I once came upon a man who was ventilating his wrongs in this way, and I am sure that, except his own family, there was not another mortal within sound of his voice; yet he was rattling on at a great rate concerning the treatment he received from his family.

THINGS SECRET AND REVEALED.

"The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law."—Deut. 29: 29.

When God revealed his law to man there were many things he did not reveal. These belong to God; but there has always been an inclination in the human race to find out secret things. This caused the fall in Eden. Notwithstanding the Lord has revealed in our text that "secret things belong unto the Lord our God," man, in direct violation of God's revealed law, has organized secret bands and instituted a religion that discards the Bible. "Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible." (Chase's "Digest," p. 208.)

They regard the Bible and the Christian religion as narrow and selfish. "So broad is the religion of Masonry, and so carefully are all sectarian tenets excluded from the system, that the Christian, the Jew and the Mohammedan, in all their numberless sects and divisions, may and do harmoniously combine in its moral and intellectual work with the Buddhist, Parsee, the Confucian, and the worshiper of Deity under every form." ("Freemason's Monitor," by Thomas Smith Webb, pp. 286-7.)

"A temple where no narrow creed
Protects a chosen few;
It holds alike deserved need
To Christian, Turk and Jew."

—Richardson's Manual, p. 273.

They cast out the sacred name of "our Lord Jesus Christ" when quoting Paul's instructions contained in 2 Thess. 3: 6, 12. See "Freemason's Monitor," by Z. A. Davis, p. 226; "Freemason's Guide," by Cornelius Moore, p. 137; "Webb's Monitor," p. 122.

The Bible teaches that "the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1: 17. Masonry teaches that "a Mason, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin." (See under "Acacian," "Mackey's Lexicon," p. 16.)

The principles and teachings of "our Lord Jesus Christ" and those of secret societies are directly opposite to each other. Secret societies bind their votaries under a dreadful oath to not reveal its secrets. Their meetings and most of their work are hid in concealed halls with guarded doors and curtained windows, where no inquiring eye may see, no investigating ear may hear, no seeker after truth may learn until they violate the word of the Lord as recorded in Lev. 5: 4, 5.

On the contrary, the herald of the birth of our Lord said, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people." Luke 2: 10. Jesus himself said, "Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light to all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 5: 15, 16. "What ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." Matt. 10: 27. "In secret have I said nothing." John 18: 20. "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." Matt. 28: 19. "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." John 3: 19-21.

In short, while the religion of secret societies seeks seclusion and seeks to benefit its patrons only, the religion of Jesus Christ is for all people, in all lands, for all time to come, and then—a glorious consummation—eternal bliss, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

Not only does the religion of Jesus Christ enjoin upon its heralds to publish the "glad tidings of great joy," but also to give the warning when they see danger approaching, and holds them responsible if they should fail to do so. "If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand." Ezek. 23: 8.

Secret societies are organizing juvenile societies to captivate the children under the fascination of secrecy, and thus have them entangled in the meshes of their unholy designs and their minds poisoned and prejudiced against the simplicity of the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Can we stand quietly by and know these things and not raise a warning voice against this fascinating, popular evil without incurring the displeasure of our Father in heaven? Arouse, brethren! especially ye ministers and writers! Better have our garments dyed even in our own blood for crying against the monstrous evil, than to come to judgment with other people's blood clinging to our skirts because we were afraid of the wrath of man.—J. D. Haughtelin, in the Gospel Messenger.

THE PRIEST'S CURSE.

The failure of the ordinary Romish curse is thus illustrated by the following extract from Gen. T. M. Harris, in Chapter 14 of his great book, "The Assassination of Lincoln."

"For twenty-six years Fr. Walter [the confessor of Mrs. Surratt] and his rebel coadjutors have kept a paragraph going the rounds of the papers stating as a fact that all the members of the Commission [which tried the assassins of Lincoln] are dead but one; and that they have died miserable deaths which marked them as the subjects of heaven's dire vengeance, and that some of them perished from the violence of their own hands, being crazed with remorse. The truth is that at this writing (March, 1892,) all the members of the Commission are alive except Generals Hunter and Ekin. Gen. Hunter lived to over four-score years, and Gen. Ekin to 73. The writer of these pages is 80 years old, and is still able to vindicate the truth in the interest of a true history of his period. Is it not time that the American people should be fully informed on this most important and interesting episode in their history, and warned against these dangerous men whose highest ambition even at this late day is to subvert our liberties?"—Selected.

THE TOWER OF BABEL.

It has been discovered that Nebuchadnezzar reared his temple of Belus on the foundations of the original tower of Babel. An inscription on a cylinder has brought this to light; and the inscription declares that the old tower, on the foundation of which the temple of Belus was built, was begun forty-two generations before the time of Nebuchadnezzar—that is reckoning between thirty-five and forty years to a generation, as was commonly done—about 1,600 years before—a date that carries us back to the years when men were scattered over the face of the earth by the confusion of tongues.

But we shall give the inscription in full. It was deciphered and translated by Oppert, a man of great learning, sent out by the French government in 1857. It is Nebuchadnezzar's own composition, apparently:

"The temple of the seven lights of the earth—the planets—the ancient monument of Borsippa, was built by an ancient king; since then are reckoned forty-two generations. But he did not reach the summit of it. Men had left it since the days of the flood, which confused their language. Earthquake and thunder had shattered the bricks and thrown down the tiles of the roof. The bricks of the walls were cast down and formed heaps. The great god Merodach has put it into my heart to build it again. I have not altered the place nor disturbed the foundations. In the month of salvation, on the auspicious day, I pierced the unburnt bricks of the walls, and the bricks of the casings with arches. I inscribed the glory of my name on the frieze of the arches."

Is not the discovery of this cylinder, under the rubbish of Babylon, like the raising up of a witness from the dead to attest the truth of the ancient history of the tower of Babel.—Episcopal Recorder.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Heroism on the water.—Abused benefactors.—What will she do with it?—The testimony of a Mason.—A point of law.—Non-beneficial Odd fellows.

It is not often that New England is visited by two West India hurricanes in less than a week. Dwellers on the seacoast can get a tolerably vivid idea of the way these tropical visitors disport themselves in their own home. Here they are chance guests, and, so to speak, on their good behaviour. They may pull down a few trolley wires, and wreck vines and shrubbery, but so far north this is generally the extent of the damage they do on land. But on the water many a precious life is sacrificed before they give forth their last passionate sigh, and sea and air are calm once more. Who says the days of romance and heroism have gone by? There is never a disaster by fire or flood that is not redeemed by showing us what capabilities of courage and devotion rest latent in the human soul. The recent experience of the sailor picked up after clinging for thirty-three hours to some floating wreckage just in time to save him from the hurricane that in a moment would have swept him into eternity, reads like a chapter from some nautical novel. It was a Maine fishing schooner whose fate, had not this one of all her crew by a rare providence escaped to tell the tale, could have been only guessed at by the "poor lone Hannahs;"—for Lucy Larcom's pathetic heroine is the prototype of multitudes in our New England seaports,—who watch vainly for the sail that never returns till uncertainty becomes despair. And for heroism, when did any mediæval knight make a finer showing than those sailors who in a tremendous sea rescued three people from a pleasure boat off Block Island the other day at the risk of their own lives? or the brave young lawyer, drowned in attempting to save one of his proteges whom he was taking out for a day's pleasuring on the beach. If we hear of much evil through the newspapers, so we also occasionally hear of some good that is happening; and we should bear a hundredfold more if the press did not make a specialty of what we may call the night-side of human nature.

We are finding out that the much-abused English sparrow is not without his good traits; for instance, that he is immoderately fond of the seven-year-locusts. And now the increase of a certain grub or worm that has done much mischief to the hay-crop in some parts of Connecticut by eating away the roots of the grass in patches much as a buffalo moth eats into a carpet, is said to be caused by the war of extermination which has been waged against the almost equally-abused crow. Nature adjusts very carefully cause and effect, and it is at our own peril we disturb the balance of her delicately-poised scales. Our song-birds find plenty of defendants, in fact, plead their own cases with such effective sweetness that only the veriest churl can think of taking their little lives in forfeit for filched cherries and strawberries; but alas, for their brothers of the air who have neither song nor fine feather to recommend them! They will be sure to have all manner of iniquities laid to their charge, and only here and there a voice raised in their defence. But how often a flock of sociable sparrows has lit up the gloom of a winter's day with the thought of Him who feeds them, and in whose sight the least of us are of more value than many sparrows. And in the late days of autumn, with the brooding glory of the Indian summer resting on the hills, just what is needed to put the finishing touch of sweet melancholy to the picture is the caw of a crow from its distant habitat in some far-off pine-tree. He is in fact like a good many human beings, not nearly so black as he is painted.

America probably never saw so many young woman college graduates as this past collegiate year; and unless the stringency of the times interfere she will see more at the close of the one just beginning. And of course the old and su-premely absurd question, "What will they do with it?" will be asked oftener than ever by those who believe by a queer paradox that the more a woman knows the less fitted she is for the care of a household. She is better off than the heiress of a millionaire, for she never will be tempted to exchange her intellectual riches for the title of some empty-headed fool of a foreign earl or count. She is better off than her struggling sister of other days who, if she knew her three Rs thoroughly, saw nothing better to do than to swell the overcrowded ranks of teachers, no matter how mortally she hated it, or how intense was her desire to tread another path. At the same time I have been painfully impressed in talking with many of our young girl graduates in reference to their future prospects, with the unsettled feeling that drops like a pall over their spirits as soon as they receive their diplomas and leave those halls of learning behind them. The world expects, parents and friends expect, that she will do something with her hard-earned education, while they have never helped her to make a definite choice. Only in rare cases is she brought up like her brother to feel that whether she goes to college or not a necessity devolves upon her as soon as she reaches mature years of deciding what she shall do and be. But to her credit be it said that when she has once made her final choice of a career, she is quite as persistent and makes as few mistakes as her college-bred brother.

A prominent Mason said the other day:—I am quoting from an exchange—that "secret societies organized for benevolent and brotherly purposes have larger memberships now than ever before. But you rarely see a man wearing the badge or pin of the order to which he belongs." He goes on to say that any one with a spare quarter can buy a Knight Templar's charm or a three-linked Odd-fellow's pin, and the wearers are so often clandestine that secret society men are inclined to shun and be suspicious of those who display them. Or is there another reason still; that self-respecting lodgemen are beginning to feel that such gewgaws are getting to be a dishonor rather than an honor in the eyes of all sensible people?

The British American prints a pathetic letter from a ship-carpenter who is a non-union man, and thus excluded, like so many others, from the right to labor, in which he asks if there is any redress at law for himself and others of his non-union companions. The laboring man needs protection more from these lawless organizations than from foreign competitors.

A non-beneficial Odd-fellow is one who through misfortune or for any other reason has not paid his dues and for that reason been suspended. But when old and invalid he may be graciously permitted to come back into the order as a non-beneficial member, provided he pays a proportionate share of the running expenses. They will take his money but he must in no event expect anything from them in return. No wonder that men fools enough to desire reinstatement under such conditions are few and far between, and that in the State of New Hampshire where the order claims to especially flourish, there has never been but one applicant for a position of such dubious advantage.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 30, 1893.

No other topic than finance has occupied any considerable portion of the attention of the Washington public this week. One hears the votes of the House of Representatives on the several silver propositions discussed everywhere. While the result—the passing of the bill for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the silver law—surprised no one, there were several surprising things in connection therewith. For instance, the smallness of the highest vote cast for free coinage of silver. Out of 351 members present and voting only 124 voted for free coinage of silver at the present ratio, and only 119 for free coinage at a ratio of 20 to 1. A tabulation of the first vote by sections shows that the New England States cast 27 votes—all they had—against free coinage; the Middle States 77 against and only one for free coinage; the Southern States 70 for and 33 against; the Central States 40 for and 86 against, and the Pacific coast States 13 for and 4 against.

The question of the continued purchase of silver bullion by the government having been negatively decided by one house of Congress by a more than two-thirds vote—240 to 110 being the vote on the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law—has now been transferred to the Senate, where the silver men are much stronger—strong enough they still claim to attach conditions favorable to silver to the bill in the shape of an amendment. On the other hand, those who favor unconditional repeal claim to be strong enough to pass the bill without amendment. So far all attempts to reach an agreement in the Senate as to the length of time the bill shall be debated have failed. Unless an agreement is reached it will be but guessing to attempt to say when or how the Senate will dispose of the question. Senator Voorhees, chairman of the Finance Committee, gave notice yesterday that his bill, which was reported from that committee as a substitute for the Wilson repeal bill which was passed by the House, would be kept before the Senate until a vote was reached.

A bill has been introduced in the Senate prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, and Representative Morse, of Massachusetts, will introduce a similar bill in the House as soon as that body adopts its new code of rules which is now being discussed. While it would unquestionably be the greatest possible blessing that could possibly be bestowed upon the District of Columbia to have either of these bills become a law, there is not the slightest probability that either of them will be even seriously considered by the committees to which they will be referred. I have long been under the impression that the friends of moral reform in Congress, with intentions the best, make mistakes in introducing such bills. They should, in my opinion, be more politic, and introduce only such reform bills as would at least have a chance to become laws, instead of wasting time that might be put to a better purpose on impossibilities. Such, for instance, as one putting an absolute stop to the sale of liquors in the restaurants in the basement of the Capitol building. The time will come—it is bound to come—when there will be a Congress which will not only consider, but will pass a prohibition bill, but it hasn't come yet.

President and Mrs. Cleveland are expected to return to Washington this week. Members of the administration deny the truthfulness of the sensational report, widely published, that Mr. Cleveland had recently been operated upon for a cancerous trouble.

The decision of the Senate by the close vote of 31 to 28 to refuse the applications for seats made by Mr. Lee Mantle and Mr. John B. Allen, who were appointed Senators respectively by the governors of Montana and Washington, was a surprise, as it had been generally supposed from opinions expressed by Senators that the decision would have been in their favor. The decision also affects the vacancy from Wyoming. These three States will be only half represented in the Senate until their Legislatures meet and fill the vacancies.

Comparatively few people knew until this week that a small congregation of Dunkards existed in Washington. The first baptism of a Dunkard in Washington took place last Sunday in the Eastern branch of the Potomac river, the immersion being performed by Bishop Stoner, of Maryland, who also presided at three services of song and praise held by the little congregation on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, and attended by a number of people who had never before witnessed the quaint and interesting services of this sect, the foundation of which is a literal acceptance of the language of the Bible.

REFORM NEWS.

WORLD'S FAIR N. C. A. WORK.

Considerable space has been given in the Cynosure to the work of Rev. J. P. Stoddard and others at the N. C. A. exhibit in the vast Manufactures Building at the World's Fair; but it seems to your committee impossible even for those who have witnessed this work to over-estimate its importance.

Of the many thousands of exhibits occupying the forty-odd acres of floor-space in this building there is not one which so constantly holds a crowd of interested listeners, who comprise to a large extent the most intelligent persons who visit the building. What a marvelous opportunity to show the difference between the Gentile and the Christian religion—between the worship of Baal and the worship of Jehovah, to the nations of the world!

That mere curiosity does not retain their attention, even if it does cause them to halt, is certain; and nothing is clearer than the fact that many, even among those who have been caught in the secret-society net, are promptly convinced of the evil character of secret societies; and it is really remarkable, in view of the unparalleled array of attractions there, that so many visitors return, sometimes repeatedly, to get more information, often telling Bro. Stoddard they have come to hear another lecture.

Your committee, believing that you will not suffer this work to cease for lack of funds, have asked Bro. Stoddard to continue its management for another month, and he has consented.

The greatest economy has been used in the management of this work, but the expenses for services, and for a very large amount of reform literature, must be met.

Reader, can you more literally "disciple all nations" in any other way than by giving them the pure Gospel message, now that they are congregated at our doors? Will you not answer promptly?

During the next two months, $500 could be so expended in this work as to bring a great harvest.

ELLIOT WHIPPLE,
J. M. HITCHCOCK,
EZRA A. COOK,

Committee on World's Fair Exhibit.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE BOOTH.

Very much that is encouraging might be given in my report for the week past. New England has been more fully represented among callers at the N. C. A. exhibit than at any time previous.

Dr. George A. Gordon, pastor of the New Old South church, Boston, and wife, and a daughter of Dr. A. J. Gordon, pastor of Clarendon-street Baptist church, Boston, stopped long enough to speak words of approval. Several young men from Boston were furnished with tracts, and learned something of our work.

Two "White Ribboners" found their way to our booth by the direction of a Boston pastor, who is a stranger to me but had been interested in some things which he had heard at the N. C. A. booth. I am confident that these two ladies will add both enthusiasm and piety to our New England department, as they had seen the serpent's trail in their neighborhood and felt his sting.

A vigorous young M. E. pastor came, with word fresh from Bro. S. A. Pratt, of Worcester, Mass., and showed his interest by adding his name to the list of Cynosure readers for one year. Rev. Mr. Taylor, son of Father Taylor, of blessed memory, gave assurance of hearty sympathy and quiet co-operation in our work. Rev. Mr. Cyle, from Philadelphia, with his wife, lingered with the group, to listen to a short "chart-talk," to which he gave his approval.

Bro. Miller and his daughter, from Marshalltown, Iowa, had not forgotten the exciting time when I assisted Mr. Ronayne in working the degrees in that city. Bro. McLeod told of old friends at Clarence, Iowa. D. W. Nelson, of Mass., Bro. C. K. Bell, of Md., and a score of others enrolled under our banner. One man, after listening for a moment, said: "I joined one secret order, and, finding that it interfered with my duties to my family and my church, I left it;" to which his wife gave hearty assent.

While the friends have been more numerous, the opposition has at times been more personal and persistent. Not only has your agent been severely censured, but men whose lives and labors merit at least respectful mention have been classed with the most dissolute and profane. Next to Pres. Finney, Pres. J. Blanchard is most execrated by these "sons of light," while Mr. Moody, Drs. Goodwin, Gordon, Cook and Pentecost are criticised and condemned by men in the "jeweled fraternities," whose verdancy is as evident as that of a mullein stock in early June. An early caller one morning made inquiry about our work, and, after remarks not highly creditable to a gentleman and certainly not intended as complimentary to your agent, added: "This thing is a disgrace to the Fair, and ought to be stopped." I learned afterward that some of my neighbor-exhibitors had been interviewed on the question of removal; but failing to enlist their sympathy, the work on that line was evidently abandoned as impracticable.

There are indications of concerted action on a different policy by our opponents. Instead of one or two, as at first, they appear of late in groups of half a dozen or more, and there are some faces that are becoming quite familiar in these accidental assemblies. A few questions precede a general assault, in which all seem desirous to participate, with the apparent intention of destroying the veracity of their opponent by detecting contradictions in his testimony or inaccuracies in his statements. It is not difficult to escape from this snare, but when the scene becomes somewhat clamorous it is a little perplexing to know just how to maintain the truth without seeming to be the occasion of a disturbance which would come under the censure of the authorities. To illustrate: In a company of say twenty, one man said: "I want to ask you a question." "Very well, sir." "How do you account for the fact that there are four hundred members in the lodge at Wheaton where the Blanchards have been fighting them for years?" My reply was: "If there is that number in the lodge they have been secured and the money largely furnished by outsiders, to keep up that lodge." "That's a lie; I belong to that lodge, and I nail that right here and now as a lie." Another man said: "I used to belong to Wheaton lodge, and I say it's a lie." Others caught up the strain, and joined in the vociferations until I felt a little fearful lest an account of the matter should be called for at headquarters, especially as I had learned that the Superintendent had made inquiries about how things were managed at our exhibit.

It is to be expected that remarkable statements will be made by the brethren; but I confess to some surprise when told that Pres. Finney came to Chicago and delivered a course of Anti-masonic lectures, and as the result 3,700 of Chicago's best men applied and were made Masons. I remarked that "such a statement needs confirmation before it will be accepted by people who knew Mr. Finney." "I am a Mason, sir, and know whereof I affirm." That, of course, settled the question in his estimation. "I am a Mason, and I know" is the sine qua non; and it is irreverent presumption to ask for further proof of any assertion, however absurd. I could give names of parties who would not be proud of some of the remarks of their "Masonic brethren" respecting some of their fellow-citizens who speak freely about the lodge; but I forbear.

One thing more regarding Mr. Finney's Masonic record was a trifle amusing. A man bearing the exalted honor of being a "Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret," claimed to have been familiar with Mr. Finney, and to know all about him. He solemnly asserted that he belonged to the lodge where Mr. Finney was initiated, and that he knew positively that he never got but one degree, though he earnestly besought them to let him go on. This "Sublime Prince," I should say, was not over 40 years of age, and not born until after Mr. Finney had accepted Christ as his personal Saviour, and renounced Masonry along with other "unfruitful works of darkness."

I am taking too much space; but please indulge another statement, which I deem noteworthy: A gentleman called and introduced himself by saying: "I am a German and sent here to report to my government on certain exhibits, and yours is one of them." To make sure he took his list and showed me that it was put down among others to be examined. I was, of course, glad to give all the information I could, and to furnish him specimens of our literature and explain how, by the use of charts and other appliances, we were endeavoring to inform the people. He evidently took more than a simple official interest and expressed hearty thanks on retiring. It should encourage us to know that the N. C. A. is known in Germany and considered of sufficient importance by the government to instruct its agent to investigate and report its methods.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

FROM J. S. HICKMAN.

HICKMAN, Ill., August 28, 1893

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Having called on Bro.

Stoddard, at the N. C. A. booth in the Manufactures Building, at the World's Fair, we were more than pleased with the work which is being accomplished there.

We also called on the gentleman in charge of the exhibit of the Christian or Disciples' church, near by, and had a very nice talk with him. He said that he was intimate with Bro. Stoddard and in full sympathy with us.

Speaking of the other booths, representing various denominations in that vicinity—the Methodist Episcopal, North and South Presbyterians, Baptists, United Brethren, Swedenborgians, Unitarians, Congregationalists and others, he said there is more interest taken by the people in Bro. Stoddard's work at our booth than in all the rest. We must keep Bro. Stoddard, or some one else, there until the Fair is closed. He is especially good in the remarks brought out by the tracts that are given away, and this fact makes it necessary to employ an assistant to distribute these little messengers of truth continually, with catalogues of our publications. We also need funds for the payment of these two workers, and also to defray the expense of printing tracts.

We also hope that all Cynosure readers and other friends will call at our booth and leave a word of cheer and such material aid as may be convenient. Those who do not attend the Fair may remit as they are able to Bro. Phillips at the Cynosure office.

The secret orders are all idolatrous, and we, like the children of Israel on the borders of the promised land, are fully able to possess it and drive out the barbarous nations.

We were at the N. C. A. booth for several hours, and were more than pleased with the "good cheer" that many of the callers brought. One man, from Iowa, left $2. A Methodist pastor, from Ohio, was very much interested and seemed to be anxious for "light." We very much liked his frank, open conversation, while Bro. Stoddard was temporarily absent and the writer was in charge of the booth. At this booth we have "an open field and a fair fight," and the secretists are routed every time.

Quite an intelligent man came up, with a good crowd, thinking that he could put Bro. Stoddard to flight. He announced himself as an Odd-fellow and also a disbeliever in the Bible; but he soon retreated on the run like a cat stealing chickens when "dispersed" with a boot-jack!

On no account should we discontinue the good work now being done by the N. C. A. at the World's Fair.

J. S. HICKMAN.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, Mass., August 31, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A reason frequently given by ministers for not antagonizing forms of evil, such as the lodge, is that they are so engaged in getting men to become Christians that they have no time for outside reform. A young minister of a church that bears testimony against the lodge [I refer to the denomination] said that he believed in preaching the positive of the Gospel and letting the negative alone. This statement,

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR FREE BUT OPPRESSED CITIZENS.

PERCY, Mississippi, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your valuable paper comes to me as "a gift from a friend." Not knowing his or her exact name, I desire to say, through your columns, that I am certainly grateful for such a valuable present. It is a certain fact that while I read many papers, I never knew of yours until now. Reading it proves very profitable as well as interesting, since you are doing a great work.

One great feature noticeable is that you take a bold stand for God as against the whimsical iniquities of man, regardless of color. This is the line upon which continued, unrestrained warfare must be waged. It seems to me that these are they who continue to defy the teachings of God, and precipitately, or deliberately, do those things that will ultimately cause him to pronounce vengeance upon their heads.

Here are we, in America, the land of the brave and free (?) Our emblematic bird stands with pinions stretched wide and overlooks land and sea. No war-cloud has ever yet frightened it from its lofty perch; but a closer observation discloses the fact that both pinions are deeply dyed with blood—the blood of those who volunteered their assistance when national integrity was to be both gained and maintained.

A nation built upon injustice is just as sure to fall as is a stone thrown into the air. It is simply gravitation that causes the latter to come back to the earth; but it is God's wrath that is certain to destroy all of the Babylons of the world and cause as many Romes to become antiquated debris.

But the prayers of the faithful have always prevailed, so the oppressed of America sincerely solicit all Christendom to aid them in this the trying hour of their souls! Let us all faithfully approach the throne of Jesus and ask him to blot from his book of remembrance the present injustice, and speedily bring reformation on balmy wings. Sincerely yours, JOHN G. MONROE.

LACK OF BACKBONE IN THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

GENEVA, Ohio, August, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I did not know, until Mrs. Seeley informed me, that the Cynosure was largely devoted to the work of unmasking the Gorgon head of Masonry and its hydra progeny of secretism and lodgery. I am more than pleased to find such a sturdy foe of these Christless, blood-sucking parasites that have fastened their slimy tentacles on the church and the entire fabric of government and society. Ever since I have found out their silent, destructive power on these God-given conditions of mankind, I have abhorred lodgery as I do the damnable saloon. But not until I asked the assistance of the press to publish even very gentle criticisms on these abominations, did I, in amazement, learn to what an extent editors were under the fell power of the lodge. The Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, from its birth till six months ago, has been under obligations to me, and has so acknowledged; but when I sent it an article reflecting unfavorably on Masonry, and its harmfulness to the church, the editor would neither publish it, nor return me my type-written article, though accompanied with a stamped and self-directed envelope for that purpose. His reply, after my third letter reached him, was: "We acknowledge the importance of your article, and may publish it in the future." I have now no use for any religious editor who plays the coward in the presence of secret clans. The reluctance on the part of secular papers to peep one note against the lodges is nearly equal to that of the religious journals. I was amazed, when I began asking a little space for adverse remarks on their continual brag of lodge benevolence, to find them nearly all bound in the hush-chains of oath or promise-bound secret societies. You will see, by reading the small clipping enclosed, that I have succeeded in stirring up the opposition here. If our community gets interested in the controversy, I shall send to your office for literature. E. B.

OUR HOPE IN THE COMING CHRIST.

FROM AYLESFORD, Nova Scotia.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am pleased to know that the "mystery of iniquity" is being revealed, and that the Lord, who alone can and will "consume it with the spirit of his mouth and destroy it with the brightness of his coming," is on his way. (See 2 Thess. 2: 8) The phrase, "the spirit of his mouth," I think, means the Word of God. God is light, and it is his Word applied by the Holy Spirit that translates the sinner out of darkness into light. I rejoice, therefore, that God's Word is being promulgated throughout the world.

The signs of the times indicate that Satan is disturbed in his strongholds. Hence the desperate efforts on the part of the liquor-dealers and the almost numberless branches of the secret empire to propagate their nefarious and soul-destroying business. But as the darkness flees before the rising sun, so the kingdom of darkness must retreat before the spreading rays of the Sun of righteousness. Let the Cynosure continue to pour its sin-disclosing rays upon the darkness of the lodge and all other existing evils, with unwavering faith in the promises of God. For Christ must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet. Let us rejoice. R. S. MORTON.

OBITUARY.

MRS. E. B. C. WASHBURN.

Mrs. E. B. C. Washburn was born at Hallowell, Me., on the 26th day of January, 1812, being the third of seven sons and daughters of Nathaniel Cheever and Charlotte Barrell. About the year 1844 she went with her widowed mother to New York, where she resided with her brother Henry, then in charge of a church in that city. With him she removed to Jewett City, Ct., where she was married in 1858 to Deacon Ichabod Washburn, founder of the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Co. Here she has since lived a modest, unostentatious life of active, unselfish, old fashioned New England industry and abounding hospitality.

On the death of her husband, in 1868, and the resignation of the executors named in his will, she was made by the probate court co-administrator of the large estate. This she managed with singular judgment and ability, conducting to a successful issue, by arbitration, a protracted controversy with the managers of the American Bible Society, as a result of which equity and proven intention, instead of lawyers' technicality, were established as the usage and law of that society in the construction and settlement of legacies. The large benevolences of her husband's will were there administered, not only without cost by litigation, but with large increase to all the institutions endowed and individual objects remembered.

Desiring to see established and in practical operation during her own lifetime, the home for aged women, provided for in her husband's will by the bequest of his homestead estate at her decease, she determined to purchase from the trustees of the contemplated home the fee simple of that estate, of which she held the life interest, for its estimated value ($11,000), in order that with the same and other available funds the home might be set up in her lifetime. Thus was secured the favored institution on Orange street, entitled "The Washburn Home for Aged Women," which for nearly twenty-three years has been dispensing its substantial bounties under the charge of a body of lady managers elected from different churches of the city.

In the use of her own income from that period she has been an exemplar of prudence, self denial and generosity, making it a point, as she was known to say, never to refuse any worthy applicant, and following her appropriations to institutions of benevolence and private charities with a prayerful remembrance. Among the poor she went as "Lady Bountiful". While judicious, considerate, pitiful and thoroughly poised, her left hand seldom knew what her right hand was doing. To the destitute and unfortunate of her personal acquaintance she was a quiet and delicate benefactor, taking care that the stream of her kindness should never run dry.

In the cause of Christian education she maintained an intelligent and generous interest through the American Home Missionary Society, the American missionary associations and the American Board of Foreign Missions, to each of which great organizations she was a life member and a regular contributor. To the charitable colored schools and colleges of the South, especially to Gen. Armstrong's cherished institute, Hampton, Va.; to Booker Washington's Tuskegee Institute, Alabama; to John G. Fee's Berea College, Kentucky; to President Bumstead's Atlanta University, Georgia; and to other educational institutions in Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana and the Carolinas, she was a habitual donor. To Oberlin, Ohio; Washburn College, Kansas; the Blanchard anti-secrecy college of Wheaton, Ill.; Gates College, Nebraska; Bangor Theological Seminary, Maine, and divers other smaller colleges of the West and South, she was a periodical giver. It was her principle to give as long as it was in her power; and giving, therefore, was her habit and delight.

She warmly sympathized with her brothers in their anti-slavery and temperance and anti-secrecy labors, and sup-all the proper functions, builds up and invigorates the entire system, and restores health and strength.

Are you weak, nervous and ailing, or "run-down" and overworked? Then it will bring you special help. It's the mother's friend. It lessens pain and insures life of both mother and child.

plied largely the sinews of war to their reform enterprises. She gave freely to the National Temperance Society and publication house at New York, to the N. C. A. reform society, Chicago, and in support of the no license warfare in Worcester. She was a pronounced patriotic citizen, a clear-headed Republican of the original free soil and Vermont stamp. She was a subscriber and daily reader of the New York Tribune from its beginning with Horace Greeley, and all through the war of the rebellion to the day of her sudden seizure by a stroke of paralysis, on the 22d of June, from which she never rallied.

Up to that time her health had been equable and excellent, her powers and faculties remarkably preserved, her eyesight apparently perfect, so that she threaded her busy needle without glasses, and perused the fine print Bible of her youth and the close columns of the Tribune, unassisted. Her constitutional strength by heredity was such, her vitality so great, her interest in friends and passing events so kept up, and her knowledge of the progress of the Redeemer's kingdom in the world so accurate that longer life and continued usefulness seemed to be assured.

She was to the last in high esteem for her many virtues, not least for her loyalty to the particular church of which she was long a member, the Central Congregational, Rev. Dr. Merriman's. She was a scrupulous keeper of the Lord's day and was sorely grieved by its desecration through Sunday selling of newspapers and the Sunday opening of the Columbian Exposition by authority of its contract-breaking Commission. She was pained to the point of Christian indignation by the apathy and failure of Republicans, when it was clearly in their power to have carried Worcester for no-license, in the late campaign, to the cost of which she liberally contributed.

In common with our best citizens, she deprecated the opening of the flood-gates of intemperance and immorality by the legalizing of the nefarious liquor traffic; and it was clearly foreseen by her how the city would rue its neglect and folly at the polls. It is plain now that until women like Mrs. Washburn are allowed the franchise by law, the millennium of temperance and morality cannot come. But it is to be hoped that the influence of a character and example like hers will live long after her, and be an important factor in future victories of the right. As a poet of her own sex has lately written of another like-minded woman:

Her heart was like a generous fire,
Round which a hundred souls could sit,
And warm them in the unstinted blaze:
Those who held nearest place to it
Had cheer and comfort all their days;
Those who, perforce, were farther still
Yet felt her radiance melt their chill,
Their darkness lightened by her rays.

"BRIGHT" MASONIC AUTHORITIES.

Looking over a copy of the first edition of Salem Town's "System of Speculative Masonry," issued at Albany, N. Y., in 1818, eight years before the murder of William Morgan for exposing the secrets of the fraternity—an event which led the way to the most complete elucidation of all there is in Masonry, good, bad and indifferent—we find, portrayed in brilliant colors, the character of the order as its leaders would have it understood by those whose interest or curiosity might lead them into the lodge. Of this volume it may be safely said, as of many more modern purely Masonic eulogies, that what is not rhapsody and exaggeration is rhodomontade and hypocrisy, designed to convey an impression of beauty and grandeur in the fraternity that scores of seceding Masons assure us do nowhere exist in speculative Masonry. Mr. Town wrote for Masons, as a leader among them, and published his lectures to glorify the system; and his book is entitled to no more credit than a Christian seceder from Masonry would accord to it. One of the latter, Rev. Chas. G. Finney, of Oberlin College, tells us that "Masonry cannot be known from a perusal of the eulogistic books which adhering Masons have written.... Their eulogistic books, as anyone may know who will examine them, are silly, and for the most part little better than twaddle." Town's is such a book as this; but, we believe, Masonically speaking, a more honest book than if it had been written after the Morgan murder. When the lime-lights of truth were turned upon the fraternity at the time of that event, all the sophistry of the Masonic system and its defenders was scattered to the four winds. All that is needed is to keep our search-lights constantly upon it, exposing it simply as it is—a Christless, murderous institution, without a redeeming trait to commend it to Christian support. This is the mission of the National Christian Association.

ALLEGED LODGE INTERFERENCE WITH JUSTICE.

Within a few weeks, in the North Division of this city, Mrs. Robert Webb, a fair young woman, was found dead in her room, with a pistol-shot wound in her head. With her at the time was Hugh S. Haven, of Kenosha, Wis., her paramour, who testified that she committed suicide by shooting herself. The alleged instrument of death was found lying on a table eight feet away from the place where the woman stood, according to his statement, when the fatal shot was fired.

A medical examination and a coroner's inquest followed, and at this point we follow the report printed in the Chicago Dispatch:

The opinions of half a dozen physicians go to prove that as soon as the bullet entered Mrs. Webb's brain she immediately collapsed and could not have placed the revolver where it was found on the table. Doctors all agree that a wound such as Mrs. Webb received would instantly produce paralysis and that the wounded person would instantly fall to the ground and be unable to move a muscle. Such being the case, Mrs. Webb did not shoot herself, and even if she had Haven must have picked up the revolver after the shot was fired, and laid it on the table, a thing which he stoutly denies having done.

In support of this position, the Dispatch printed the individual expressions of two down-town physicians.

Resuming, the Dispatch goes on to say:

In the case of Mrs. Webb not a powder mark was found upon her fair skin, and this fact it was which led the undertaker at Jordan's establishment to remark that "that woman never committed suicide," when the body of the murdered woman was removed to the morgue.

But in spite of the testimony of these medical witnesses, the coroner's jury returned a verdict of self-murder.

Quoting again from the Dispatch, we learn why this verdict was probably rendered:

Another fact which has recently come to light is that Haven is a member of the order of Elks, and that four of the six jurors who listened to evidence in the case are members of the same organization.

Whether or not Coroner McHale impaneled a jury with the intention of exonerating Haven, he certainly succeeded in securing a very peculiar jury. The night prior to the inquest several of the most important witnesses in the case were approached by members of the jury and asked for their opinions on the case. One witness who was approached by a juror and asked for his opinion asked why it was wanted.

"Oh, I am one of the coroner's jury," said the questioner, "and would like to find out a little something about this matter."

The witness grew indignant and informed the inquisitive juror that he had no opinion to offer and what he had to say relative to the case would be said when the inquest was held.

It is to be hoped that an impartial and intelligent grand jury will give this case the careful consideration which it deserves. The previous record of the woman's paramour, as well as the evident interference of the lodge for his protection, demands it.

WITH JESUS IS FAR BETTER.

We print in another column a notice of the departure to the better land of our dear friend and fellow-laborer, Mrs. E. B. Washburn, of Worcester, Mass. After a long life spent in the service of God and in kindly ministries to her comrades on the march through time, she has fallen asleep in Jesus. In reading the record of her earthly living we are once more impressed with the thought that the story of a life can only be written by the life given. She was born; she lived in certain habitations; she did certain works; she closed her eyes and folded her hands; we can no longer hear her footfall nor see her kindly face; this is what we call biography.

In a certain sense it is so, for out of the heart came the words and works which we hear and see. These outward acts are like the hands of the clock: they hint to us the interior processes. Yet in its fullness no human life-story has ever been told. Only the High and Holy One who created us in his likeness and who follows with a Father's loving eye our wanderings in this beginning of our existence can read the real record. Enough, however, is revealed in each case to determine the trend. Upward toward the light, or downward toward the darkness, we can see that each soul is moving.

The love of truth, the love of humanity, the love of Jesus: these are infallible tokens which show that the soul is pluming itself for flight beyond the stars. God be thanked that such lives are not wanting, but that from time to time their inspiration and benediction fall upon us. Those who knew our sister, who has but recently entered the company of celestials, recognized her while yet among us as one whose citizenship was in heaven. The great cloud of witnesses who applauded her heavenly race have already welcomed her to their number, and with them she now looks down in eager interest upon those of us who still struggle for the prize of their high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

"THEY LOOK LIKE MEN OF WAR."

Most of the basements of Catholic churches are being stocked with firearms of the best make. The whole plan of the war is kept in the greatest of secrecy. Satolli (pope No. 2) has been sent over from Rome to investigate and report to headquarters. It is reported that the Catholics have an army of 700,000 which they drill every week. When everything is ready the Pope will give the command to slaughter heretics. Catholics will rush to their churches, take their arms (which are there ready) and begin to shed blood right and left the same as they did in the dark ages. You will see that every papist will fight at the command of their infallible pope.—G. W. Chapman, in the Vanguard.

A good deal of this sort of writing and talk in Protestant circles is current. If half of it is true, it behooves the patriotic citizens of this country to bestir themselves and prepare to meet the impending calamity.

But whether it is true or not, the Roman Catholics have an opportunity, also, to complain of threatening disaster. Just look at it. The Knights Templar (Masons) form a military organization of wide-spread extent. They wear uniforms of military pattern, and parade and drill, in secret and in public, with naked swords. The military branches of the Knights of Pythias do the same thing, and so do the Patriarchs Militant (I. O. O. F.), as a regular part of their secret ritual. The independent military societies, —the Hussars, for instance—are armed horsemen; and even the Boys' Brigades of our Protestant churches dress in uniform, drill and parade, and are armed with muskets owned by the church!

Now what does it all mean—this creation of so many and such numerous bodies of able-bodied and armed men and youths? Does it mean that at the first irruption of partisan and religious rancor among our people these military companies will wage battle with each other? "They, that take the sword shall perish by the sword," said our Lord Jesus Christ, and he warned his disciples against this military spirit and its effects. There is nothing of Christianity in these armed drills and parades; and we have only to look back to the story of the destruction of Jerusalem for the confirmation of this fact. The Roman army and the besieged Jews did the fighting, and 1,100,000 of the latter perished by the sword, while the meek and lowly followers of our Lord escaped from the bloody conflict without the loss of a single life. What a signal corollary was this upon our Saviour's prophecy! No, the sword is not the Christian's weapon of defence; —the Lord is his shield and buckler, and with the sword of the Spirit his enemies are put to flight.

THE CONVERSION OF DEAD SINNERS.

We believe that in all or nearly all the books that have been written for and against the Mormonism of Utah, little or no mention is made of the doctrine of working for the conversion of their dead and sinful ancestors. To many the following extracts from the Deseret (Salt Lake, Utah) Weekly News of August 19 will come like a new revelation concerning these singular people.

First came a printed "Temple Notice" signed by Lorenzo Snow, President of Salt Lake Temple, defining the "stakes" (or synods) comprised in the Temple district, and warning the workers in the approaching ceremonies not to come in too large numbers, crowding each other and so hindering the work.

Following this warning, the editor of the News prints this caution:

"We understand that the numbers of saints who have been recently admitted to the Temple to work in behalf of the dead have largely exceeded the proportions intended and that have been deemed judicious by President Woodruff. Overcrowding should be especially avoided when work of a sacred character is being performed; otherwise the solemnity which ought to be always attached to it is liable to be depreciated. Those engaged in it should not be placed under conditions tending toward physical discomfort, which superinduces mental perturbation. No situation should exist which would detract from the serene spirit which pervades the house of the Lord."

Again he says: "The preaching of the Gospel of Christ to the dead is in constant progress, and preparations are being rapidly forwarded in the spirit world behind the veil, for the coming to earth of the Lord Jesus Christ, when the righteous shall be raised from the dead. This labor of redemption will continue until the great mass of the human family are saved, and Jesus shall have conquered death, hell and the grave. Hence the labor for the dead in which the Latter-day Saints are engaged in the holy temples they have reared to the name of the Most High has barely begun. Those who now perform this God-given labor should so operate that it may be continued by their children after they themselves have left the scenes of mortality. This cannot well be done unless each individual or family shall keep a correct private record of the work performed. To enable the saints to do this, record books have been in existence for a considerable time. One of a specially simple description has lately been prepared. In order to avoid forming the book into separate divisions to admit of the recording of different classes of ordinance work, all that is not deemed essential for a private record has been eliminated from the headings. In this way the record of all ordinance work can be placed opposite each listed name on a direct line opposite to it across two pages of the book. No Latter-day Saint, family or individual, as the case may be, engaged in performing temple work should fail to procure a book and carefully keep a record of what is done."

Other extracts: "The Prophet Joseph Smith, in elucidating the subject of salvation for the dead, attached great weight to the keeping of records and seeing that they are correct in every detail." . . . "The doctrine of preparation is connected with every undertaking human or divine. It is specially important in its application to so sublime a labor as that which the Latter-day Saints are performing in behalf of the dead, as well as that which they do for themselves. Every individual who purposes entering the temple for an object so holy ought to be free from every sentiment and desire that is not Godlike.

There should also be a preparation of a nature that will lead to the work being done intelligently. Great care should be taken in having the record of those for whom ordinance work is to be done, carefully compiled and written out on blank sheets. No one should go to the house of the Lord trusting to his memory on this subject."

For the present this will suffice. We hope, however, to be able to give more details of this heathenish custom in an early number, from the pen of an intelligent correspondent.

S. V. R. A. AND N., U. S.

The "Society of Veterans of the Regular Army and Navy of the United States" is a secret organization, ostensibly for "mutual aid and protection, to bind together in fraternal unity all persons who have at any time served in and were honorably discharged from the army, navy, signal or marine corps of the United States." Its declared object is to aid each other in sickness or distress, to procure decent burial for its deceased members and to "look after" their widows and orphans. This society claims to be "an army of reserve, pledged to support the Constitution of the United States, bear true allegiance to the national government, and defend it against all enemies—a menace to disloyal agitators, and a powerful auxiliary of the army in the field."

This society was originally incorporated under the laws of the State of New York in 1885. Its name, badge and button are protected by letters patent in Washington, D. C. Its motto is: "Loyalty, integrity, obedience,"—to what or whom?

A recent manifesto from the order proclaims it "a duty that those honorable veterans of the nation owe to themselves and to their families to organize for self-protection" (against what or whom?), "and for prompt and efficient service in case of a call from the government."

Thomas J. Brenack is "General and Commander-in-chief" of this society, and Col. John C. Phillips, managing editor of the Chicago Western Catholic News, is "Deputy Commander-in-chief, with the rank of Lieutenant General."

Will some of our friends, veterans in the army and navy, kindly furnish us with additional particulars relating to this society, which, seemingly, is in opposition to the G. A. R. and the A. P. A.?

"He was probably up to some game that he thought was a harmless game, but which proved a fatal one," was the reflection of one of Dickens' police inspectors over the body of a dead seaman found floating in the Thames. Connect the inspector's thought with the unwary who join the Masonic lodge as "a harmless game," and afterwards find themselves seriously involved in a tyrannical, soul-destroying, Christless institution.

Respecting higher criticism, it is refreshing to read that Dr. Mendenhall is quoted as saying: "Of the seven hundred critical theories of the Bible and parts of it, five hundred have wholly disappeared, and not one-third of the two hundred theories left can be said to be alive to-day." This does not speak well for the permanency of "higher criticism." "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the Word of our God shall stand forever."—Isaiah.

"It is my fault," explained Admiral Tryon, just before he and his gallant crew of over 400 went down in the ill-fated British warship, "Victoria"; and the coroner's jury rendered a verdict accordingly. Wherein lay his fault? A practical seaman, occupying a high position of trust, under such circumstances should have been spared a fate so shameful and full of horror. How many a self-wrecked man has also sent up this same dying wail, too late to be saved!

The other day, a specimen Freemason visited this office. First he called for a Blue Lodge ritual; said he was not a Mason, but thought of being one; examined the printed work of the Entered-Apprentice degree; said it was "wrong"; that "Masonry cannot be revealed"; was assured that what he read was correct; became angry and said that the man who exposed Masonry "should have been killed;" owned up that he himself was a Mason, and within five minutes declared that he was not one; then calmly went to sleep in an Anti-Masonic chair, out of which he was uncereemoniously hustled by the secretary.

The impression which he left in the office was that he was a Mason "duly and truly prepared" for lying in behalf of the fraternity.

The friends of National Reform propose to hold a convention in Pittsburgh or Allegheny, Pa., Nov. 14 and 15, to secure the fruits of the recent great struggle for the sanctity of the Sabbath, which has stirred the entire country, by taking such measures as shall crystallize the Sabbath sentiment in a national and permanent legal form. Rev. Dr. H. H. George has accepted his appointment as Field Secretary in behalf of the movement, and is laboring in the interest of a general and popular expression of Sabbath observance.

The Detroit papers announce the death by accident of Rev. John Levington at Corunna, Mich. Except that he was struck by a train, no details are given of the painful occurrence. Mr. Levington was 85 years old, and was living in Detroit at the time of his death, which took place some three weeks ago. For several years he has been an evangelist in the Wesleyan church, having finally left the Methodist Episcopal because of his convictions against the lodge. His struggles against this evil while yet a preacher in the M. E. connection, report of church trials, etc., filled many columns of the Cynosure about eighteen years ago. He lectured widely, wrote two books, and endeavored to start a Methodist movement against secretism. His effort to combine sectarianism with reform did not succeed, but his books were widely read.

Our esteemed, old-time friend George W. Clark, the enthusiastic reform singer, writes that he has read with deep interest the excellent articles by Rev. J. P. Stoddard in the Cynosure, reporting the progress of the battle against the lodges now being carried on so hopefully at the World's Fair. He enjoys, very much, the "grape and canister" with which Bro. Stoddard is storming the enemy's castle, and believes that he is the right general in the right place and at the right time. In conclusion, he adds:

"Keep heart!—Stand firm, untiring!
Strike at the monster's heart;
Take thought!—take aim!—keep firing!—
He dreads your well-aimed dart.
Your words—we pray, God bless them!--
All oath-bound clans to quell;
Strike out for truth and freedom—
Your country's page will tell!"

I think, was merely an excuse for not doing his duty. He has a number of secretists as members of his church. Is it true that by preaching the positive of the Gospel men will get right before God so that there is no need of presenting the negative? Evidently not, taking this brother's church as an example. God has put the positive and negative together in his Word, and the minister who does not preach both sides, does not preach the whole Gospel. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." This is positive. "Thou shalt not steal, kill, commit adultery," etc. This is negative.

If it had not been Christ's plan that both sides should be preached, he would have set us a different example. "Woe unto you, scribes," etc., are words uttered by the same loving Saviour who said: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." We live in a practical age. The world asks, "What will the church, or the lodge, or any society do for a man?"

Several illustrations have been given me during the week past. A young married man, clerk in a Boston store, joined the Knights of Pythias. Shortly after, he remarked to a fellow-clerk: "We have just bought a silk flag for our lodge." The clerk addressed asked: "Have you enough money to buy a barrel of flour?" The reply was "No." "Have you enough money to buy a sack of flour?" The same reply. The question was then asked, "Would it not be better to buy flour for your family, rather than silk flags?"

This K. of P. lodge, a little later, had a parade and picnic. The clerk who had not money to buy a sack of flour carried the silk flag. The other clerk noticed that he let it trail in the dust, and inquired if he had not been drinking. The reply was "Yes". The silk-flag clerk then went on to explain that they had a keg of beer at the picnic. Some were temperance men and would not drink of the beer; so they divided the money and let them have lemonade.

If anyone wishes to see these clerks I will be glad to introduce them.

Last evening I called on several young men connected with the Columbus Avenue Presbyterian church. Four of the young men did not belong to any secret society and had a natural aversion to them, though they knew little of their teachings. Another had united with the Odd-fellows, but said he should have nothing more to do with them. He was glad to know of our work. When in the lodge he was urged to go to the temple on Sabbath afternoon, to practice in degree work; he promptly replied that he would do no such thing. It was his judgment that about half the I. O. O. F. men in the lodges here were drinking men.

The next young man was very much interested. He had belonged to secret societies and saw that they were doing a vast amount of evil. He will try and arrange for me to lecture in the church. These young men will read the Cynosure hereafter.

I find the prayer meeting an excellent place to get acquainted. I have attended and taken part in two during the week past. Being in Roxbury, Friday evening, and finding a prayer meeting in the Presbyterian church of which Rev. Mr. Kneeland is pastor, I attended. Brother K. was very cordial and expressed his hearty approbation of the work in which I was engaged. On Sabbath evening I attended the Shawmut Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Barton, pastor. On mentioning my name to the usher, he remarked: "Why, that's a good name; we have a Rev. Mr. Stoddard who worships with us." He referred to father. Owing to the pressure of work, I have not yet called on Bro. Barton, but I hope to. In looking over the list I see I have secured over eighty subscriptions to the Cynosure during the past month. I have recently visited friends in Peabody, Lynn, Waltham, Mt. Auburn, Cambridge, Somerville, Campello and Quincy. All appear in good heart. There is no reason why New England should not make a strong forward move this winter.

I speak to-night in the Swedish Lutheran church at Waltham, and to-morrow evening in the Christian Union Hall at Cambridgeport. Rev. H. Jacobson, the pastor, arranges for these lectures.

I had been planning work for Pennsylvania next month. There seems to be an open field and a desire that I work here another month, as father is in the West. Perhaps this will appear to be duty. I expect to return home either on Saturday or next week. W. B. STODDARD.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

PHILOMATH, Ore., 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In arraiging the lodge the other night, at a certain place in this State, a gentleman of the lodge became angry, took his hat and left the room, but could not go home. He stayed near the door, listening, till the close. He then accosted a minister and also the editor of a paper representing a prominent denomination, and complained to him. The minister said: "What's the use to get mad about it. You know the lecturer told the truth." The man answered: "I know it's so; but a fellow hates to be told of it." He promised to leave his lodges, and have no more to do with them.

By the way, the minister referred to above is a K. of P. and A. O. U. W. He promised to never enter the lodges again, or say a word in their favor. He declared them to be the greatest menace to the church and all good.

Thus you see our work is moving on here. Not long since I had a number of Masons in my audience. I can tell them afar off. These were especially uneasy. I said to them: "Gentlemen, I don't blame you for being restless and ashamed under these remarks, for there is much connected with your initiation that I am actually ashamed to mention in public, and can only imagine how I would feel were I in your place here to-night."

The battle waxeth warm, but we are in to stay. I wish we could find some friends to assist our cause here financially. I am sure it is a successful outlay. Who will help us and lift some of the burden from Father Mathew? P. B. WILLIAMS.

THE HOME.

THE IMMORTAL HYMN.

"Jesus, lover of my soul,"
Sang I softly o'er and o'er,
"Let me to thy bosom fly,"
I would part from thee no more.
I would in this haven rest,
When the raging storm is nigh;
When all earthly help has failed,
"Let me to thy bosom fly."

"Jesus, lover—Oh, how sweet
Came the precious thought to me;
Earthly love is all too fleet,
Longs my soul for constancy.
"Jesus, lover"—soft and low,
O'er my soul the cadence fell;
Words and thoughts together flow,
Nor can half its meaning tell.

"Jesus, lover"—dearest Friend,
All my griefs to thee I bring;
Thou wilt consolation send,
And my longing heart shall sing,
"Thou, O Christ, art all I want,
More than all in thee I find;
Raise the fallen, cheer the faint,
Heal the sick, and lead the blind."

"Jesus, lover"—and the strain
As it rose was all a prayer
Over a remembered pain
And the blight of something fair;
Yet in all my pain and woe
For this vanished hope of mine,
To the grave where love lies low
Comes the Comforter Divine.

"Jesus, lover"—nothing less
Will my soul receive from thee,
Than thy love and faithfulness;
And my ceaseless cry shall be:
"Thou of life the fountain art,
Freely let me take of thee;—
Spring thou up within my heart,
Rise to all eternity."

DOUGLAS LEONARD'S REMORSE.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

"Are you going anywhere to-day, Douglas?" The speaker sat in a low arm-chair beside an open doorway. She was dressed in white, and as she leaned forward her right hand rested upon a crutch. She was a cripple. "Are you going away to-day, Douglas?" The person addressed sat upon the threshold in the open doorway. He was a fair-faced, handsome young man, about 26 years old. His clear-cut features had a frank, open expression, and yet it was a weak face, and the habitual droop at the corners of his finely chiseled lips indicated, somehow, a lack of strength of character. He looked annoyed as his sister repeated the question.

"Well, yes," he said; "the boys are going down the river on a hunting and fishing excursion, and I am invited. I think I will go."

"But, Douglas, promise me that you won't drink while you are gone. You know you are so easily tempted."

"There is no danger, he said, Gertrude," his fine face flushing.

"But you do drink sometimes when you are with the boys," she said; "now promise me."

"I promise," he said; "and now I must be going."

"How long will you be gone?" "About two weeks," he said.

"Can you send no word to us while you are away?"

"No, I think not," said Douglas. "We are going down to Sewall's Island to have a clam-bake and to make some chowder; but you need not fear. I shall come back all right."

"I am sorry to have you go. To-morrow is my birthday, too."

"I declare I forgot it," her brother said; "I have no present for you, but I will stop in town and buy something nice and send it up to you." He stooped and kissed her, and she clung to his hands.

"My only brother," she said, "if you would only refuse when they ask you to drink."

"I shall not drink while I am away," he said; and, darting through the door, he was soon in the street.

Gertrude Leonard watched the tall, lithe figure of her brother as he hastened along the street with long, swinging strides. "He is the best brother in the world, with this exception," she said. "He will drink when he gets with the boys. Oh, I do hope he will have the courage to refuse." She watched him until a bend in the road hid him from her sight.

Meanwhile he hurried along the hot and dusty street until at last he met the boys in front of Boyd's restaurant. As he sat on the steps fanning his heated face, one of them handed him a glass of egg-nog. "Drink it," he said; "we have all had some. We have a long walk to the river and it won't hurt you." Douglas Leonard took the glass and, feeling tired and thirsty, swallowed its contents.

The boys—there were five of them—were soon on their way to the river, and Douglas Leonard followed slowly behind. It was very hot and dusty, and young Leonard found it impossible to keep up with his companions. "I wonder what ails me?" he said; "my head whirls and my limbs are numb. I wonder if I should feel better if I were to lie down. There is a nice shady place under that tree." Bright rays flashed before his eyes, and the sun seemed piercingly hot. "I believe I will lie down," he said. Suddenly, from far down the street he heard music, and, looking up, he saw sitting by the roadside two foreign-looking men, one with a hand-organ and the other with a little Spitz dog. Douglas Leonard hastened to the spot and stood, in a dazed way, listening to the music; and as his eyes rested on the dog he suddenly remembered that he had forgotten Gertrude's birthday present. "I cannot go back to town," he said; "I am so dizzy and the sun is so hot. Oh, but the dog! that is the very thing! I wonder if they would sell it. Say, boys," he said as the music ceased, "would you like to sell that dog?"

"What you pay?" they said. "How much do you want?" said Leonard. "Five dolla," they said. Young Leonard took out his pocket-book, counted out the money and handed it to them.

"Do you see that white house on the hill? Well, take the dog up there and give it to the young lady whom you will see there, and tell her it is a gift from her brother. Will you remember?" "Yes," they said, and departed in a cloud of dust.

They were Italians. They were roughly clad and had evil-looking faces, and, somehow, young Leonard had an uneasy feeling after he parted with them. "And yet, why should I worry?" he said. Gertrude will be pleased with the dog." It was a long and weary journey to the river, and when young Leonard stepped on board the boat it was sunset, and he laid down and fell into a deep sleep, from which he did not wake until morning.

We will pass over the days that followed. They hunted, fished, and had a glorious time. Young Leonard enjoyed the trip, and two weeks from the day he left home he was traveling once more that dusty road. He had enjoyed the ride down the river, and through the grand old woods, and yet there was an uneasy feeling at his heart as he neared his home. He had broken his promise to his sister—his sister whom he loved so dearly! He realized, now, that the last time he trod that well-known path he was shamefully intoxicated. He realized his weakness, and how manfully he had struggled against it. Did Gertrude know? had she heard? He almost dreaded to go home.

BIRDS OF A FEATHER—A FABLE.

Once upon a time all the institutions of society determined to separate themselves into two classes, according to their feathers.

As the man in the moon was not an institution of society, they decided to make him the judge. Then the separation began.

The first one to take its place before the judge was the church. He commanded it to step over to his right. "Now," said he, "let all things that are like the church in their purposes and effects come over and gather around it."

First came the Sunday-school, then the Bible, the temperance pledge, all the good books and papers, the Christian Endeavor Society, Young Men's Christian Association, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the school, the home, marriage, the lecture platform, music, medicine, science, art, and inventions, and a great many other things.

The last to cross over to the side of the church were the Sunday newspaper, the social club, the theater, the progressive euchre and wine party, and the dancing school.

"Hold on!" cried the judge, as they were on their way; "on what ground do you claim to be benefactors of mankind, like the church and the other institutions with it?"

"Why," said the Sunday newspaper, "we reach more people with information and enlightenment than the churches do."

"And we, said the theater, "present the drama in all its purity, educate the taste and imagination, and make life cheerful and happy."

"And we," said the social club, "cultivate close and genial relations among men over the festive board and the exhilarating cup."

"And we," said the progressive euchre party and dancing school, "furnish amusement for the young of the churches, and thus prevent them hankering after the pleasures of coarse vice."

"And we," said light wines, "take the place of stronger and dangerous drinks."

Meanwhile the saloon, the race course, the brothel, the slums, the divorce court, the sensational novel, the gambling table, the prize fight, and a number of other institutions of like character had ranged themselves upon the left of the judge.

The man in the moon, who was almost as wise as Solomon, said: "I will settle this question. You must close your eyes. Turn around to your right three and a half times, and then to your left four and three-quarter times, and then back to your right two and two-third times. After that, those upon my right and those upon my left will call out at the same time, and to those voices you recognize as your friends you will be allowed to go."

Everybody agreed that the test proposed was fair; and so the theater, and the Sunday newspaper, and the social club, and the progressive euchre party, and the dancing school, and the rest, did as the man in the moon directed. Then those upon the right and those upon the left began to call.

At first, those blindfolded were very much bewildered; but soon they began to venture in the direction from which they heard familiar voices. And so they kept going, until they found themselves mingling with a throng. Then, when the covering was removed from their eyes, lo! to their great surprise the Sunday newspaper, the theater, the progressive euchre party, the dancing school, and the rest, found themselves, by their own choice, on the side of the saloon, the race course, the gambling table, the brothel, the criminal court, and the others.

"Thus you see," said the man in the moon, "birds of a feather will flock together," even though they have to find their places, in the dark."

PITCHING TOWARDS SODOM.

We often meet with individuals whose conduct leads us to say within ourselves, they are pitching their tents towards Sodom.

The man who in any way sacrifices moral good and spiritual ends for physical and temporal advantages is pitching his tent towards Sodom.

The man of family, who leaves a religious community and Christian privileges, and carries his family merely for purposes of gain into a country where there are no Sabbaths nor sanctuaries, where the influences are against religion, where his children will have the children of the vile and profane men as their only companions, and will, of course, marry ungodly husbands and wives, will find after a while that he has pitched his tent towards Sodom.

A gentleman, a ruling elder in the Presbyterian church, some years since opened a hotel in a country village. He did it to support his family, and it was right; but then to secure custom he departed from Christian principles, and kept an open bar. In a few years he died, leaving a widow and seven sons. The hotel was kept up, and his sons attended the bar. The sons of that man all became drunkards; they squandered his property, and his widow is now sustained by the benevolence of the church. He was a good man, but he pitched his tent towards Sodom.

The young man who commences the indulgence of bad habits is pitching his tent towards Sodom. He may love a social glass. He may prefer the society of the vicious. He may indulge in an occasional game of cards. He may go to the house of her whose steps take hold on hell. In all this he may see no great evil. But after awhile, unless arrested by God's providence and grace, he finds himself bound in the strong chains of habit, vexed by evil passions—a suitable subject to have dwelt in ancient Sodom, and, ere long, to take up his abode in those regions of which Sodom and Gomorrah are but an emblem.

Finally, every impenitent sinner has pitched his tent towards Sodom, because he chooses to dwell in the cities of the plains; because he is traveling to a place over which the storms of God's wrath are gathering; and because he must soon be cast into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, unless he flee into the mountain, and tarry not in all the plain. Reader! hast thou pitched thy tent towards Sodom?—Watchman and Reflector.

ENEMIES OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

Paul, in his letter to Timothy, says: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be...lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. From such turn away."

To my mind the Protestant church at the present time occupies a position perilous in the extreme. It is beset on one hand by the Catholic power, ever on the alert for any opportunity to further its own interests, constantly increasing in power, and threatening more and more an overwhelming tempest of fire and blood.

There is another force, as silently at work, that constantly saps the vitality of the spiritual life, and fosters a spirit of worldliness, carelessness, and finally of absolute indifference to the religion of Jesus Christ; and her force which, while it will hardly resort to the use of arms, will yet undermine the foundation of true religion by an influence more subtle than that of the Jesuit. This is the lodge. In this we find the reason our churches, at the present time, are attended and sustained mostly by women. The men are going to heaven by the Grand Lodge route and have little use for a religion that requires a crucifixion of the old nature. Between two such anti-Christian forces, how can the position of the Christian world in these last days be anything but perilous?—A. M. Streeter, in Messiah's Herald.

POINTED THOUGHTS.

President Porter, of Yale, gave the following closely packed advice to his students: Inscribe on your banner, "Luck is a fool, Pluck is a hero." Keep at your helm and steer your own ship, and remember that the great art of commanding is to take a fair share of the work. Don't practice too much humanity. Think well of yourself. Strike out. Assume your own position. Put potatoes in your cart, over a rough road, and the small ones will go to the bottom. Rise above the envious and jealous. Fire above the mark you intend to hit. Energy, invincible determination, with a right motive, are the levers which move the world. Don't drink. Don't chew. Don't smoke. Don't swear. Don't deceive. Don't read novels. Don't marry until you can support a wife. Be in earnest. Be self-reliant. Be generous. Be civil. Read the papers. Advertise your business. Make money and do good with it. Love your God and fellow-men. Love truth and virtue. Love your country and obey its laws.

While you wait, doubting and hesitating, for the opportunity to do the best thing possible, your life is passing away. Give yourself a grand surprise by putting your best impulse into action at once. Young Christian, don't be afraid to "show your colors." A cowardly Christian is a misnomer. Shrink from no declaration, from no duty that Christ desires of you. The timid, vacillating course is the hardest and most barren. The brave, outspoken, faithful life is the happiest and most effective. There are many things you do not understand as yet. But let no doubts or uncertainties prevent you from acting on what you do know. There are some spiritual facts clear enough, plenty of Christian duties plain enough to you; act immediately on these. Do faithfully all you know you ought to do, and the larger knowledge will follow in due time. Use earnestly every means that will enlarge and strengthen your Christian life. Study the Bible. Pray without ceasing. Do not neglect the prayer-meeting or the Sabbath-school.—Selected.

A KIND DEED.

A little spring had lost its way along the grass and fern; A passing stranger scooped a well, where weary man might turn; He walled it in and hung with care a ladle at the brink; He thought not of the deed he did, but judged that toil might drink. He passed again, and lo! the well, by summers never dried, Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues, and saved a life beside.

TEMPERANCE.

THE BEST HOTEL IN TOWN.

"Esq. Princeton from Ohio is stopping at the Blank House," said Mr. Nims, glancing up from the list of hotel arrivals in the morning paper he had purchased on the train.

"Shall we have time to call upon him?" asked Mrs. Nims. "It will be pleasant to meet him again."

"Lucky we happened in town to-day; we will try it." And an hour later they were shown to his apartments in the best hotel in the city.

"You have comfortable and luxurious quarters here, and they are very easy of access," said Mr. Nims after the first surprised and cordial greetings.

An earnest, serious look passed over Esq. Princeton's face as he replied:

"Yes, I am very well cared for here, but I have made up mind to quit the abominable rum hole before the sun goes down."

"Rum hole?" repeated the gentleman and lady in surprise. "What can you mean by calling the Blank House a rum hole? and why do you propose to depart from it so hastily?"

"I will tell you," replied the gentleman. "Last evening as I was turning the key in the lock of my door, on the way to supper, the door of the room directly opposite mine, in the long corridor, swung back, disclosing two young men, apparently fighting. One of them looked like a maniac, and was shrieking wildly, and I was soon convinced that his companion was endeavoring to get him under control and to keep him in his room. As I ran to his assistance he said:

"I beg of you sir to let no one in the house know of my poor chum's condition. We have been playing billiards; he has been drinking hard here for a couple of days and nights, and has brought himself, as you see, to a terrible state."

"We soon had the young fellow quiet on the bed, and as I looked in his face what was my astonishment, on a closer observation, to discover that he was the son of my old friend and neighbor at home, Judge A—. You know the family, Mrs. Nims."

"Certainly; I have heard that his oldest son was in the sophomore class of B— College."

"This was the boy, and this meeting was a sad contrast to the friendly call I had planned to make upon him at his father's request. I have some knowledge of medicine, and hastily preparing a quieting draught I administered it with some difficulty, and he was soon quietly sleeping off the effects of his long debauch."

"I did not need to be told by his chum that he had come from his home and entered this world-famous college a pure-minded, frank-hearted temperance boy—all that I knew from personal acquaintance."

"Now I heard the sad story of his being gradually enticed to visit this hotel in company with some of his classmates, at first to play billiards, then to play billiards and to drink, and then, when the brain was fired and consequently the reason and conscience dethroned, to rush to vile resorts."

"As I sat in that luxurious room gazing into the pale, haggard face of that darling son of my friend, as he lay upon the bed moaning and tossing his arms at intervals in his feverish sleep, and heard from the lips of his faithful and conscientious friend and chum, who had never been his companion in evil, the dreadful account of how scores of young men, students, and others, were being ruined body and soul while on their nightly visits to this as well as to other so-called first-class hotels in the city, I resolutely said to myself, 'A— for me, I will no longer countenance this dreadful sin in any direction whatever. I will never again contribute my money or influence to the support of a hotel where, from the very 'respectable' bar below, to the rooms in the topmost story, the glasses jingle in which the viper lies coiled, ready to fasten its fangs into the very soul of rich and poor, high and low, young and old alike.'

"I am more and more led to see," said Mr. Nims, "that there is a manifest and very urgent duty in regard to this matter to be followed by the Christian public. The inconsistency of our so-called best people in regard to this matter is astonishing."

"It is so, indeed," replied the gentleman from Ohio. "Ministers as well as the laity, from the most eminent to the lowliest, should not only rigidly refrain from upholding the damnable sin of rum-selling personally, but strive by every means in their power to so mould the sentiments and practice of the traveling religious public in this direction that it would no sooner think of helping support a rum establishment under whatever guise than a counterfeiting den or a faro bank."

"It is strange to me," said Mrs. Nims, "why many people when they travel insist on having things so much more luxurious than they are accustomed to at home. The modest temperance hotel, the clean lodging-house, the respectable restaurant will not satisfy them. They seem to forget that a petty annoyance is of little account by the side of principle, consistency and genuine love for the Master and his teaching."

"That is so," said Esq. Princeton; "we have all need to pray with the Psalmist: 'Lead me into the land of uprightness.'—Annie A. Preston, in the (Boston) Christian Safeguard."

THE CRIME AGAINST AFRICA.

It is exasperating that a few men, for the sake of the profit on liquor, should be able to bring national disgrace on countries like England and America, and curse and blight the prospects of the uncivilized races of Africa for whose enlightenment the Christian world is now making such costly sacrifice. The men who sent out rum to the Congo and to the east and south are far greater criminals than the Arabs who burn the villages and steal the helpless inhabitants of those regions. Dealers in rum should be ostracised, boycotted, made to feel that a sentence of social outlawry has been pronounced against them. Just here is where the fashionable people who patronized the London meeting can do something. If they will persistently and openly refuse to associate with the rich manufacturers and wholesale dealers it will be easier to turn the tide of public opinion so that every man who has anything to do with giving liquor to uncivilized races will carry the mark of Cain and be considered a murderer. When this is done we will have seen the beginning of the end of this nefarious business.—Selected.

They don't say anything about voting or doing any vigorous work against it. Resolutions are cheap. Had the North done nothing but "resolve," in 1861, slavery would still exist.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Personal accountability.—vs. 12, 13. We may not judge another in respect to things indifferent. There are many non-essentials in Christian doctrine and conduct on which there is and must be a wide difference of opinion. "Let every man," says the apostle, "be fully persuaded in his own mind," but not to seek to bring others into bondage to his own opinions. The doctrine of personal responsibility is one strongly insisted on all through the Scriptures; but from the time when Adam tried to put the guilt of his sin on Eve, and she, in her turn, on the serpent, every sinner has tried to excuse himself by laying the blame of his transgressions on others. Yet, like all great truths, it has more than one side to it. If we put a stumbling-block in our brother's way we make ourselves responsible for his fall, and must answer for it before God.

2. True charity.—vs. 14, 15. The great point at issue was whether the Gentile converts should eat food that by the Jewish law was ceremonially unclean, especially food that had been offered to idols, as was the case with a large part of the meat exposed for sale in the markets. Paul lays down the general principle that the sin lies entirely in the way a person regards it. If he esteems it unclean, to him it is unclean. Yet, as he tell us in another place (1 Cor. 8: 4), an idol is a nonentity. It cannot make anything clean or unclean, any more than it can walk or talk. But some of weak understanding could not receive this truth, and would be either irritated, and lose their faith in the Christian character of their brethren who they saw do this, or be emboldened themselves to do what their consciences did not approve. This difficult question could only be solved by the golden rule of charity. If the measure of Christ's love to that soul should also be the measure of theirs (1 John 3: 16), how could they risk that soul's destruction in order to gratify their appetites?

3. The true principle of total abstinence.—vs. 16-21. This problem, which so troubled the Gentile converts, became a dead issue centuries ago; but there are questions to-day of the same nature which must be solved on the same general principles, the most prominent of which is the temperance question. Here are several reasons laid down why Christians should be total abstainers. (1) "That your good be not evil-spoken of." Only God can read our hearts; the world must judge of us by our actions, and it will have its own opinion of the minister, the deacon, or the church member who indulges, however moderately, in a social glass. (2) "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink," and they deny the power of Christianity who, on the one hand, make it to consist in ascetic self-denial of all physical enjoyment; and, on the other, do not bring their bodily appetites into subjection to its laws. But it is "righteousness"—right living towards God and towards man; and, as a consequence, "peace and joy in the Holy Ghost". The grand rule for righteous living is, that "whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we do all to the glory of God"; and it is not to his glory if by any act of ours, however trivial or innocent in itself, we put a soul in peril for whom Christ died. (3) There may be some to ridicule the total abstainer, or those who conscientiously refuse, for fear of harming others, to touch a card, or go to the theater to witness even the most moral play; but they who thus bring every part of their daily life into subjection to the law of Christ are accepted of God and honored by men. We ourselves may do with impunity many things which might wreck a weaker soul that followed our example. Christian women should consider it their duty to dress plainly, lest some weaker sister fall into temptation through their example. The rich and well-to-do have a duty in this respect towards the poor, which they too seldom think of. (4) If we are to "follow after the things which make for peace," we must yield in non-essentials, and be willing, while claiming for ourselves the largest liberty, not to use that liberty if it is to bring discord and division among our brethren. (5) "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything"—thus taking in every possible ground of dispute that might arise in the future—"whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." Here we have the whole matter summed up in a few words. If Paul had foreseen the temperance question of to-day, with all its complications, he could not have laid down a rule more perfect and far-reaching. It follows, on general principles, that we violate this law of Christian love if in any way we cause our brother to stumble. If we do not directly put a stumbling-block in his way, by drinking ourselves, or tempting him to drink, are we not just as guilty if we vote to license men whose business it is to snare his feet, and make him fall into their net?

3. The principle stated.—vs. 22, 23. "Have we faith?"—confidence that it is right for us to do certain things? let us keep it as a matter of private opinion, rather than offend others, remembering that he is happy who never does that which his conscience disallows, even in small or disputed points.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—During the last few weeks the American Education Society (formerly called the American College and Educational Society) and the New West Education Commission have completed an arrangement which will enable the work of both societies, after the first of September, to be carried on under the auspices and supervision of the New West Education Commission. When this above-mentioned arrangement goes into effect it is fully believed that all the advantages of a consolidation will be realized by both societies. Although it seems to be necessary for the proper protection of various property interests that the corporate existence of both societies be continued for the present, still it is hoped that a legal union may be perfected at an early day. In the meantime each of the societies will take steps to add the word "Congregational" to its corporate name, as many have thought for some time that such a change should be made.—Advance.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Of the Chinese converts on the Pacific coast gathered by the Methodist Mission, 90 per cent remain faithful, notwithstanding the persecution they receive. They average five dollars per member annually for missions, besides contributing to other benevolent objects.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Presbyterian Journal notes that the Presbyterian Synod of Pennsylvania includes within it 180,902 members, and that the entire Southern Presbyterian church contains but 7,644 more members. The total contributions of the Southern church were $1,943,580, while those of the Synod of Pennsylvania were $3,292,849. The additions to the Southern church on profession last year were 12,187; those of the Synod were 11,398.

—There has been for some time threatening a secession from the Free Church of Scotland in the Highlands. The reason of it is alleged corruption in the Free church. A new presbytery, consisting of three "members," probably ministers, and two licentiates, has at last been organized.

—The United Presbyterian, referring to the approaching "World's Fair Congress of All Religions," remarks: "Christianity is in antagonism to all other religions, and pronounces them false; the Gospel does not sit in council with falsehood. Such a congress can be held only by first lowering the position of the Gospel of love as God's message to men."

—Rev. H. S. Kellogg, D.D., last year went to India to engage in the work of publishing a new translation of the Bible in Hindoo. The North India Bible Society has invited Rev. T. S. Wynkoop, D.D., pastor of the Western Presbyterian church, Washington City, for fifteen years, to come and direct Bible work in that section. He has consented to undertake the work.

—The Herald and Presbyter says that on the roll of the Northern Presbyterian church there are three hundred and fifty-eight churches which have a membership of ten or less. "Of these, eight churches report only one member each; twenty-four report two members; eighteen have three each; twenty-four have four each; fifty-two have five each; forty-five have six each; thirty-five have seven each; fifty-three have eight each; thirty-six have nine each, and sixty-three have ten each. A large number enrolled between ten and twenty each."

PROTESTANTS IN GERMANY.

—The Paris Temps states that the German national census of 1891 reveals the fact that in Alsace-Lorraine the number of Protestants is increasing. From 1866 to 1891 the Protestants have increased from 245,000 to 337,476, while the Romanists have decreased in numbers from 1,304,000 to 1,227,189. This change might partly be attributed to the emigration and immigration if it were not for the fact that a similar increase in the number of Protestants, with a corresponding decrease in the number of Romanists, is general throughout the whole German empire. Thus in 1867 the proportion was 621 Protestants to 363 Romanists in each 1,000 inhabitants; in 1891 the number of Protestants had risen to 628, while the number of Romanists had fallen to 357.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Complete accounts, just made up, of the results of the week of self-denial observed by the Salvation Army all over the world last October, show that it added over $250,000 to the Army treasury. The largest single amount is credited to the British Isles, with $113,635. The United States comes next, with $36,455. South African Salvationists denied themselves $8,000 worth during that one week.

LITERATURE.

One can sit down to read Scribner's Magazine for September with a sense of rest and pleasure, and find in its variety and freshness a genial companion. Worthington's Magazine for September has a paper of more than ordinary interest, and finely illustrated.—At the Pribolov Islands, the home of the seal in Behring Sea. Mrs. Livermore's Fifty Years Ago in "Old Virginia" is continued with its usual spirit. Hours with Percival, by Richard Storrs Willis, is a kind memorial of one of the early and talented poets of this country—a man possessing genius and genuine manhood. Other papers are: A Second Courtship, a capital story, by Margaret L. Knapp; Do Women Dress for Men? by Junius Henry Browne; A Country Pastorate, by Helen A. Morton; A Modern Moses, a story; An Old-fashioned Love Match (the story of Simon and Anne Bradstreet), by Helen Campbell; Hiel's Warning; with poems and the customary well-filled social departments, all of which possess attraction. Hartford, Conn.: A. D. Worthington & Co. 25 cents.

The Social Economist for September opens with an elaborate criticism of President Cleveland's recent Message to Congress on Finance, by Mr. Geo. Gunton, the editor. Van Buren Denslow revives and reviews The Second Bank of the United States, in connection with the present financial condition of the country. Alice L. Woodbridge, Sec'y of the Working Woman's Society, has an instructive article on Our Working Women. Our Labor Outlook is discussed by Edward Thimme, and The Ethics of Journalism by Channing M. Huntington. Some bright and helpful thoughts for American youth will be found in Charles Barnard's What is He Going to Do About It? And the Editorial Crucible will well repay perusal. New York: Published by the School of Social Economics, 34 Union Square, East. 25 cents.

Favorite St. Nicholas has absorbed another popular youth's magazine of many years' growth, well known as Wide Awake. The change will not be injurious, for St. Nicholas will gain more patrons, and lose none of its own brilliancy. The September number contains much, as usual, to bring joy to Young America, in stories, sketches and pictures. The famous Mexican Burros come in for a chatty description, with numerous illustrations, by Chas. G. Morton. Other interesting papers are: A Night Encounter with a Panther, an exciting adventure; A Boy's Visit to Chief Joseph, of the Nez Perce Indians; Tom Trawley's Start in Life; Queer Things About Frogs; The Stars and Stripes; D. and J., and several others of less importance but quite attractive. New York: The Century Co. 25 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TO GROW OLD SLOWLY.

Eat moderately of healthful, nutritious food. Dress warmly, but lightly. Work moderately, and take gentle exercise and abundant sleep. Avoid carking care and anxiety. Do not strain, or lift, or run, or exercise violently. Do not try to show how smart an old man can be. Wash all over with hot water, quickly, twice a week. Treat young people so they will be glad to have you around. Make friends with all the children. Do not scowl, scold or fret. Give liberally, before you get so stingy that you cannot. Avoid stimulants and condiments, salt, pepper and spices. Do not carry big loads, do big days' work, or eat big dinners. You may buy new teeth to grind food, but you cannot buy a new stomach to digest it. Do not smoke, chew or snuff tobacco, and so make yourself offensive, and subject to heart disease and sudden death. Leave alone tea and coffee,—drink milk and warm water, and so have a clear complexion, steady nerves, and be free from aches and quakes and shakes. Make yourself so pleasant, useful and agreeable that no one will think you a burden. Beware of cold rooms and cold weather; most old people die in the winter; do not get chilled. Avoid stimulants, excitement, passion, anger, and worldliness. Do not try to build,—there is little comfort in being buried from a new house. Do not undertake great enterprises; give the boys a chance. Do not hang on to every office and position until you drop dead in your tracks. Learn to retire in good order, so people will be sorry rather than glad that you are gone. Use your money and do good with it. Do not give it all to your children, so that they will be in a hurry to get rid of you because they have got it; and do not keep it so close that they will want you to die so they can get it. Do not sit in the chimney corner. Go to meeting, sing, pray, serve God, bring forth fruit in old age, and let your hoary head be "a crown of glory, being found in the way of righteousness."—Christian.

The loss by fire at South Chicago is variously estimated at from $300,000 to $500,000. Among the buildings burned

Mr. Moody and his assistants are at present, he says, "holding services in two theaters, eight churches, five tents, about a dozen mission halls, besides the work done in training 275 women in our Bible Institute, who are daily engaged in personal work, house-to-house visitation and work in the saloons, hospitals, jail and other places. The results have far exceeded my expectations. For example, we thought that August would be our poorest month, but we have had our largest audiences and most encouraging results. There were over 50,000 people at our services last Sunday, beside several thousand turned away that could not get in at some places. I have never seen such eagerness to hear the Gospel."

The shorter the silage is cut the better. Half an inch or less gives the best results.

If the clover pasture has dried up feed the shoats fresh cut corn and keep pushing them right along.

Provide shade, water and succulent food for the milch cows this dry spell, if you would have them do well.

All milk utensils are better cleaned if rinsed with cold or lukewarm water before scalding water or steam is applied to them.

Do not wait too long before cutting up the corn if you wish the fodder to be "the best". The same warning is to be heeded if you are going to silo it.

It is often worth while to compare the prices that we receive for our dairy produce with that of some other noted dairy district, and see if we are much worse off than "our neighbors".

Because feed is short do not scrimp the stock. If there is any truth in the saying, "Well summered is half wintered," now is a good time to test it. Feed well now, and if fall feed is good it will not take it all to put the stock in shape for going into winter.

If you would make good butter or sell fine cream this hot weather the cream must be cooled down to as near 50° as possible as soon as separated, and kept there till churned or shipped. It will not do to let it get up to 70° in the heat of the day and cool it down again with ice water at night. Once it gets above 50° its fine flavor is gone, not to return, no matter what care it has afterward.

This is the time of the year that cows have chapped and sore teats. Vaseline is recommended. Grease them every milking till they are well. Mutton tallow and kerosene, two parts to one, for winter use, and three to one for summer use, is as good, especially, if a few drops of carbolic acid be added to each half pound. To prepare the "ointment" melt the tallow and stir in the oil while it is cooling.

Broilers are young chickens that weigh about two pounds, and may be put on market at any time; whereas a "spring chicken" may weigh four or five pounds and is a "spring" throughout the season in which it is hatched. Broilers are on the market any time after the holidays, and for this market are dressed frozen now and held in that condition till wanted after holidays and in early spring, before spring chickens are on the market.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages. 75cts. The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have hidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do." Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—truth stranger, oftentimes, than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dnn 'forgive him.' Old massar once giv me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' I row me out for dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' said 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer!'"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among the Freedmen is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ill., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling, very simply and graphically, the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far exceeding any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established."

Polo, (Ills.) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townsman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the 'sixties' among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices."

The New Bread

As endorsed and recommended by the New-York Health Authorities.

Royal Unfermented Bread is peptic, palatable, most healthful, and may be eaten warm and fresh without discomfort even by those of delicate digestion, which is not true of bread made in any other way.

To make One Loaf of Royal Unfermented Bread:

1 quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder,* cold boiled potato about the size of large hen's egg, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound-cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less, according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½ by 8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes' baking, to prevent crust from becoming too soon on top. Bake immediately after mixing. Do not mix with milk.

* Perfect success can be had only with the Royal Baking Powder, because it is the only powder in which the ingredients are prepared so as to give that continuous action necessary to raise the larger bread loaf.

The best baking powder made is, as shown by analysis, the "Royal." Its leavening strength has been found superior to other baking powders, and, as far as I know, it is the only powder which will raise large bread perfectly.
